Relying on Illinois v. Rodriguez, 497 U.S. 177 (1990), the district court concluded that the police reasonably believed that the defendant’s mother had authority to give consent to enter the son’s bedroom in her house. The D.C. Circuit disagrees and reverses: the officers were laboring under a mistake of law, not a mistake of fact. There was no reason for the officers to believe that the mother had authority to consent to the search of her 29-year old son’s room which he occupied in the house. The officers cannot be said to have acted in good faith if, with faced with an ambiguous situation, they proceed without making further inquiry.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Curtilage)

The police, based on an unverified tip, brought a drug-sniffing dog up the sidewalk to the front door of the defendant’s house. The dog alerted and the police then obtained a search warrant. The Supreme Court held that bringing the dog up to the front door was a search because it amounted to a trespass onto the defendant’s property for the purpose of conducting a search. The Court held that the police entered the curtilage of the home and, unlike open fields, this is an area of the home that must remain free from unwarranted intrusions by the police that are conducted for the purpose of searching for evidence.

Even if the police have probable cause to search an automobile (or, as in this case, a motorcycle), the police may not enter the curtilage of a house to search the vehicle without a warrant. The automobile exception does not authorize the search of an automobile at all times and at all places, without a warrant. In this case, the police walked up the defendant’s driveway, invading the curtilage of the property, to search the motorcycle.

United States v. Alexander, --- F.3d --- (2d Cir. 2018)

The area near the back of the defendant’s house, where he barbecued and sat with friends was within the curtilage of the house and a warrantless entry into this area violated the Fourth Amendment.

United States v. Lundin, 817 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2016)

Acting on the basis of a BOLO, but without an arrest warrant, the police went to the defendant’s home at 4:00 a.m. and started knocking on the door. They heard a crashing noise near the rear of the home and ran around back and stopped the defendant who was in the backyard. They then looked inside the house and found two handguns. The Ninth Circuit ordered that the evidence must be suppressed: (1) the government could not rely on the exigent circumstances exception, because the police were not allowed to be where they were located when the exigent circumstances arose (i.e., they heard the crashing noise); (2) while the police may walk up to the front door of a house and engage in a “knock-and-talk,” that exception to the rule that bars police from entering the curtilage of the home does not apply at 4:00 a.m. when nobody would expect visitors to appear and knock on the door; (3) in addition, walking up to the front door to make a warrantless arrest is not a permissible purpose and Jardines provides that the police may not enter the curtilage of the home for investigative purposes; (4) the security sweep of the house was not justified, because the defendant was already handcuffed and any further security measures in the house were not necessary; (5) the inevitable discovery doctrine did not apply, because the officers were not in the process of obtaining a search warrant when the illegal searches occurred.

United States v. Whitaker, 820 F.3d 849 (7th Cir. 2016)
The Seventh Circuit extends Jardines to the hallway of an apartment building. The police brought a dog to the apartment complex and walked the dog down a hallway. When the dog alerted to a particular apartment, the police obtained a warrant for that room. The court held that the initial use of the dog was a “search” under Jardines that needed a warrant.

United States v. Hopkins, 824 F.3d 726 (8th Cir. 2016)

Same holding as in Burston, below. Same cop, same dog, same apartment complex.

United States v. Burston, 806 F.3d 1123 (8th Cir. 2015)

The police brought a dog to the defendant’s house and while the police remained outside the curtilage, allowed the dog to walk up to the house and sniff at the windows. This violated the rule announced in Jardines.

United States v. Perea-Rey, 680 F.3d 1179 (9th Cir. 2012)

A border patrol agent followed a man crossing the border up to the house of the defendant. The agents followed the man (unbeknownst to him) through the gated front entrance to the property and into the carport. This was an unlawful search: entering the carport amounted to entering the curtilage of the property. The court also held that the good faith of the officer in pursuing the illegal alien was not a basis to exempt this case from the exclusionary rule. The court noted that the good faith intention of the officer is not a proper factor to consider in deciding whether a Fourth Amendment search is illegal. Thus, the government’s suggestion that the officer was engaged in a proper “knock-and-talk” was not persuasive: the officer’s conduct was not consistent with the conduct of an officer who would simply go up to the front door of a house and knock in order to speak to the occupant.

United States v. Wells, 648 F.3d 671 (8th Cir. 2011)

The police entered the curtilage of the defendant’s property – and did so without a warrant – when they walked up the driveway and into the backyard from where they could look into the windows of an “outbuilding.”

Coffin v. Brandau, 642 F.3d 999 (11th Cir. 2011)

In this civil rights case, the en banc Eleventh Circuit held that the plaintiffs had an expectation of privacy in the attached garage that had one wall common to their house and a door that was capable of fully closing, though it was open when the police initially arrived.

United States v. Struckman, 603 F.3d 731 (9th Cir. 2010)

A neighbor called the police and reported that a white man wearing a black leather jacket had just climbed over a fence in her neighbor’s yard and she could not see who it was, but the neighbors were not home. The police went to the location, looked over the fence and promptly detained (with guns drawn) the defendant, who fit the description and was walking around in the backyard. He was searched and a gun was found. They then determined that he lived at that house; and also learned that he was a convicted felon who could not possess a firearm. The Ninth Circuit held (1) there was no probable cause to arrest the defendant – despite the report from the neighbor, the police should have asked the defendant his name and obtained information about where he lived before arresting him; (2) there were no exigent circumstances to support the arrest and search; (3) the backyard was part of the curtilage of the house.

United States v. Gentry, 839 F.2d 1065 (5th Cir. 1988)

A search warrant was directed at a rural address. The Court holds that this does not extend to vehicles which were detained at the perimeter of the property. An officer forcibly led the vehicle to a place within the territorial scope of the warrant. This did not authorize a search of the vehicle.

United States v. Jenkins, 124 F.3d 768 (6th Cir. 1997)

The area of the defendants’ backyard that was searched without a warrant was within the curtilage of the house and the seizure of evidence in this area violated the defendants’ Fourth Amendment rights. The backyard was in the same fenced in area as the house; and the area was clearly separated from the adjoining fields. Introducing the evidence seized from this area, however, was harmless error.

United States v. Depew, 8 F.3d 1424 (9th Cir. 1993)

A law enforcement agent, posing as a passerby with car trouble, entered the property of the defendant. The lower court held that the agent never intruded within the curtilage of the property. The appellate court disagreed, holding that the area fifty feet from the house (and six feet from the garage in which the marijuana was located) was within the curtilage of the house. This spot was within the curtilage, even though there was a fence between the agent and the defendant’s home.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(DOGS)

The defendant was stopped for a routine speeding violation. While the car was stopped and the trooper was preparing a warning ticket, another officer walked a drug dog around the car. The dog alerted; the car was searched based on probable cause; drugs were found. The Supreme Court held that this was permissible. A dog alert is not a “search” and in this case, the time it took to walk the dog around the car did not prolong the stop. Thus, there was no _Terry_ violation and no need for a warrant or an articulable suspicion to authorize the use of the dog.

The police, based on an unverified tip, brought a drug-sniffing dog up the sidewalk to the front door of the defendant’s house. The dog alerted and the police then obtained a search warrant. The Supreme Court held that bringing the dog up to the front door was a search because it amounted to a trespass onto the defendant’s property for the purpose of conducting a search. The Court held that the police entered the cartilage of the home and, unlike open fields, this is an area of the home that must remain free from unwarranted intrusions by the police that are conducted for the purpose of searching for evidence.

_Florida v. Harris_, 133 S. Ct. 1050 (2013)

In this unanimous decision of the Supreme Court, the Justices held that a dog alert can amount to probable cause. A _per se_ rule, which had been adopted by the Florida Supreme Court (and supposedly based on the Fourth Amendment) that required certain evidence to be introduced to support the legitimacy of the dog alert, was rejected by the Court. Whether a particular dog’s alert amounts to probable cause in any given case must be evaluated by the trial court on a case-by-case basis and is not subject to any rigid rules.

_United States v. Whitaker_, --- F.3d --- (7th Cir. 2016)

The Seventh Circuit extends _Jardines_ to the hallway of an apartment building. The police brought a dog to the apartment complex and walked the dog down a hallway. When the dog alerted to a particular apartment, the police obtained a warrant for that room. The court held that the initial use of the dog was a “search” under _Jardines_ that needed a warrant.

_United States v. Burston_, 806 F.3d 1123 (8th Cir. 2015)

The police brought a dog to the defendant’s house and while the police remained outside the curtilage, allowed the dog to walk up to the house and sniff at the windows. This violated the rule announced in _Jardines_.

_United States v. Funds in the Amount of $100,120.00_, 730 F.3d 711 (7th Cir. 2013)

In this forfeiture case, among other factors, the government relied on a drug dog alert to the currency to establish that the funds that were seized by agents was connected to drug dealing. The government relied on studies that it claimed showed that what drug dogs smelled on currency was only _recent_ contact with cocaine, because the dogs were detecting something that quickly evaporates. The defense introduced contrary evidence, and relied on the generally-known contamination theory, that is, that most currency has trace amounts of cocaine. The Seventh Circuit held that this dispute foreclosed granting summary judgment to the government, because the disputed facts regarding what drug dogs alert to required resolution by the trier of fact. The defense also mounted a successful attack on the dog’s certification, including demonstrating that during training sessions, the dog could not differentiate between pure cocaine and cutting agents that might be added to cocaine, and that these cutting agents might be present on money without cocaine. This case includes an excellent primer on methods of challenging drug dog alerts.

United States v. Thomas, 726 F.3d 1086 (9th Cir. 2013)

When the government relies on a drug dog alert in support of a search, the defendant has the right to request discovery about the dog’s training. The Ninth Circuit has held that the government is obligated to disclose the handler’s log, as well as training records and score sheets, certification records, and training standards and manuals pertaining to the dog. In this case, the records provided to the defense were so heavily redacted that the discovery was insufficient. A remand was required to determine what information was redacted.

United States v. Sharp, 689 F.3d 616 (6th Cir. 2012)

During a canine walk-around, the dog jumped into the car and alerted. The Sixth Circuit held that this “entry” into the car did not amount to a search that invalidated the subsequent search that was based on the alert.

United States v. Cedano-Arellano, 332 F.3d 568 (9th Cir. 2003)

The government is obligated to provide all records relating to a drug-detecting dog’s training and certification. The court held that the records should have been produced under both Rule 16(a)(1)(E) and Rule 16(a)(1)(F).

United States v. Clarkson, 551 F.3d 1196 (10th Cir. 2009)

In this Tenth Circuit decision, decided one week prior to the decision in Herring, the Tenth Circuit held that the use of an improperly trained drug-sniffing dog cannot serve to invoke the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Thus, if a dog is not properly trained, but a police officer relies in good faith on the dog’s alert – not knowing that the dog was not properly trained – the evidence will be subject to the exclusionary rule.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Execution of Search Warrant)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (PLAIN VIEW)

The police did not violate the plaintiff’s civil rights when they detained her for two to three hours during the execution of a search warrant at her house (they were looking for a dangerous gang member and evidence of a drive-by shooting).

Bringing third parties, including the media, along with the police when a search warrant is executed (not for the purpose of assisting the police in the execution of the warrant), violates the Fourth Amendment.

Officers who were executing a search warrant and who were put on notice of a risk that they had entered a home that was unconnected with the illegal activity described in the warrant had an immediate duty to retreat.

Though Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), permits the police to detain people who are at the scene that is the target of a search warrant, in this case the police followed individuals who left the scene prior to the search and detained them about a mile away, without any information that they were subject to a Terry stop. The Supreme Court held that this amounted to an unlawful detention that necessitated the suppression of any evidence derived from the stop of the individuals.

United States v. Griffith, 867 F.3d 1265 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

The police had reason to believe that the defendant had participated (perhaps as the getaway driver) in a homicide that occurred a year earlier. The search warrant affidavit reviewed all the facts amounting to probable cause and then sought permission to search the defendant’s current apartment (where he had moved after the homicide and a brief stint in jail). The warrant only sought authority to seize cell phones, because criminals communicate by phone. During the execution of the search warrant, the defendant threw a gun out the window. The D.C. Circuit held that (1) the warrant was deficient, because there was no probable cause that the defendant even had a cell phone or that it had any incriminating information contained in it; (2) there was no probable cause that a phone would be found in the apartment (as opposed to on his person if he were not present at the apartment when the warrant was executed); (3) the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply because the warrant was so lacking in probable cause to search or seize a cell phone; (4) the “abandonment” of the gun was the fruit of the execution of the defective search warrant and therefore the gun that was thrown out of the window was subject to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Welch, 811 F.3d 275 (8th Cir. 2016)
The FBI employed a device that allowed it to trace the places to which child pornography was sent from a particular site. The agents obtained a search warrant to use this device. The Eighth Circuit assumes for the sake of argument that the execution of this warrant should have resulted in furnishing a copy of the warrant on the defendant, whose IP address was discovered through the use of this device. But exclusion of evidence was not an appropriate remedy for this Rule 41(f)(1)(C) violation.

United States v. Sedaghty, 728 F.3d 885 (9th Cir. 2013)

The agents obtained a search warrant to search the defendant’s computer for evidence of tax fraud. They searched the computer for evidence of his role in furnishing support to a terrorist organization, as well. The government claimed that the search warrant application specifically stated that the defendant was suspected of furnishing financial support to a terrorist organization. Nevertheless, the warrant only authorized a search for tax fraud evidence.

United States v. Brodie, 742 F.3d 1058 (D.C. Cir. 2014)

The police were waiting outside a house that they planned to search pursuant to a search warrant. While awaiting their colleagues, the defendant was observed leaving the house (the police were not targeting that individual; the target was already in custody). The police approached the defendant and directed him to place his hands on the car (which he did). Shortly thereafter, he fled, discarding drugs and guns while on the run. The D.C. Circuit held that the defendant was detained; (2) there was no basis for the detention because, pursuant to Bailey v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 1031 (2013), the police may not detain an individual in connection with the execution of a search warrant unless the detention is at the time when, and at the place where, the search is being executed; (3) the detention was not attenuated from the defendant’s flight; and (4) the evidence that the police obtained was the fruit of the unlawful detention.

United States v. Lazar, 604 F.3d 230 (6th Cir. 2010)

The Sixth Circuit held that the warrant sufficiently directed the searching officers to seize certain patient records. The officers’ seizure of other records, however, was not permissible. See Groh v. Ramirez, 540 U.S. 551 (2004).

United States v. Payton, 573 F.3d 859 (9th Cir. 2009)

The police had a warrant that authorized the seizure of documents and records in connection with a drug investigation. The Ninth Circuit held that this did not justify searching a computer that was found in the location that was searched.

United States v. Garcia, 496 F.3d 495 (6th Cir. 2007)

When executing a search warrant for drugs, the police may not seize receipts and other financial documents that are later analyzed and determined to be evidence of unexplained wealth. The documents were not “readily apparent” to be evidence of a crime, and thus did not fall within the plain view exception. The court also rejected the government’s claim that it could legitimately seize a map with certain locations circled, and a notebook/journal, that was later determined to be records of drug deals.

United States v. Hector, 474 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2007)
The Ninth Circuit holds that the failure to leave a copy of the search warrant with the occupants of the location is not grounds to suppress the evidence. In part, the court relied on the decision in Hudson v. Michigan, which eliminated the exclusionary rule in cases in which the police violate the knock and announce rule.

United States v. Angelos, 433 F.3d 738 (10th Cir. 2006)

Though the FBI and the AUSA intended to get a search warrant that would have allowed the agents to search the defendant’s car and house (and there was, in fact, probable cause to search both the car and the house), they mistakenly submitted a search warrant that only identified a safe in the house and the car as the target of the search. Searching the entire house was therefore impermissible. Moreover, because the search warrant clearly only authorized the search of the car and the safe, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.

Even pre-indictment, the target of a search has a right to see the affidavit that was used to obtain a search warrant. Only if the government can present evidence of a compelling need to keep the affidavit under seal is it entitled to do so. The District Court relied on the Fourth Amendment’s reasonableness requirement. See also United States v. Sealed Search Warrants, 868 F.3d 385 (5th Cir. 2017).

United States v. Ritter, 416 F.3d 256 (3rd Cir. 2005)

The police obtained a search warrant for a house, but learned after entering that it was a multi-dwelling structure. The proper course of conduct was for the police to return to the magistrate and seek a more particularized warrant. In deciding whether to suppress any evidence, the question is what the police observed prior to determining that the house was a multi-dwelling structure. See Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79 (1987).

Doe v. Groody, 361 F.3d 232 (3rd Cir. 2003)

The warrant particularly described the location to be searched and the people who were to be searched at that location. The attached, and incorporated affidavit, included additional people that the affiant believed should be searched. The affidavit could not broaden the scope of the narrowly drawn search warrant, and searching other people at the location was improper. (This is a civil rights case that was brought by other people at the premises who claimed that searching them violated their fourth amendment rights).

United States v. Keszthelyi, 308 F.3d 557 (6th Cir. 2002)

After the police executed a search warrant at the defendant’s house – and found only a small amount of drugs – they went back the following day. More drugs were found. The Sixth Circuit holds that the agents should have obtained a new search warrant. The second search was not a continuation of the first search. The court concluded, however, that the evidence inevitably would have been discovered.

United States v. Carey, 172 F.3d 1268 (10th Cir. 1999)

If a search warrant authorizes the search of a computer for drug sales, the police may not search through the hard drive for evidence of child pornography.
Ayeni v. Mottola, 35 F.3d 680 (2d Cir. 1994)

A government agent invited a news crew to accompany him when he executed a search warrant. This was a violation of the defendant’s rights and a Bivens action could be brought against the agent. 18 U.S.C. §3105 provides that agents may use the services of a private person to help in the execution of a search warrant. But the news crew was not helping in the execution of the search warrant. The subsequent decision in Wilson v. Layne, discussed above affirmed that it is unconstitutional to bring in a news crew, but held that the officers were entitled to qualified immunity.

Buonocore v. Harris, 65 F.3d 347 (4th Cir. 1995)

The police executed a search warrant at the defendant’s house and invited an employee to come along to try to identify stolen property. The search warrant, however, only authorized a search for unregistered firearms. The conduct on the part of the police violated the defendant’s rights under the Fourth Amendment and his §1983 action could proceed. This case includes a lengthy analysis of 18 U.S.C. §3105, which sets out who may execute a warrant.

United States v. Nelson, 36 F.3d 758 (8th Cir. 1994)

The police learned that the defendant was arriving at an airport and would be carrying heroin. They obtained a search warrant to search the defendant’s body. Before the search was over, the police had brought the defendant to a hospital where a rectal examination and search was conducted, following which an endoscopic procedure was used to extract a packet of heroin from the defendant’s stomach. The execution of the search warrant exceeded that which was authorized. A search of a defendant’s body does not include body cavity searches. The good faith doctrine, moreover, did not apply.

United States v. Sherrill, 27 F.3d 344 (8th Cir. 1994)

The police had a search warrant for the defendant’s residence. The police observed the defendant leave the house, then stopped him, handcuffed him and asked him to “help them execute the search.” This detention was not justified by Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), because the stop occurred at a location remote from the location of the search. However, suppression of evidence was not necessary, because there was probable cause to arrest the defendant.

United States v. Robbins, 21 F.3d 297 (8th Cir. 1994)

The police obtained a search warrant to seize certain documents from the defendant’s business. While executing the search warrant, the police seized the defendant’s wallet, but did not look into it until months later, when they discovered incriminating documents. This was an unlawful search. The search warrant permitted a search of the wallet’s contents during the initial search, but not its seizure, since the wallet itself was not listed as an item in the warrant which could be seized.

United States v. Foster, 100 F.3d 846 (10th Cir. 1996)

The police obtained a search warrant to search for marijuana and four specifically described weapons at the defendant’s house. When the searching party left, the federal agents seized thirty-five items from the house, including marijuana and guns, and local agents seized dozens of items, including tools, televisions, stereos, clothes, lawnmowers, knives, coins, jewelry and cameras. The officers conceded during the suppression hearing that their policy was to take anything of value. The Tenth Circuit holds that this total disregard for the limitations of the warrant necessitated suppressing all evidence seized, including the drugs and guns.

United States v. Medlin, 842 F.2d 1194 (10th Cir. 1988)

During the course of a search conducted pursuant to a federal search warrant, a state deputy sheriff seized numerous stolen items which had no relationship whatsoever to the object of the search. The Court holds that everything which was seized would be suppressed. The reason for the exclusion of all evidence was the executing officers’ “flagrant disregard” for the terms of the warrant.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Exigent Circumstances)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (SECURITY SWEEP)

Kentucky v. King, 131 S. Ct. 1849 (2011)

The Supreme Court held that the exigent circumstances exception to the search warrant requirement applies even if the law enforcement agents “created” the exigency, unless the agents created the exigency by engaging or threatening to engage in conduct violating the Fourth Amendment. The fact that certain legal investigative techniques may create an exigent circumstance, even if it is foreseeable, does not foreclose reliance on that exception to the search warrant requirement. In King, the police smelled marijuana coming from an apartment. The police knocked on the door loudly, announcing that they were the police. They then heard noise indicating that evidence might be destroyed and the police entered. The Court held that there was nothing about the officers’ conduct that foreclosed reliance on the exigent circumstances exception to the search warrant requirement (though the case was remanded for further fact-finding by the trial court).

The police may enter a house pursuant to the exigent circumstances exception if there is an objectively reasonable belief that entry is necessary to render aid to an injured person, or to prevent imminent injury to someone inside. The subjective motivation of the officers (i.e., whether they are entering to render aid or to make an arrest), is not relevant: what matters are the objective facts that are known to the officers and whether those objective facts support the need to enter to render aid.

The police, under the exigent circumstances exception to the warrant requirement, entered the apartment where a shooting occurred. While there, the police decided to search the apartment for evidence of the possession of stolen property. During the course of this search, the police lifted up a stereo to examine the serial numbers. This constituted a search which was not justified by the initial warrantless search of the premises.

United States v. Lundin, 817 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2016)

Acting on the basis of a BOLO, but without an arrest warrant, the police went to the defendant’s home at 4:00 a.m. and started knocking on the door. They heard a crashing noise near the rear of the home and ran around back and stopped the defendant who was in the backyard. They then looked inside the house and found two handguns. The Ninth Circuit ordered that the evidence must be suppressed: (1) the government could not rely on the exigent circumstances exception, because the police were not allowed to be where they were located when the exigent circumstances arose (i.e., they heard the crashing noise); (2) while the police may walk up to the front door of a house and engage in a “knock-and-talk,” that exception to the rule that bars police from entering the curtilage of the home does not apply at 4:00 a.m. when nobody would expect visitors to appear and knock on the door; (3) in addition, walking up to the front door to make a warrantless arrest is not a permissible purpose and Jardines provides that... the police may not enter the curtilage of the home for investigative purposes; (4) the security sweep of the house was not justified, because the defendant was already handcuffed and any further security measures in the house were not necessary; (5) the inevitable discovery doctrine did not apply, because the officers were not in the process of obtaining a search warrant when the illegal searches occurred.

United States v. Camou, 773 F.3d 932 (9th Cir. 2014)

The defendant was stopped in his vehicle and charged with smuggling undocumented aliens. He was brought to the police station where he and one of his passengers were questioned. The passenger admitted that they regularly were engaged in smuggling activity. The police seized the defendant’s cell phone and listed it on a property report as seized evidence.

Approximately 90 minutes later, the police searched the contents of the phone. The Ninth Circuit held that this was not a proper search incident to arrest search, not a proper exigent circumstances search and not a proper “automobile exception” search. In addition, the court rejected the inevitable discovery doctrine and the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule as reasons not to apply the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Nora, 765 F.3d 1049 (9th Cir. 2014)

The police observed the defendant with a gun in his hand on the street and later on his porch. He retreated into his house. The police ordered him to come out of the house. This was improper: the police need a search warrant or an arrest warrant to enter a house or to order someone to exit the house. Possession of a loaded gun is, at most, a misdemeanor in California. The police had no basis for believing that the defendant posed a danger, or was committing a felony by possessing the gun.

United States v. Mallory, 765 F.3d 373 (3rd Cir. 2014)

The police chased a man with a gun into a house. This was a permissible hot pursuit / exigent circumstances entry into the house. However, after the defendant was handcuffed and in control of the officers and a security sweep of the house was accomplished, there was no need for any further warrantless searching of the house (including for the weapon) and the discovery of the gun during this further search should have been suppressed.

White v. Stanley, 745 F.3d 237 (7th Cir. 2014)

The smell of marijuana, without more, does not provide an exigent circumstance that justifies an immediate warrantless entry into a house. The court noted that this is particularly true in states where medical marijuana laws have been enacted.

United States v. Timmann, 741 F.3d 1170 (11th Cir. 2013)

A neighbor called the police and reported that there was a bullet hole in a wall adjacent to the caller’s apartment. (There were no reports of gunshots). The police went to the scene and knocked on the defendant’s door and there was no answer. The next day, the police returned to the scene and entered the apartment. The Eleventh Circuit held that there were no exigent circumstances justifying the entry into the apartment (indeed, the police waited until the next day to force entry into the apartment) and the evidence found during that warrantless entry (the police found guns) should have been suppressed.

United States v. Yengel, 711 F.3d 392 (4th Cir. 2013)

The police went to the defendant’s house in response to a domestic disturbance call. The wife had left by the time the police arrived and the defendant agreed to talk to the police on the front porch. During this conversation, the police learned that the defendant had a grenade in the house. Without pausing to obtain a warrant, the police went into the house, found various guns in one part of the house and pried open a closet door and found other explosives there. The Fourth Circuit held that exigent circumstances did not support this warrantless entry into the house.

United States v. Delgado, 701 F.3d 1161 (7th Cir. 2012)

The police responded to a report of gunshots. When they arrived at the scene, they saw one man (the defendant) running toward an apartment building. Next, the police were told by a bystander that his cousin had been shot and that he was hiding in a particular apartment. The police went to the apartment and the shooting victim and the defendant came to the door. The victim had a graze wound on his arm. The police were not given any information that there were any guns in the apartment or any perpetrator of the shooting. The police were not told that the shooting had occurred in the apartment. Neither the victim, nor the defendant was armed. After detaining the defendant, the police entered the apartment, later arguing that exigent circumstances justified the warrantless entry. The Seventh Circuit held that exigent circumstances did not authorize the warrantless entry and the evidence located in the apartment should have been suppressed.

United States v. Ramirez, 676 F.3d 755 (8th Cir. 2012)

The police believed that the occupants of a hotel room had heroin in their possession. The police knocked on the door; the occupants opened the door and then immediately shut it when they saw the police were there. The Eighth Circuit held that this did not authorize the police to enter under the exigent circumstances theory. Prior to knocking on the door, there was no evidence that the occupants were aware that the police were there or that any evidence was being destroyed. The occupants have the right to refuse to allow the police to enter (and this is what the Kentucky v. King Court held), and the mere act of shutting the door was not sufficient to establish that there were exigent circumstances (i.e., that the occupants were about to destroy evidence).

United States v. Simmons, 661 F.3d 151 (2d Cir. 2011)

The defendant’s roommate called the police and said that the defendant had a gun and he requested that the police come to the apartment to help him retrieve his property from inside the apartment. The police went to the apartment and asked the defendant about the presence of a gun, and the defendant told them it was in his room. The police went into the room and retrieved the gun, leading to the defendant’s prosecution for possession of a firearm by a convicted felon. The Second Circuit held that the un-Mirandized questioning was proper pursuant to Quarles, but the entry into the bedroom was not supported by exigent circumstances or any other exception to the warrant requirement which is especially important in the context of the search of a home. The evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Hill, 649 F.3d 258 (4th Cir. 2011)

The information known to the police was not sufficient to support a reasonable belief that the target of an arrest warrant was present in the residence that they entered. There were also no exigent circumstances to justify the entry into the residence, despite apparent damage to the door frame that the police observed when they arrived.

United States v. Martinez, 643 F.3d 1292 (10th Cir. 2011)

A 911 operator received a “static” only call. There was nobody on the line, just static. An officer was dispatched to the house. When the police arrived, there was on sign of any emergency, or even an occupant in the house. The police looked into the house from a sliding glass door and saw various boxes of electronic equipment and the house appeared somewhat disheveled. The police then entered, announced their presence and asked if anybody was home (nobody was in the house) and conducted a sweep search, during which they found drugs and child pornography. When they exited the home, the defendant drove up and he was questioned and made incriminating statements. The police then secured a search warrant. The Tenth Circuit affirmed the decision of the trial court suppressing all the evidence on the basis that there was no exigency that supported the warrantless entry into the house and the defendant’s statement was the fruit of that unlawful statement. Thus, the search warrant was the fruit of the poisonous tree.

United States v. Etchin, 614 F.3d 726 (7th Cir. 2010)

The police were provided information from a recently-arrested individual that the supplier of drugs was located at a certain residence. The police went to that residence, knocked on the door and were denied consent to enter. The police entered despite the occupant’s refusal to consent. The police then secured the property and awaited the arrival of a search warrant. The Seventh Circuit held that there were no exigent circumstances supporting this entry. However, pursuant to Segura v. United States, 468 U.S. 796 (1984), the seizure of the house was permissible because there was probable cause to believe there were drugs in the house.

United States v. Struckman, 603 F.3d 731 (9th Cir. 2010)

A neighbor called the police and reported that a white man wearing a black leather jacket had just climbed over a fence in her neighbor’s yard and she could not see who it was, but the neighbors were not home. The police went to the location, looked over the fence and promptly detained (with guns drawn) the defendant, who fit the description and was walking around in the backyard. He was searched and a gun was found. They then determined that he lived at that house; and also learned that he was a convicted felon who could not possess a firearm. The Ninth Circuit held (1) there was no probable cause to arrest the defendant — despite the report from the neighbor, the police should have asked the defendant his name and obtained information about where he lived before arresting him; (2) there were no exigent circumstances to support the arrest and search; (3) the backyard was part of the cartilage of the house.

United States v. Menchaca-Castruita, 587 F.3d 283 (5th Cir. 2009)
The defendant’s landlord entered the defendant’s house and saw marijuana in plain view on the floor. The landlord promptly called the police from the driveway. The defendant came out of the house, assaulted the landlord and then fled in his car before the police arrived. The police then arrived and entered the house without a warrant. The Fifth Circuit held that exigent circumstances did not justify entering the house without a warrant. The officers had no reason to believe that they were investigating a violent drug-trafficking ring; there was no evidence that the defendant had a firearm, or that there was a firearm or anybody else located in the house; or that there was any risk that the evidence was at risk of being destroyed. There was time to obtain a warrant and no reason not to do so.

United States v. Washington, 573 F.3d 279 (6th Cir. 2009)

The police had information that a trespasser was residing in an apartment. This did not provide a basis for bursting into the apartment. There were no exigent circumstances, or hot pursuit of the suspect.

United States v. Purcell, 526 F.3d 953 (6th Cir. 2008)

The police went to a hotel after receiving a tip that an escapee was there with his girlfriend. The police thought it was possible that methamphetamine was being made in the hotel room. The defendant was arrested outside the room. The girlfriend denied that there was any methamphetamine being manufactured in the room, but when the police quickly looked around, there were drug related items in the room. There was no reason to believe, however, that there was actual manufacturing in progress. Because of the lack of any such information, there was no basis to immediately start searching luggage that was in the room on the basis of exigent circumstances. Moreover, the girlfriend did not have the apparent authority to consent to a search of the luggage, which did not belong to her. “Apparent authority cannot exist if there is ambiguity as to the asserted authority and the searching officers do not take steps to resolve the ambiguity.”

United States v. Troop, 514 F.3d 405 (5th Cir. 2008)

Border patrol agents tracked illegal aliens into a house. They then entered the house without a warrant, claiming that they had exigent circumstances because there was the possibility that the aliens were ill or suffering from heat exhaustion. The Tenth Circuit held that exigent circumstances did not justify the warrant entry into the house.

United States v. Mowatt, 513 F.3d 395 (4th Cir 2008)

The police went to the defendant’s door and smelled marijuana and heard loud music. They knocked on the door and when the defendant cracked the door open, the demanded entry, including grabbing the defendant, who they believed was hiding something behind his back while he was standing at the door. There were no exigent circumstances that required the police to demand entry into the apartment. See Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10 (1948) (smell of drugs in house does not create exigency justifying warrantless entry). But see Kentucky v. King, noted above, which expressly abrogates this opinion.

United States v. Collins, 510 F.3d 697 (7th Cir. 2007)
The police (who did not have a search warrant) knocked on the defendant’s door and after 20 seconds, heard someone inside say, “The police are at the door.” This did not provide exigent circumstances to enter the house.

United States v. Ellis, 499 F.3d 686 (7th Cir. 2007)

The police went to the defendant’s home to conduct a “knock and talk.” The defendant answered the door and denied that anybody was in the house or that he lived there. Another officer at a side door heard moving around in the house and entered the house. The officer at the front door did not communicate information relating to what the defendant said, to the officer at the side door. The mere sound of “movement in the house” is not enough to amount to probable cause that evidence was being destroyed or hidden. There was no probable cause basis for the officer at the side door to justify his entry and thus the exigent circumstances exception to the requirement of obtaining a search warrant did not apply.

United States v. Gomez-Moreno, 479 F.3d 350 (5th Cir. 2007)

The police had reason to believe that a house was a “stash house” for illegal aliens. They went to the house to conduct a “knock and talk”. A large group of officers in the front and back, as well as a helicopter overhead arrived at the residence. When a commotion ensued, the police yelled, “Police, open the door.” When a man came out and ran back in, the police followed him in with their guns drawn. The Fifth Circuit concluded that the exigent circumstances exception to the search warrant requirement did not apply, because the exigency was entirely caused by the unnecessary conduct of the police. If there was probable cause (and the court did not decide whether there was, or not), a search warrant should have been obtained. The purpose of a “knock and talk” (or at least a legitimate knock and talk), is not to create a show of force that prompts a response, but rather to make an investigatory inquiry or to seek consent. The conduct of the police in this case caused the exigency and this is not a legitimate basis to conduct a warrantless search of a house. See also United States v. Vega, 221 F.3d 789 (5th Cir. 2000). Not clear if this decision would survive Kentucky v. King.

United States v. McClain, 444 F.3d 556 (6th Cir. 2005)

The police entered the defendant’s house, believing that a burglary might be in progress. There was very little information that supported this belief, other than the fact that the front door was slightly ajar and a report from a neighbor that there was light in the house and the house had been vacant for several weeks. This was an insufficient basis for an exigent circumstances entry. The court held, however, that a subsequently-obtained search warrant (on the basis of what was seen in the house during the exigent circumstances search) could be validated under the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. A lengthy dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc argues at length why the good faith exception should not apply in this situation. 444 F.3d 537.

United States v. Coles, 437 F.3d 361 (3rd Cir. 2006)

The Third Circuit decided that the exigent circumstances exception to the search warrant requirement may not be invoked if the police create the exigency (in this case by knocking on the hotel room door and announcing that they were the police) that triggers their need to enter the premises without a warrant. In this case, the police should have maintained surveillance of the hotel room and obtained a warrant.
United States v. Chambers, 395 F.3d 563 (6th Cir. 2005)

The police went to the defendant’s door and she immediately retreated and yelled to the occupants inside, “Police.” The government argued that this created exigent circumstances to support a warrantless entry. The Sixth Circuit disagreed. The woman simply exercised her constitutional right not to permit entry to officers who had no search warrant and this, alone, did not create an exigency supporting a warrantless search. Moreover, any exigency was created by the officer’s attempt to enter the residence without a search warrant. Evidence of the drug lab found in the house should have been suppressed. This case did not survive the decision in Kentucky v. King, 131 S. Ct. 1849 (2011).

United States v. Deemer, 354 F.3d 1130 (9th Cir. 2004)

There were no exigent circumstances justifying the entry into defendant’s hotel room. The police had received a 911 call, but could not determine from which room in the hotel the call had been made. When the police knocked on the door of the room in which the defendant was an occupant, a woman answered the door and said everything was ok and she had not called 911. The police said they wanted to look inside and walked in, discovering a methamphetamine laboratory.

United States v. Williams, 354 F.3d 497 (6th Cir. 2003)

The landlady of the defendant’s residence was concerned that there might be a water leak at the premises because of the high water bill. The landlady went to the premises and walked around, but found no leak – though she did find some suspicious plants. She called the DEA and they came back with her to the apartment and then claimed to go inside with her a second time to look again for a water leak. Of course, they found no leak, but did find a substantial quantity of marijuana. The Sixth Circuit held that there were no exigent circumstances (i.e., a water leak) that justified the law enforcement entry into the premises. Had there really been an emergency (or even a perceived emergency), the landlady would have called a plumber, not the DEA.

United States v. Davis, 290 F.3d 1239 (10th Cir. 2002)

The police received a domestic disturbance call and went to the defendant’s house. He answered the door, intoxicated, and said his wife was not home. The wife then appeared and said that they had been arguing. The defendant went back into the house, and neither the defendant, nor the wife consented to an entry by the police. Nevertheless, they entered and found stolen firearms and drugs. The Tenth Circuit holds that exigent circumstances did not support the warrantless entry. The officers knew that the defendant had no history of violence and there was no basis for believing that his retreat into the house was cause for concern from a safety point of view. The court rejected the government’s invitation to create a broader exigent circumstances rule for domestic violence cases.

United States v. Conner, 127 F.3d 663 (8th Cir. 1997)

The police received a tip that two burglars were at a motel. Six officers went to the motel and went to the room in front of which the burglars’ car was parked. The police knocked on the door and yelled, "Open up." When one of the defendants opened the door, the police observed (through the open door) various coins (they knew a coin collection had been stolen in the burglary). The officers pulled their weapons and arrested both defendants. They then obtained a search warrant on the basis of what they observed in the room. The trial court correctly granted a motion to suppress. Though the police did not enter the room in order to see the coins, when they ordered the occupants to open the door, and thereby gained the ability to see in the room, this amounted to a search. Demanding that the occupants open the door did not amount to a consent search and there were no exigent circumstances necessitating the immediate entry into the room. The search pursuant to the search warrant was not salvaged by Leon, because the information contained in the application (the observations that were gained through the illegal entry), negate the existence of good faith. Finally, the officers would not have inevitably discovered the evidence, because absent the illegal entry, no other investigatory effort was underway to obtain a search warrant for the motel room.

United States v. Anderson, 154 F.3d 1225 (10th Cir. 1998)

The government made a controlled delivery of what the defendant believed to be a child pornographic tape to the defendant. Unbeknownst to the defendant, the tape was blank. When he obtained the tape and went into his office, the police followed shortly thereafter, later justifying this warrantless entry on the basis that the defendant might destroy that tape, as well as the rest of his collection once he discovered the police were present. The court holds that the circumstances were not exigent – except to the extent that the police created the exigency by first knocking on the door to alert the defendant to their presence.

United States v. Beltran, 917 F.2d 641 (1st Cir. 1990)

Police were aware for three hours that a suspect was involved in a drug transaction at her apartment. There was no excuse for not obtaining a search warrant at that time even if they decided to delay executing it until later in the day. There were no exigent circumstances justifying the warrantless entry of the suspect’s apartment to arrest her.

United States v. Curzi, 867 F.2d 36 (1st Cir. 1989)

The officers saw the subject of an arrest warrant leave and re-enter a house. They waited two hours, then ordered all occupants of the house to exit. No effort was made to obtain a search warrant during this two-hour period. After the occupants exited, the defendant was arrested and the officers entered the house to conduct a protective sweep. No exigent circumstances justified the search of the house at that time in light of the agents’ failure to obtain a search warrant during the two hours that the house was kept under surveillance. The holding in this case was governed by the decision in Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204 (1981). That is, an arrest warrant for a visitor of a house is not a sufficient basis to search the house.

Singer v. Court of Common Pleas, Bucks County, PA, 879 F.2d 1203 (3rd Cir. 1989)

No exigent circumstances justified the warrantless entry into the defendant’s house where there was a report of domestic violence. Although domestic violence is certainly a serious matter, the victims of the alleged assault were no longer in the house when the officers executed the search. The defendant assaulted the police officer who entered the house. Because the officer had no right to be there, the defendant could not be convicted, under Pennsylvania law, of aggravated assault on a police officer.
United States v. Campbell, 945 F.2d 713 (4th Cir. 1991)

There was no basis for executing a warrantless search at the defendant’s residence. The officers delayed the search for more than an hour after determining that drugs were on the premises.

United States v. McCraw, 920 F.2d 224 (4th Cir. 1990)

The police went to the defendant’s hotel room after arresting a person who had just exited the room with cocaine. The officers knocked on the door; the defendant opened the door, but upon seeing the police, he immediately tried to close the door. The police forced their way in. The defendant was arrested and asked if the officers could search the room. Defendant consented. The entry into the room was unlawful and the ensuing purported consent was invalid. The entry was not in hot pursuit and was not justified by exigent circumstances. This case is distinguishable from United States v. Santana, 427 U.S. 38 (1976), because there, when the police arrived, the defendant was in the doorway and quickly retreated upon seeing the police.

United States v. Richard, 994 F.2d 244 (5th Cir. 1993)

The police were looking for a suspect in a motel. The officers knocked on the door and the occupants answered, “O.K.” but did not immediately open the door. The police heard whispering and drawers opening and closing. When the doorknob turned, the police forced their way in. This was not a proper exigent circumstances search. The police caused the exigency by going to the room without a warrant and announcing their presence. The police did not have evidence that contraband was in the room and the officers could have “covered” the entrance until a search warrant could be obtained. This case needs to be re-examined in light of Kentucky v. King.

United States v. Johnson, 22 F.3d 674 (6th Cir. 1994)

The police went to an apartment where a 14-year-old girl had been kidnapped and held for several days. When the police arrived, the girl answered the door, but she was unable to let the officers in (or escape) because of a locked iron gate. The police broke open the iron gate. The girl then “consented” to a search of the apartment – the defendant was not at home. This was not a valid consent search. The girl did not have the authority to consent to a search of the apartment. The fact that she was locked in established that she was not free to come and go (and hence invite others to do the same). There were also no exigent circumstances justifying the warrantless search. Because the defendant was not present, the apartment could have been secured and a search warrant obtained.

United States v. Ogbuh, 982 F.2d 1000 (6th Cir. 1993)

The defendants waited in a hotel room for two days for the seller of heroin. The seller was then intercepted by federal agents at the airport and immediately agreed to cooperate. The agents did not get a warrant, instead immediately entering the hotel room with the seller. Exigent circumstances did not justify this warrantless search. The one-hour delay it would have taken to get a warrant was not so long, given the purchasers’ willingness to wait for two days for the seller. Moreover, it should not have taken an hour to get a warrant. The government cannot erect barriers to getting a warrant expeditiously (requiring an AUSA’s approval before an agent goes to a magistrate), and then use this hurdle as an excuse for not getting a warrant at all.

United States v. Straughter, 950 F.2d 1223 (6th Cir. 1991)

Several members of a conspiracy had been arrested and others were known to be at large. The police did not have specific information that anybody was in a particular house, however.
The entry into this house, without a warrant, was not justified by the exigent circumstances exception. There must be an objectively reasonable belief that someone is in the apartment and that the destruction of evidence is imminent.

United States v. Radka, 904 F.2d 357 (6th Cir. 1990)

Agents must have affirmative proof of the likelihood of destruction of evidence in order to justify a warrantless entry. In this case the police had ascertained the relationship between drugs and this residence by virtue of having stopped a car eight miles away. It is unlikely that any occupants of the residence were aware of this arrest and thus likely to immediately destroy evidence.

United States v. Buchanan, 904 F.2d 349 (6th Cir. 1990)

The police lacked sufficient basis to enter the defendant’s home without a search warrant solely on their belief that the defendant’s wife would destroy evidence after the defendant was arrested by DEA agents. Because the police were aware that the defendant’s wife was at home asleep, there was no reason to believe that she would be aware that the defendant had been arrested and thus there was time to get a search warrant. Furthermore, once the police entered the house without a search warrant, the subsequent consent of the defendant (even assuming he was lawfully arrested) was tainted by this unlawful entry and the police could not rely on a consent search. Finally, the government cannot rely on the “inevitable discovery” exception because the police were not pursuing an alternate line of investigation at the time that the search was conducted. Police who believe they have probable cause to search may not enter the premises and excuse their failure to get a warrant on the basis that they would have gotten one anyway.

United States v. Templeman, 938 F.2d 122 (8th Cir. 1991)

Police officers sent an informant into a house with a package of cocaine which had a beeper inside. The police entered the house without a warrant. This was improper – there was no reason why the police could not have obtained a warrant before delivering the drugs.

United States v. Duchi, 906 F.2d 1278 (8th Cir. 1990)

The police set up a controlled delivery of a UPS package in which cocaine had been found. There was no reason that the police could not have obtained a search warrant prior to making the delivery, therefore, there were no exigent circumstances justifying the entry into the recipient’s home after making the delivery. The requirement of obtaining a warrant applied even though the defendant had earlier hidden drugs immediately after receiving it. There was no reason that the police could not have obtained a warrant and immediately gone in when the delivery was made.

United States v. Suarez, 902 F.2d 1466 (9th Cir. 1990)

The mere subjective belief of law enforcement agents that danger exists in the premises does not justify a warrantless search based on exigent circumstances. The agents must be capable of pointing to specific and articulable facts supporting their belief that other dangerous persons may currently be in the building or elsewhere on the premises in order to justify a warrantless entry. Mere speculation does not suffice.

United States v. George, 883 F.2d 1407 (9th Cir. 1989)

The defendant was suspected of being the perpetrator of a series of bank robberies. While the police were outside his house maintaining surveillance, they learned that he had just perpetrated another robbery. While waiting for his return, the police went to a pay phone to check on the status of the case. Upon their return to the house, they found that the defendant had returned home and his car was parked out front. Without consent and without either an arrest, or search warrant, the officers entered the house. This was unlawful. Because the defendant was unaware of the police officers’ presence, there were no exigent circumstances justifying this warrantless entry. Following the entry, the defendant was shot and brought to the hospital. His wife subsequently consented to a search of the house. Though the initial entry was unlawful, the wife’s subsequent consent was not tainted by the initial unlawful entry and the evidence was therefore admissible.

United States v. Holzman, 871 F.2d 1496 (9th Cir. 1989)

Based on their suspicion that accomplices were located in certain hotel rooms, the police entered and searched the rooms. There were no exigent circumstance justifying this warrantless entry. A remand was required to determine whether a subsequent search, undertaken pursuant to a search warrant, was tainted by this initial unlawful entry.

United States v. Warner, 843 F.2d 401 (9th Cir. 1988)

A police officer was advised by defendant’s landlord that chemicals were being stored in the defendant’s garage. Experts testified at the suppression hearing that these chemicals are quite volatile and could explode in the hot weather. However, the police officer had only limited knowledge of the explosive potential of the chemicals and thus, his exigent circumstances search of the garage was unlawful.

United States v. Howard, 828 F.2d 552 (9th Cir. 1987)

The delivery and storage of chemicals in a detached garage did not provide probable cause for believing that a drug laboratory was being maintained in the house or that there was a risk of fire or explosion in the house justifying the warrantless securing of the home.

United States v. Alvarez, 810 F.2d 879 (9th Cir. 1987)

Federal agents had between an hour and a half and two hours from the time they learned that the defendant was waiting for a shipment of cocaine in a hotel room until they arrested him after breaking into his room. The police had time to obtain a warrant and thus the exigent circumstances did not authorize this entry. Furthermore, they could have simply obtained an arrest warrant which would have justified the warrantless intrusion into the apartment.

United States v. Anderson, 981 F.2d 1560 (10th Cir. 1992)

The police could not state with certainty that anybody was left in a house in which there was believed to be marijuana when other conspirators were arrested. Fearful that others were still in the house who would be alerted, the police entered to preclude the destruction of evidence. This was improper. Even absent continuous surveillance, the police must do more than merely suspect that other conspirators remain in the house who may destroy evidence before they can rely on the exigent circumstances exception.

United States v. Aquino, 836 F.2d 1268 (10th Cir. 1988)

The Tenth Circuit holds that if there is time after learning of probable cause to search a house for the agents to obtain a warrant, they should do so. In this case, a rather “long time between the time probable cause arose and the time the entry was made” elapsed, but the Court held that the warrantless search was nevertheless justified.
United States v. Bonitz, 826 F.2d 954 (10th Cir. 1987)
The presence of 22 cans of black powder in the defendant’s bedroom did not constitute exigent circumstances justifying a two hour inventory-type search of the bedroom. During the course of the search, the police officers exhibited no particular concern for their own safety.

United States v. Tovar-Rico, 61 F.3d 1529 (11th Cir. 1995)
Though various law enforcement agents were arresting people around the apartment where the target was located, this, alone, did not create exigent circumstances justifying the entry into the apartment. There was no evidence that people in the apartment were aware of the activities going on outside.

United States v. Lynch, 934 F.2d 1226 (11th Cir. 1991)
The mere presence of contraband does not give rise to exigent circumstances to search a house without a warrant. The arrest of co-conspirators away from a residence does not justify entering the premises without a warrant if the occupants are unaware of their colleagues’ arrest. The error in admitting the evidence in this case, however, was harmless.

United States v. Tobin, 923 F.2d 1506 (11th Cir. 1991)
In an en banc decision, the Eleventh Circuit extensively reviews the law governing exigent circumstances searches. The court concludes that the search in this case was supported by exigent circumstances. The court notes, however, that circumstances are not normally considered exigent where the suspects are unaware of police surveillance and that a warrantless search is illegal when police possess probable cause but instead of obtaining a warrant create exigent circumstances.

United States v. Hernandez-Cano, 808 F.2d 779 (11th Cir. 1987)
The possibility that luggage may have contained explosives was not an exigent circumstance allowing a warrantless search. Although the police officer may have been justified in seizing the suitcase to prevent loss or destruction, a warrant should have been required to open it.

United States v. Timberlake, 896 F.2d 592 (D.C.Cir. 1990)
Though an officer claimed to have smelled PCP, and was aware that PCP was dangerous and explosive, the officer did not testify that he faced any dangerous circumstance which would have justified a warrantless and non-consensual entry into the defendant’s apartment.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Expectation of Privacy)

See also: Search and Seizure (Standing)

Klen v. City of Loveland, 661 F.3d 498 (10th Cir. 2011)
In this civil rights case, the Tenth Circuit held that the plaintiffs arguably had an expectation of privacy in a commercial building under construction.

Coffin v. Brandau, 642 F.3d 999 (11th Cir. 2011)
In this civil rights case, the en banc Eleventh Circuit held that the plaintiffs had an expectation of privacy in the attached garage that had one wall common to their house and a door that was capable of fully closing, though it was open when the police initially arrived.

United States v. Werra, 638 F.3d 326 (1st Cir. 2011)
The defendant occupied the third floor of a dwelling that housed numerous individuals. The dwelling was not a single family home (numerous individuals lived in the house); nor was it a multi-family apartment. It was more akin to a fraternity house. The First Circuit concluded that the defendant, who rented one floor (which had its own kitchenette, bedroom and bathroom, had an expectation of privacy in the house and standing to contest the warrantless entry into the house by the police.

United States v. Warshak, 631 F.3d 266 (6th Cir. 2010)
The Sixth Circuit concludes that the government is required to obtain a search warrant before it may obtain stored emails from a service provider’s computer. The Court also held that to the extent that the Stored Communications Act, 18 U.S.C. § 2703(a) allows the government to obtain such information with only a subpoena, it violates the Fourth Amendment. The court held that a person has a reasonable expectation of privacy in emails that are stored with, or sent or received through, a commercial Internet Service Provider. “The government may not compel a commercial ISP to turn over the contents of a subscriber’s emails without first obtaining a warrant based on probable cause.”

Johnson v. United States, 604 F.3d 1016 (7th Cir. 2010)
Trial counsel did not file a motion to suppress evidence seized from the car that the defendant was driving, because he believed that the defendant did not have an expectation of privacy, due to the fact that he did not own the car and had borrowed it. This was legally incorrect: the driver of a car that he has borrowed from another has a reasonable expectation of privacy in the vehicle. The attorney’s second justification for not filing the motion – he wanted to argue at trial that the drugs did not belong to his client, because the car was borrowed – was not a basis to fail to file the motion to suppress, because if he won the motion to suppress, there would be no trial, and if he lost the motion to suppress, he could still disavow ownership or knowledge of the drugs. Finally, the attorney’s fear that the defendant’s testimony at a suppression hearing could be used against him at trial would be foreclosed by Simmons v. United States, 390 U.S. 377 (1968).
United States v. Larios, 593 F.3d 82 (1st Cir. 2010)

Agents learned that the defendant and others were intending to conduct a drug deal in a hotel room. Without a warrant, the agents installed concealed an audio/video recording device in the room. At one point, the defendant and another conspirator were in the room without any undercover agent and their conversation was recorded. The First Circuit held that the defendant did not have an expectation of privacy in the statements he made while in the hotel room and therefore Title III did not apply. 18 U.S.C. § 2510(2) defines an “oral communiation” as “any communication uttered by a person exhibiting an expectation that such communication is not subject to interception under circumstances justifying such expectation.” This definition parallels the Fourth Amendment jurisprudence of expectation of privacy. Because the defendant did not have an expectation of privacy in the hotel room, which he occupied for a brief period of time for the sole purpose of dealing in drugs, he did not have an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in the conversations he had in the room during the drug deal. The court does cite several cases from other jurisdictions that held that a defendant did have an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in this situation, but distinguished those cases. See, e.g., United States v. Nerber, 222 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2000); United States v. Padilla, 520 F.2d 526 (1st Cir. 1975).

United States v. Monghur, 588 F.3d 975 (9th Cir. 2009)

The defendant was in jail and his outbound calls were being taped. The police, listening to the tape, learned that he had a gun hidden in the house where he stayed. They went to the house and secured the consent of the owner to search the house. The police went to a bedroom that belonged to an adult mail and was the room in which the defendant stayed when he slept at the house. The police searched a closed container in that room and located the gun. The lower court held that the owner of the premises did not have authority to consent to a search of that container. The government did not appeal that holding. Rather, the government argued that the defendant lacked an expectation of privacy in the container because in a phone call that he knew was being taped, he revealed the existence of the gun. The Ninth Circuit held that when a defendant unequivocally reveals the contents of a closed container to the police, the defendant does relinquish his expectation of privacy in the container, but in this case, the defendant’s statements on the telephone clearly showed that he was trying to disguise what he was talking about and used code. This demonstrated that he maintained an expectation of privacy in the container.

United States v. Washington, 573 F.3d 279 (6th Cir. 2009)

The fact that the police were aware that drugs were being distributed from an apartment did not mean that the defendant did not have an expectation of privacy in the apartment. The Fourth Amendment is not limited to innocent people.

United States v. Young, 573 F.3d 711 (9th Cir. 2009)

The defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the hotel room in which he was staying. Though the hotel staff may have had the intention of evicting him when security officer located a gun in his backpack in the room, because the defendant had not been evicted (or told that he had been evicted), he still had an expectation of privacy in the room.
United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc., 568 F.3d 684 (9th Cir. 2009)
A corporation has standing to contest a search of any of the corporate premises. Individual officials, however, only have standing with respect to particular offices and areas of the workplace, despite their ownership interest in the offices.

United States v. Zavala, 541 F.3d 562 (5th Cir. 2008)
A defendant has a reasonable expectation of privacy regarding the contents of a cell phone.

United States v. Olivares-Rangel, 458 F.3d 1104 (10th Cir. 2006)
If a defendant is illegally seized or arrested and as the result of that illegal arrest, the defendant makes a statement, the defendant’s identity is learned, and his illegal status is ascertained, the court may suppress all the evidence. The suppression of the defendant’s statement is governed by Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590 (1975). The suppression of the identity evidence (as well as the defendant’s “A-file”) is more complicated. The government argued that INS v. Lopez-Mendoza, 468 U.S. 1032 (1984), holds that the identity of the defendant may never be suppressed. The Tenth Circuit rejected this argument. The defendant, himself, may not be suppressed (i.e., he may be brought to court), but evidence derived from the illegal detention may be suppressed, including fingerprint evidence in certain circumstances (see Davis v. Mississippi, 394 U.S. 721 (1969); Hayes v. Florida, 470 U.S. 811 (1985)) and independently created and maintained government records. The fact that the defendant does not have an expectation of privacy in the government records is not relevant. The standing issue focuses on the defendant’s rights regarding the illegal arrest. The defendant need not have an expectation of privacy in the fruits that are the result of the unlawful arrest. In other words, the defendant is not required to prove an expectation of privacy in both the primary violation and the fruits. If his expectation of privacy was violated, the fruits of that violation may be suppressed, regardless of whether the fruits are discovered in a place for which the defendant does not have an expectation of privacy.

United States v. Mosley, 454 F.3d 249 (3rd Cir. 2006)
If the police stop a car without an articulable suspicion, the discovery of contraband in the car must be suppressed, even in a prosecution of a passenger. Though Rakas v. Illinois indicates that the passenger has no expectation of privacy in the car, the passenger’s motion to suppress is predicated on his unlawful detention and the fruit of that unlawful detention, rather than on the expectation of privacy in the automobile. The court’s opinion runs twenty pages and comprehensively reviews the law of “fruit”.

United States v. Waller, 426 F.3d 838 (6th Cir. 2005)
The defendant was evicted from one apartment where he was living with friends and asked another friend if he could store some of his belongings in his apartment. The friend agreed. Shortly thereafter, the police obtained an arrest warrant for the defendant and arrested him outside the friend’s apartment. He acknowledged coming out of that apartment. The police obtained the friend’s consent to search the apartment. The police searched throughout the apartment and found guns in what turned out to be the defendant’s suitcase. He was prosecuted for possession of the guns. The Sixth Circuit held that the evidence should have been suppressed. The defendant had standing to challenge the search of his suitcases and the apartment owner did not have actual, or apparent authority to search the suitcases. The officers did not reasonably believe that the apartment owner had authority to grant consent to search the defendant’s personal belongings that were stored there.

United States v. Neely, 345 F.3d 366 (5th Cir. 2003)

The defendant was a suspect in a bank robbery. After the robbery, he went to the hospital with a gunshot wound. The police went to the hospital and retrieved his clothing, which had been cut off of him and placed in a bag in a storage room. The Fifth Circuit held that he had a property interest in the clothes and the police could not “seize” the clothes, even if he did not have a privacy interest in the place that was searched.

United States v. Anderson, 154 F.3d 1225 (10th Cir. 1998)

The police entered the defendant’s business after they determined that he took some videotapes into the office (the tapes had been delivered by an undercover agent and purportedly contained child pornography). There was no warrant for the business. The Tenth Circuit holds that the defendant had an expectation of privacy in the business and in the empty office which the agents entered. “Given the great variety of work environments . . . the question whether an employee has a reasonable expectation of privacy in his work area must be addressed on a case-by-case basis.” O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709 (1987). An employee is more likely to have standing to challenge the seizure of personal items or the search of an area where personal items are stored than the search or seizure of work-related documents or materials. Moreover, an employee has a greater expectation of privacy in items in his immediate control, regardless of the business connection he may or may not have to the room where the items are found. In this case the pornographic tape was brought into the office by the defendant and he took steps to ensure his privacy while viewing the tape.

United States v. Infante-Ruiz, 13 F.3d 498 (1st Cir. 1994)

The defendant placed his briefcase in the trunk of a car being driven by a colleague. This did not deprive the defendant of a legitimate expectation of privacy in the briefcase, even though he allowed his colleague to drive with the briefcase when the defendant was not present, and even though he permitted his colleague to place objects in the briefcase.

United States v. Mancini, 8 F.3d 104 (1st Cir. 1993)

An ex-mayor placed his appointment calendars in a box which was then stored in the archives attic of the city building. He retained an expectation of privacy in this box. He clearly labeled the box and it was understood that these were his papers and were not accessible to the public or anyone else.

United States v. Cardona-Sandoval, 6 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 1993)

In a small boat, such as the 43-foot sportfishing boat involved in this case, all crewmembers have standing to contest a search anywhere in the boat.

United States v. Pena, 961 F.2d 333 (2d Cir. 1992)

Someone who borrows a car may have standing to contest a search of the vehicle – that is, may have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the vehicle. A remand, however, was required to determine whether the defendant’s expectation of privacy extended to the door panels, inside of which the cocaine was found.

United States v. Villarreal, 963 F.2d 770 (5th Cir. 1992)

Defendants were recipients of 55-gallon drums which were labeled “phosphoric acid” but which actually contained marijuana. Despite using a fake name on the shipping documents, the defendants retained an expectation of privacy in the contents of the drums.

Husband v. Bryan, 946 F.2d 27 (5th Cir. 1991)

The defendant had an expectation of privacy in the land beneath a pasture. The open field doctrine did not apply.

United States v. Sylvester, 848 F.2d 520 (5th Cir. 1988)

A defendant has an expectation of privacy in a “hunting box” even though its contents are generally known to the public. Though the police and the public may believe that there is ammunition, beer, and chewing tobacco in such boxes, the rule, nevertheless, is that the defendant had an expectation of privacy in any container and the contents cannot be seized unless they are in plain view or a search warrant is obtained to open the box.

United States v. Fultz, 146 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 1998)

The defendant was evicted from his apartment and packed his belonging in garbage bags and cardboard boxes. He brought his belongings to a woman’s house who allowed him to move in. The defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the boxes.

United States v. Gooch, 6 F.3d 673 (9th Cir. 1993)

A tent pitched in a public campground may not be searched without a search warrant. The occupant has a reasonable expectation of privacy in his tent.

United States v. Most, 876 F.2d 191 (D.C. Cir. 1989)

The defendant was followed to a grocery store by a police officer who believed he was acting suspiciously. The defendant carried a bag into the store and checked it with the clerk behind the counter. When the defendant left the store, he asked the clerk to continue watching it. After the defendant left, the police went into the store, retrieved the bag from the clerk, and based on touching the contents, opened the bag and discovered cocaine. The government argued that the bag was abandoned when the defendant left the store. The Court of Appeals disagrees. The defendant did not leave the object unattended in a public place; the law does not insist that a person assertively clutch an object in order to retain the protection of the Fourth Amendment. In light of the defendant’s insistence that the clerk continue to watch the bag after he left, it is clear the defendant did not abandon his expectation of privacy in the bag.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Franks v. Delaware)

United States v. Perkins, 850 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 2017)

The defendant was detained by Canadian authorities and the authorities found two images of children partially clothed on his computer. The images, however, according to the Canadian police, did not qualify as child pornography, because neither appeared to be focused on the breasts or (in one picture) the partially visible vagina. The Canadian authorities released the defendant, but sent the report (including the conclusion that the images did not constitute child pornography) to American agents. In the U.S., the agent prepared a search warrant that simply said that the Canadian authorities found child pornography on the defendant’s computer, which displayed naked young girls, including their breasts and in one case the vagina. The U.S. warrant did not include the other findings by the Canadian authorities, or provide a detailed description that was contained in the Canadian report. The images were not submitted to the U.S. Magistrate in connection with the search warrant application. The Ninth Circuit reversed the district court: This was a Franks violation that necessitated granting the motion to suppress. Even given the fact that the defendant two prior sex offense convictions involving children, the false information provided by the agent negated the existence of probable cause.

United States v. Ortega, 854 F.3d 818 (5th Cir. 2017)

The search warrant stated that the informant had previously provided to the affiant credible and reliable information. This was false. The affiant had been told by another officer that the informant had previously provided credible and reliable information, but the affiant had not received any information previously from the informant. The Fifth Circuit held that a remand was necessary to determine if the affiant made the false statement in the affidavit with the necessary intent under Franks. If so, the evidence would be suppressed.

United States v. Lull, 824 F.3d 109 (4th Cir. 2016)

The confidential informant was sent into the target’s house with money to make a controlled buy. When he came out, he gave some of the “change” to the police, as well as the drugs that were purchased, but $20 was unaccounted for. The police asked where the $20 was. The informant responded that he gave it to the target. He was strip-searched and $20 was found in his underpants. He was immediately “fired” as an informant. The police then prepared a search warrant application for the target’s house, relying on the information from the informant, as well as the circumstances of the controlled buy – but not the $20 theft. The Fourth Circuit held that this was at least a reckless omission of fact that tainted the search warrant application and the motion to suppress should have been granted. A dissenting judge wrote that the omission was improper, but wrote that all judges know that informants are unreliable to some extent or another and thus, the omission was not material. The dissenting judge wrote: “Magistrates and judges, state and federal, know from experience and common sense that drug abusers who cooperate with law enforcement officers are notoriously unreliable human beings, burdened as they typically are with barely manageable affronts to their inherent human dignity, including but not limited to addictions, debts incurred to service those addictions, and criminal convictions, all coupled with dissolved and dissolving family and personal relationships.
Investigator Welch should have disclosed the informant’s post-controlled-buy arrest and the reasons for it; as the majority opinion cogently explains, his excuse for not doing so cannot be credited. But even if he had made the disclosure, no judge with experience issuing warrants would have refused to issue the search warrant in this case.”

United States v. Tanguay, 787 F.3d 44 (1st Cir. 2015)

If a police officer is told by fellow officers that an informant is “quirky” and has had a few scrapes with the law, an affiant has a duty to investigate prior to relying on that informant in a search warrant affidavit that fails to reveal this information. An affiant, once red flags are seen, has a duty to investigate, particularly when the informant is the sole basis for obtaining a search warrant. Remand for further development of the record was necessary in this case.

United States v. Glover, 755 F.3d 811 (7th Cir. 2014)

The failure of the search warrant application to reveal any information about the informant rendered it devoid of probable cause. Though a close call, the exclusionary rule would not apply because of Leon. However, because of the absence of information about the informant’s credibility, a Franks hearing was necessary to determine whether the omission of this information would taint the search warrant. The informant, unbeknownst to the magistrate, had more than a dozen prior criminal convictions, including several while he was working as an informant. He was also a gang member and was receiving payments from the police department.

United States v. Gifford, 727 F.3d 92 (1st Cir. 2013)

The police obtained a search warrant for the defendant’s house to search for a marijuana grow operation. The basis for the search was (1) an informant’s tip; (2) information that the electricity usage at the defendant’s house exceeded the neighbor’s electricity usage; and (3) an officer visited the house and smelled burnt marijuana when the defendant opened the door. The First Circuit upheld the lower court’s decision granting the motion to suppress. Regarding the informant’s information, other than the statement that the informant was reliable, no information was provided in the warrant to support the claim that the informant was, in fact, reliable. There was also no information about the informant’s basis of knowledge. Regarding the electricity usage, the lower court found that the officer was reckless in failing to include in the warrant application information that the neighbor’s house was considerably smaller and the fact that the defendant had a horse boarding business on the premises; this was a Franks violation that altered the probable cause calculus. The smell of marijuana was not necessarily indicative of a grow operation.

United States v. McMurtrey, 704 F.3d 502 (9th Cir. 2013)

If a sufficient showing has been made by the defense to prompt a Franks v. Delaware hearing, the court should conduct the hearing, rather than allowing the government to summarily respond to the allegations with an abbreviated showing that the error in the affidavit was illusory. In this case, the government introduced the testimony of the affiant, who explained the apparent discrepancy and the court then concluded that the affidavit was sufficient, without allowing the defense an opportunity to explore the issue further. A remand for a full hearing was required.

United States v. Brown, 631 F.3d 638 (3rd Cir. 2011)
The district court granted a motion to suppress on grounds of a Franks v. Delaware violation and the Third Circuit affirmed. The search warrant application stated the several witnesses observed the defendant’s vehicle meet up with a stolen van that was used to flee from an armed robbery. No such evidence existed. The Third Circuit held that in reviewing the lower court’s decision whether a false statement in an application was made with “reckless disregard for the truth” the appellate court should employ the clear error standard.

United States v. Tate, 524 F.3d 449 (4th Cir. 2008)

The defendant made an adequate Franks showing to require an evidentiary hearing. The search warrant affidavit stated that the probable cause was derived from evidence obtained from a trash pull from garbage bags easily accessible in the back yard. The defendant’s Franks showing established that the garbage bags were only accessible if the police trespassed on the defendant’s property through a fence. Because this allegation, if proven, would have tainted the warrant, the lower court erred in failing to conduct an evidentiary hearing.

United States v. West, 520 F.3d 604 (6th Cir. 2008)

Two search warrants were issued in this case. The first was devoid of probable cause, because it contained bare bones assertions about the defendant (all of which were based on hearsay statements that the affiant learned from other officers and individuals). The warrant also failed to link any criminal activity on the part of the defendant with the location that the police wanted to search. The warrant did not even satisfy the Leon good faith standard. The second warrant set forth facts that an informant told the affiant that the defendant confessed to a murder and the body could be found in a well at a certain location; the warrant sought authorization to search the defendant’s van. The affiant, however, failed to reveal that the informant was serving time in federal custody and that the police went to the location where the body was supposedly located and found nothing – not even a well.

United States v. Rice, 478 F.3d 704 (6th Cir. 2007)

The Leon good faith exception to the exclusionary rule does not apply to Title III wiretap cases. Because suppression is a statutory remedy, the court-made exception to the court-created exclusionary rule in other search cases, does not apply. In this case, the warrant application contained misrepresentations and recklessly-made false statements which, when corrected, negated the necessity requirement for a wiretap. The court also upheld the trial court’s finding that various boilerplate representations about alternative methods were not useful in a wiretap application.

United States v. Harris, 464 F.3d 733 (7th Cir. 2006)

The defendant made a sufficient showing to entitle him to a Franks hearing. The district court erred in refusing to conduct a hearing on the basis of additional information that was supplied to the court by the government (i.e., information supplied in response to the defendant’s Motion to Suppress) about the circumstances leading up to the application of the search warrant.

United States v. Coreas, 419 F.3d 151 (2d Cir. 2005)

The Second Circuit reviews a “Candyman” search that involved searches of dozens of individuals around the country based on their “membership” in an Internet group that purportedly advertised the availability of child pornography. The FBI search warrant affidavit contained numerous erroneous statements about the method by which subscribers became members and whether they automatically received illicit images. The panel indicated that it would have reversed the trial court’s denial of the Motion to Suppress, but for a prior decision of another panel that found no Franks violation (or sufficient residual information to support probable cause) and that the prior decision was binding on this panel. The other “Candyman” decisions in which a Franks violation was found to taint the warrant, include United States v. Strauser, 247 F.Supp.2d 1135 (E.D. Mo. 2003); United States v. Perez, 247 F.Supp.2d 459 (S.D.N.Y. 2003); United States v. Kunen, 323 F.Supp.2d 390 (E.D.N.Y. 2004). See also United States v. Bailey, 272 F.Supp.2d 822 (D.Neb. 2003); United States v. Martin, 426 F.3d 68 (2d Cir. 2005); United States v. Shields, 458 F.3d 269 (3rd Cir. 2006).

United States v. Gonzalez, Inc., 412 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 2005)
The information in the wiretap affidavit did not satisfy the necessity requirement of the wiretap statute. In addition, the application suffered from a Franks violation. With regard to the Franks violation, the defendants offered sufficient information relating to the false statements and the materiality of the false statements in their pleadings to prompt the trial court to grant a hearing (which the district court did conduct). Regarding the necessity issue, the normal investigative techniques available to the government had not been exhausted; moreover, if traditional investigative procedures were used, there would have been no need for a wiretap.

United States v. Hammond, 351 F.3d 765 (6th Cir. 2003)
A considerable amount of the information in the search warrant affidavit was incorrect. The remaining information was not sufficient to support a probable cause determination.

United States v. Alvarez, 127 F.3d 372 (5th Cir. 1997)
The defendant showed a videotape to a police officer. The video depicted a minor who briefly exposed her breast. The officer applied for a search warrant, stating that the defendant had shown him a video that contained a minor engaged in sexual conduct. The officer later testified that he was basing this on the state law that defined sexual conduct as including "lewd exhibition of the genitals," and his belief that breasts were genitals. The evidence should have been suppressed based on this recklessly false search warrant affidavit. Among other problems, there was no reason why the officer could not have set forth the basic facts in the affidavit (i.e., exactly what he observed on the video) rather than simply giving his conclusion that what he observed qualified as sexual conduct.

Hale v. Fish, 899 F.2d 390 (5th Cir. 1990)
An application for an arrest warrant contained material false statements. Furthermore, the affidavit failed to reveal statements obtained from other witnesses which contradicted the statements which were offered in support of the arrest warrant. Absent the material misstatements, and including the omitted statements which were exculpatory, there was no probable cause to support the arrest.

United States v. Bennett, 905 F.2d 931 (6th Cir. 1990)
The police obtained a search warrant on the basis of an affidavit which recited the information received from a confidential informant that the defendant was manufacturing and selling marijuana out of his house. The search of the residence revealed no marijuana, but did reveal the presence of firearms in the house. The affidavit was false, however, in that it stated that the informant claimed to have actually seen marijuana in the house and in the defendant’s barn. At the suppression hearing, the officer acknowledged that the informant did not, in fact, tell him that he had seen marijuana in the house, or in the barn; rather, he had simply gone to the house and purchased marijuana from the defendant, without knowing exactly where the marijuana was kept. The Sixth Circuit concludes that these constitute materially false statements by the affiant and the search warrant, absent these statements, was not backed up by probable cause. The motion to suppress should have been granted.

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com

United States v. Bowling, 900 F.2d 926 (6th Cir. 1990)

After obtaining a search warrant in good faith, officers learned that certain facts contained in the affidavit were not correct and would have cast a doubt on the existence of probable cause. The Sixth Circuit holds that in such circumstances the appropriate course of action is for the agents to return to the Magistrate and obtain a new warrant if the Magistrate feels that probable cause still exists. In this case, prior to executing the search warrant, other law enforcement officers obtained the subject’s consent to search the property and did not find any of the evidence and contraband which the agents had stated were present on the property in their search warrant application. The Court goes on to hold that such a search does not pass the Leon test of good faith. The law was clear that probable cause must exist both when the warrant is applied for and when it was executed. The officers knew that probable cause was questionable when they executed the warrant and thus they did not act in objective good faith.

A police officer applied for a search warrant stating that a confidential informant had advised him that drugs were at a certain location. In fact, there was no confidential informant, but rather an anonymous phone caller. The anonymous caller had not, contrary to what the police officer stated in the affidavit, provided any reliable information in the past. The Sixth Circuit holds that this constitutes a Franks violation and under Leon, there is no good faith exception to the exclusionary rule in cases where the police officer intentionally makes misstatements in the search warrant affidavit.

United States v. Residence (Appeal of Lewallen), 805 F.2d 256 (7th Cir. 1986)

The Seventh Circuit suggests that it will adopt a new standard in reviewing district courts’ determinations that a misrepresentation in a search warrant affidavit was made with reckless disregard for the truth. In the future, the Seventh Circuit will review such a determination with independent judgment in determining whether the record established reckless disregard for the truth with convincing clarity. In the future, therefore, the “clearly erroneous” standard will not be employed in reviewing the district courts’ decisions on such questions.

United States v. Jacobs, 986 F.2d 1231 (8th Cir. 1993)

The police believed that a package shipped by Federal Express contained drugs. They subjected the package to a dog sniff. The dog indicated some interest in the package, but did not give a positive alert. On the warrant application, however, the affiant stated that the dog showed an interest in the package, but failed to reveal that this did not amount to an alert – and that the dog did not, in fact, alert to the package. This violated Franks and required suppression of the evidence uncovered during the ensuing search.
United States v. Hall, 113 F.3d 157 (9th Cir. 1997)
A state trooper took an informant to a magistrate to obtain a search warrant of the defendant’s trailer. The informant, under oath, told the magistrate that his source of supply was the defendant, and he lived at the trailer. The informant and the trooper did not tell the magistrate about the informant’s criminal history, including his probation violation for making death threats to a wounded police officer and his conviction for falsely reporting a crime. The search warrant was tainted by this Franks violation and the evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Barton, 995 F.2d 931 (9th Cir. 1993)
The government’s destruction of evidence prior to an evidentiary hearing on a motion to suppress (alleging a Franks v. Delaware violation) must be analyzed under the principles of Brady and Arizona v. Youngblood to determine if the defendant’s right to due process has been violated. Thus, if the evidence was exculpatory – in the sense of supporting the Franks violation – and the government acted in bad faith in destroying the evidence, a due process violation might be found.

United States v. DeLeon, 979 F.2d 761 (9th Cir. 1992)
The search warrant affidavit omitted material facts which, if included, would have negated the probable cause basis for searching the premises. The fact that the person who deliberately omitted information was not the affiant, but another law enforcement agent, is not critical. What matters is that the government, generally, deliberately kept material information from the issuing magistrate. “Police cannot insulate one officer’s deliberate misstatements merely by relaying it through an officer-affiant personally ignorant of its falsity.” In this case, one agent was aware that one of the three witnesses who had been to the location had not seen or smelled any marijuana in the location sought to be searched. The agent failed to tell this fact to the affiant, who then wrote in the affidavit that all three men saw the marijuana. Had this information been included in the affidavit, there would not have been probable cause to search the premises.

United States v. Johns, 851 F.2d 1131 (9th Cir. 1988)
The defendants offered expert testimony, as well as their own affidavits, to establish that there was no possibility that any narcotics agent had smelled what the agent claimed to have smelled in his search warrant affidavit. This was sufficient evidence to require a Franks hearing to determine whether the agent included deliberately false information in his affidavit to search a storage compartment.

United States v. Simpson, 813 F.2d 1462 (9th Cir. 1987)
In an affidavit used to obtain a wiretap, misrepresentations were made about the necessity for the wiretap. In particular, the affidavit failed to reveal that an informant had established a close relationship with the target and had been present on several occasions while the target conducted business with other members of the alleged drug ring. These omissions constitute a violation of Franks v. Delaware and tainted the wiretap application.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Fruits)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (Consent -- Product of Unlawful Detention, Entry or Arrest); SEARCH AND SEIZURE (Attenuation)

When the police stop a vehicle that has a driver and passenger, the passenger is also “detained” for fourth amendment purposes. Therefore, if there was no basis for the stop, the passenger may contest the admissibility of any fruits of that stop (for which he has standing), such as a statement he made, or evidence seized from his person or personal belongings.

The police violated _Payton v. New York_, by entering the defendant’s apartment and arresting him without a search, or an arrest warrant. While in the apartment, the defendant made an incriminating statement. He was then removed from the apartment and made additional incriminating statements. The Supreme Court holds that the statements made outside the apartment need not be suppressed.

_United States v. Terry_, 909 F.3d 716 (4th Cir. 2018)

The police unlawfully placed a GPS device on the defendant’s car without first obtaining a warrant. They subsequently used the data from the device to determine that the defendant was speeding and on that basis, the car was pulled over and ultimately, drugs were found in the car. The initial illegal “search” (placing the GPS device on the car without a warrant) was not too attenuated from the subsequent discovery of drugs and was, instead, the fruit of the poisonous tree and the evidence should have been suppressed. On the question of standing, the court held that the defendant had standing, as the driver of the car, when the GPS device was placed on the vehicle and though he was a passenger during the subsequent stop (and thus did not have standing to challenge the drugs found in the car), the search was the fruit of the poisonous tree and the lack of standing does not change that determination.

_United States v. Delgado-Perez_, 867 F.3d 244 (1st Cir. 2017)

Law Enforcement executed an arrest warrant in Puerto Rico for a suspect wanted in New York. There was no reason to believe that any other person, or danger, existed elsewhere in the house where the arrest occurred. A protective security sweep was therefore unnecessary and not consistent with the Fourth Amendment. The fact that the defendant was arrested for a drug offense did not constitute a sufficient basis to conduct a sweep search throughout the house after he was arrested in the front yard. The subsequent consent search was the fruit of this unlawful security sweep and the results of that search were also required to be suppressed.

_United States v. Wrensford_, 866 F.3d 76 (3rd Cir. 2017)

The police were investigating a shooting and located the defendant, who generally fit the description of the shooter. The defendant was handcuffed, his belongings were removed from his pocket, he was taken to the police station and put in a cell. The Third Circuit held that this constituted a _de facto_ arrest. The case was remanded to the district court to determine what fruits of this illegal arrest were required to be suppressed: items found in his pockets, items found near where he was arrested, a DNA sample, an identification of the defendant by a witness at the police station.

United States v. Griffith, 867 F.3d 1265 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

The police had reason to believe that the defendant had participated (perhaps as the getaway driver) in a homicide that occurred a year earlier. The search warrant affidavit reviewed all the facts amounting to probable cause and then sought permission to search the defendant’s current apartment (where he had moved after the homicide and a brief stint in jail). The warrant only sought authority to seize cell phones, because criminals communicate by phone. During the execution of the search warrant, the defendant threw a gun out the window. The D.C. Circuit held that (1) the warrant was deficient, because there was no probable cause that the defendant even had a cell phone or that it had any incriminating information contained in it; (2) there was no probable cause that a phone would be found in the apartment (as opposed to on his person if he were not present at the apartment when the warrant was executed); (3) the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply because the warrant was so lacking in probable cause to search or seize a cell phone; (4) the “abandonment” of the gun was the fruit of the execution of the defective search warrant and therefore the gun that was thrown out of the window was subject to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Gorman, 859 F.3d 705 (9th Cir. 2017)

A police officer stopped the defendant without sufficient articulable suspicion and then prolonged the stop to the point that it amounted to an illegal detention. Finding no evidence during this encounter, the officer radioed ahead to another officer and told him to get a drug dog and stop the defendant again. The second officer had a dog ready when he stopped the car and the dog promptly alerted, providing probable cause to search the vehicle. The Ninth Circuit held that the second stop was the fruit of the initial illegal stop. The evidence was suppressed.

United States v. Ramirez-Rivera, 800 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015)

Based on information from an informant who had not previously been known to the police, the police went to the defendant’s house to search for a fugitive. Without a search warrant, the police entered the house and arrested the fugitive, as well as the defendant (on the basis that he was harboring the fugitive) and found guns. The defendant was then brought to the police station where he made a statement. The First Circuit held that entering the house without a warrant was illegal: there were no exigent circumstances; and there was no probable cause, because the informant’s information was not corroborated in any meaningful way, other than confirming the description of the house. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply, at least in part because of the egregiousness of the violation, but also because the police testified that the reason they did not get a warrant is because it required more confirming evidence (thus revealing that the police knew that they did not have probable cause and were intentionally proceeding with the intention of not getting a search warrant which could not be obtained based on the lack of sufficient information). The evidence found during the search, as well as the defendant’s statement should have been suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree.

United States v. Cordero-Rosario, 786 F.3d 64 (1st Cir. 2015)

1494
The initial search warrant stated that the crime under investigation was “lewd actions” and that “in accordance with the interview of the child, there is currently pornography on the defendant’s computer. There was no information in the search warrant application about what the child said, how the alleged pornography was related to any offense, how the child knew about the presence of pornography on the computer, or why the affiant believed that pornography was evidence of a crime. The evidence should have been suppressed, because even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply to this warrant. Based on the discovery of child pornography during the search of the computer, the police went back to the apartment and secured the wife’s consent to search additional computers. The First Circuit held that this was arguably the fruit of the poisonous tree (exploiting the first illegal search), but further fact-finding was necessary to develop the record relating to the subsequent consent searches.

United States v. Brodie, 742 F.3d 1058 (D.C. Cir. 2014)

The police were waiting outside a house that they planned to search pursuant to a search warrant. While awaiting their colleagues, the defendant was observed leaving the house (the police were not targeting that individual; the target was already in custody). The police approached the defendant and directed him to place his hands on the car (which he did). Shortly thereafter, he fled, discarding drugs and guns while on the run. The D.C. Circuit held (1) the defendant was detained; (2) there was no basis for the detention because, pursuant to Bailey v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 1031 (2013), the police may not detain an individual in connection with the execution of a search warrant unless the detention is at the time when, and at the place where, the search is being executed; (3) the detention was not attenuated from the defendant’s flight; and (4) the evidence that the police obtained was the fruit of the unlawful detention.

United States v. Hernandez, 670 F.3d 616 (5th Cir. 2012)

The police received a tip that the defendant was harboring illegal aliens. They went to her trailer and started banging on the door and windows and demanding entry. The defendant came to the door and acknowledged that there was an illegal alien inside. The Fifth Circuit concluded that the banging on the doors and windows and demanding entry amounted to a Fourth Amendment violation (an illegal seizure) and the defendant’s subsequent statement was not attenuated from that illegal conduct. Therefore, her statement should have been suppressed. The court also held that the statements obtained by witnesses inside (as well as additional evidence) were the fruit of the Fourth Amendment violation, as well and those statements, too, would be suppressed.

United States v. Gaines, 668 F.3d 170 (4th Cir. 2012)

Three police officers testified that as the car in which the defendant was a passenger drove past them, they observed a small crack in the windshield. The car was stopped and the defendant was ordered out of the car and frisked and the officer felt a gun. The defendant assaulted the police officer and fled, after which he was stopped and a gun was found in his possession. The district court found that the officers were untruthful when they said that they observed a crack in the windshield and that the stop, therefore, was illegal. The government conceded the illegality of the stop, but claimed that the assault of the officer was an intervening event that authorized the search (incident to arrest). The Fourth Circuit rejected this argument: the gun was found during the course of the illegal stop (and the frisk) which was before the defendant engaged in the intervening assault.

United States v. Shetler, 665 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2011)

Based on a tip, the police conducted a warrantless search of the defendant’s garage (which the district court held was justified by exigent circumstances and was a valid security sweep) and then the police entered the house without a warrant and continued to conduct a search. This latter search was not lawful. The defendant, confronted with evidence that was uncovered during the search, made numerous incriminating statements. The Ninth Circuit held that all statements were the fruit of the poisonous tree and should have been suppressed. The Court further held that the confession was not sufficiently “attenuated” from the illegal search so as to break the causal chain. The fact that he was Mirandized prior to making the statements also did not break the causal chain.

United States v. Martinez, 643 F.3d 1292 (10th Cir. 2011)

A 911 operator received a “static” only call. There was nobody on the line, just static. An officer was dispatched to the house. When the police arrived, there was on sign of any emergency, or even an occupant in the house. The police looked into the house from a sliding glass door and saw various boxes of electronic equipment and the house appeared somewhat disheveled. The police then entered, announced their presence and asked if anybody was home (nobody was in the house) and conducted a sweep search, during which they found drugs and child pornography. When they exited the home, the defendant drove up and he was questioned and made incriminating statements. The police then secured a search warrant. The Tenth Circuit affirmed the decision of the trial court suppressing all the evidence on the basis that there was no exigency that supported the warrantless entry into the house and the defendant’s statement was the fruit of that unlawful statement. Thus, the search warrant was the fruit of the poisonous tree.

United States v. Werra, 638 F.3d 326 (1st Cir. 2011)

The police had a warrant to arrest an individual and had information that the person was seen at a particular residence. The police went there, asked permission to enter (which was denied) and then entered without permission. The target of the warrant was not there, but the defendant was. He was frisked and a gun was found. The First Circuit held that the entry was unlawful, because the information known to the police did not amount to a reasonable belief that the target of the warrant was within. Because the officers entered unlawfully, there was no lawful basis to frisk the defendant and the gun found in his possession should have been suppressed.

United States v. Gross, 662 F.3d 393 (6th Cir. 2011)

The police stopped an automobile in which the defendant was a passenger. The stop was found to be improper, because there was no articulable suspicion supporting the stop. During the course of the stop, the police learned that there was an arrest warrant for the defendant. The question in the Sixth Circuit was whether the existence of an arrest warrant and the evidence found during a search incident to the arrest was the fruit of the illegal stop, and did the exclusionary rule bar the introduction of the evidence. The Sixth Circuit held that the exclusionary rule did apply and the evidence would be suppressed. Contrary authority in the Seventh Circuit in United States v. Green, 111 F.3d 515 (7th Cir. 1997), was rejected by the Sixth Circuit.

United States v. Villa-Gonzalez, 623 F.3d 526 (8th Cir. 2010)

If physical evidence is seized as the result of a confession that was obtained in violation of Miranda, the physical evidence is not suppressed. United States v. Patane. However, if physical evidence is seized as the result of a confession that was obtained pursuant to an illegal detention (and therefore a Fourth Amendment violation), then the physical evidence is the fruit of the Fourth Amendment violation and is suppressed pursuant to Wong Sun v. United States.

United States v. Cha, 597 F.3d 995 (9th Cir. 2010)

The police seized the defendant’s house and held it for twenty-four hours (not allowing the defendant to enter), while a search warrant was obtained. This was too long and the evidence obtained from the search that was conducted thereafter should have been suppressed, even though it could not be said that the search, or the discovery of the evidence was the “fruit” of the illegal seizure. The court also rejected the government’s effort to extend the Herring good faith exception to the exclusionary rule to this situation.

United States v. Olivares-Rangel, 458 F.3d 1104 (10th Cir. 2006)

If a defendant is illegally seized or arrested and as the result of that illegal arrest, the defendant makes a statement, the defendant’s identity is learned, and his illegal status is ascertained, the court may suppress all the evidence. The suppression of the defendant’s statement is governed by Brown v. Illinois, 422 U.S. 590 (1975). The suppression of the identity evidence (as well as the defendant’s “A-file”) is more complicated. The government argued that INS v. Lopez-Mendoza, 468 U.S. 1032 (1984), holds that the identity of the defendant may never be suppressed. The Tenth Circuit rejected this argument. The defendant, himself, may not be suppressed (i.e., he may be brought to court), but evidence derived from the illegal detention may be suppressed, including fingerprint evidence in certain circumstances (see Davis v. Mississippi, 394 U.S. 721 (1969); Hayes v. Florida, 470 U.S. 811 (1985)) and independently created and maintained government records. The fact that the defendant does not have an expectation of privacy in the government records is not relevant. The standing issue focuses on the defendant’s rights regarding the illegal arrest. The defendant need not have an expectation of privacy in the fruits that are the result of the unlawful arrest. In other words, the defendant is not required to prove an expectation of privacy in both the primary violation and the fruits. If his expectation of privacy was violated, the fruits of that violation may be suppressed, regardless of whether the fruits are discovered in a place for which the defendant does not have an expectation of privacy.

United States v. Mosley, 454 F.3d 249 (3rd Cir. 2006)

If the police stop a car without an articulable suspicion, the discovery of contraband in the car must be suppressed, even in a prosecution of a passenger. Though Rakas v. Illinois indicates that the passenger has no expectation of privacy in the car, the passenger’s motion to suppress is predicated on his unlawful detention and the fruit of that unlawful detention, rather than on the expectation of privacy in the automobile. The court’s opinion runs twenty pages and comprehensively reviews the law of “fruit”.

1497
United States v. Hudson, 405 F.3d 425 (6th Cir. 2005)

The police had an arrest warrant for the defendant, but could not find him. The police made a warrantless, illegal stop of a car being driven by the defendant’s girlfriend and discovered that the defendant was in the car. He was searched. The Sixth Circuit held that this was an illegal search. Because the stop was illegal, the search of the defendant was the fruit of that illegality, despite the fact that the police had a warrant for the defendant.

United States v. Garcia-Beltran, 389 F.3d 864 (9th Cir. 2004)

The defendant was arrested without probable cause. He was then fingerprinted (for reasons unclear in the record). The fingerprint revealed that the defendant was an illegal alien. Because the record was unclear regarding the reason that he was fingerprinted, a remand was required to develop the facts. If the fingerprints were taken as part of the investigation of the defendant, then the evidence should have been suppressed as a fruit of the illegal arrest. Davis v. Mississippi, 394 U.S. 721 (1969) and Hayes v. Florida, 470 U.S. 811 (1985). The court reached the same holding in United States v. Ortiz-Hernandez, 427 F.3d 567 (9th Cir. 2005).

United States v. Johnson, 380 F.3d 1013 (7th Cir. 2004)

The Seventh Circuit, in a decision by Judge Posner, holds that both the independent source doctrine and the inevitable discovery doctrine do not apply where the alternative source of information was derived from another illegal search (and one for which the defendant has no standing to complain). In this case, the defendant and others were sitting in his parked car when two police officers approached. The police ordered the three occupants to exit the vehicle, though there was no articulable suspicion or probable cause. Contraband was found under the defendant’s seat and other contraband was found in the other people’s possession. The police then searched the trunk of the car and found counterfeit money. The government argued that the search under the seat and in the trunk would inevitably have occurred as a result of the illegal evidence seized from the other people. The defendant contended that even though he lacked standing to challenge the search of the other people, the government could not rely on that illegal seizure and argue that the illegal search of the trunk would have occurred as a result of those other illegal searches (or that there was an independent source for the evidence found in the illegal trunk search). Judge Posner wrote, in essence, that two wrongs do not make a right.

United States v. Hernandez, 279 F.3d 302 (5th Cir. 2002)

Suspicious of a bus traveler, a police officer took her luggage out of the baggage compartment of the bus and handled it, feeling (from the outside) the contents. This violated Bond v. United States, 529 U.S. 334 (2000), which held that such manipulation of luggage amounts to a search. The agent at that point entered the bus and secured the defendant’s consent to open the suitcase. This was valid consent. But, the consent was not sufficiently attenuated from the initial illegality to remove the taint. Thus, even though the search was conducted pursuant to the defendant’s consent, it was still the fruit of the illegal search that preceded it. The officer decided to approach the defendant only after he had felt something suspicious in her suitcase. This invalidates the consent search.

United States v. Vasquez de Reyes, 149 F.3d 192 (3rd Cir. 1998)

1498
The police received a tip that three undocumented aliens were at a bar. The INS went to the bar and detained the defendant who did not meet the description of any of the subjects. The result of stopping the defendant was the discovery that she had engaged in immigration marriage fraud (the evidence included the defendant’s confession; and a statement by the defendant’s supposed husband). The government contended that this would inevitably have been discovered during routine INS investigation when the defendant applied for a residency permit. The Third Circuit held that this was not the type of inevitable discovery envisioned by Nix v. Williams, 467 U.S. 431 (1984). Though the inevitable discovery rule is not necessarily limited to the discovery of physical evidence, it is not applicable to a subsequent confession, or statement of another witness, the inevitability of which is far from certain. (Note that the court did not analyze in any detail whether the exclusionary rule – or the fruit of the poisonous tree doctrine – should operate to bar the testimony of the putative husband, whose identity was discovered only through the detention of the defendant. In other words, it was assumed, but not explained, that all evidence, including other witnesses’ testimony, could be barred as the fruit of the poisonous tree. See United States v. Ceccolini).

United States v. Johns, 891 F.2d 243 (9th Cir. 1989)

The defendant was stopped and questioned at an airstrip. There was neither probable cause nor an articulable suspicion justifying this stop. As a result of the stop, the police learned the identity of the defendant and with that information later discovered marijuana at the house of one of his known associates. The Court of Appeals holds that the illegally obtained identification significantly directed the investigation which led to the discovery of the marijuana. The illegal stop was the impetus for the chain of events leading to the marijuana and thus was too closely and inextricably linked to the discovery for the taint of the illegal arrest to have dissipated.

United States v. Ramirez-Sandoval, 872 F.2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1989)

A police officer ordered occupants of a van to exit the van based on his suspicion that they were engaged in drug dealing. After the occupants were out of the car, the officer reached inside and pulled a piece of paper out from behind the visor. He read one of the names off the piece of paper which elicited a confession from another defendant that he was an illegal alien and the name and corresponding number on the paper referred to the amount of money he paid to be illegally transported across the border. The court held that the search of the van was unlawful and thus the defendant’s confession was the fruit of an unlawful search. The government’s contention that the confession was attenuated from the unlawful search was rejected. The illegally obtained evidence was clearly used by the officer in questioning the witness and eliciting the confession; there was virtually no elapsed time between the illegal search and the onset of questioning. Finally, the witnesses were not known to the investigating officers, unlike the witness in United States v. Ceccolini, 435 U.S. 268 (1978), in which the Supreme Court explained the attenuation doctrine.

United States v. Drosten, 819 F.2d 1067 (11th Cir. 1987)

The unlawful entry into a defendant’s apartment by police officers which resulted in the discovery of a third person in the apartment made that third person’s testimony excludable.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Good Faith / Leon)

A good faith mistake of law by a law enforcement officer does not render an arrest, or detention unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment. Even prior to the decision whether the exclusionary rule should apply, the court must consider that a Fourth Amendment violation requires that the arrest or detention be “unreasonable”. And if the police officer has made an objectively reasonable mistake of law, then the detention of a suspect is not unreasonable. In Heien, the police officer stopped the defendant because he had only one working brake light. Under North Carolina law, cars are only required to have one working brake light. The parties agreed that the officer’s mistake of law was reasonable. The defense claimed, however, that a mistake of law by a law enforcement officer renders a detention unreasonable for Fourth Amendment purposes. The Supreme Court disagreed. For the same reason that a reasonable mistake of fact does not render a detention unreasonable, a detention prompted by a reasonable mistake of law is also not an unreasonable detention.

Because of a clerical error, a computer showed that there was an outstanding arrest warrant for the defendant. He was arrested and a bag of marijuana was found. The Court holds that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applies in this context. Thus, if the police are acting in objectively reasonable good faith in arresting the defendant, a search incident to that arrest will be upheld, even if the arrest was later determined to be invalid because of a clerical error.

Sheriff’s Deputies in one county were told by a clerk in a neighboring county that there was a warrant for the defendant’s arrest. This was inaccurate. The neighboring county Sheriff personnel had negligently failed to erase the warrant from the computer system when it had been withdrawn. The question in this case is whether Arizona v. Evans, which applies to negligent errors by court personnel also applies in this situation, where the negligence is committed by law enforcement personnel. The Supreme Court held that the exclusionary rule would not be applied in this situation. Excluding the evidence derived from the improper arrest would not deter police misconduct since negligence is not deterred by “punishing” the police. There was no evidence of systematic errors by the neighboring county’s sheriff’s department.

Davis v. United States, 131 S. Ct. 2419 (2011)

A search that was conducted in accordance with the prevailing law (Belton), would not be subject to the exclusionary rule on the basis of Gant, which was decided while the matter was still on direct appeal. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applies in this situation.

United States v. Knox, 883 F.3d 1262 (10th Cir. 2018)

Disagreeing with the decisions of the Fourth, Eighth and Eleventh Circuits, the Tenth Circuit held that in considering whether the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applies to an inadequate search warrant application, the reviewing court may not consider information known to the affiant, but not revealed to the magistrate. The good faith exception only applies if the information provided to the magistrate satisfied the objective good faith standard, not whether the officer had sufficient information, but failed to provide it either orally or in the affidavit to the magistrate.

United States v. Griffith, 867 F.3d 1265 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

The police had reason to believe that the defendant had participated (perhaps as the getaway driver) in a homicide that occurred a year earlier. The search warrant affidavit reviewed all the facts amounting to probable cause and then sought permission to search the defendant’s current apartment (where he had moved after the homicide and a brief stint in jail). The warrant only sought authority to seize cell phones, because criminals communicate by phone. During the execution of the search warrant, the defendant threw a gun out the window. The D.C. Circuit held that (1) the warrant was deficient, because there was no probable cause that the defendant even had a cell phone or that it had any incriminating information contained in it; (2) there was no probable cause that a phone would be found in the apartment (as opposed to on his person if he were not present at the apartment when the warrant was executed); (3) the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply because the warrant was so lacking in probable cause to search or seize a cell phone; (4) the “abandonment” of the gun was the fruit of the execution of the defective search warrant and therefore the gun that was thrown out of the window was subject to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Brown, 826 F.3d 375 (6th Cir. 2016)

Though there was probable cause to search the defendant’s car; and though there was some evidence to believe that the defendant was involved in a heroin distribution conspiracy, there was insufficient information provided in the search warrant affidavit to justify a search of the defendant’s house. There was no information that he ever sold heroin, or possessed heroin in his house. Instead, the agents relied only on their knowledge about what types of items are typically found in a drug dealer’s house. The connection between the residence and the evidence of criminal activity must be specific and concrete, not “vague” or “generalized.” This is an inadequate basis to issue a search warrant. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply in this case, because the application “was so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable.”

United States v. Vasquez-Argarin, 821 F.3d 467 (3rd Cir. 2016)

If the police have an arrest warrant for a person who resides at a certain location, all that is required to enter the premises is the arrest warrant. If the person for whom the arrest warrant was issued is simply present at a location, the police must obtain a search warrant in addition to the arrest warrant to enter the premises. The level of information known to the police that the person resides at the location must rise to the level of probable cause in order to obviate the need for a search warrant. The information known to the police in this case was insufficient to meet this threshold. The court noted that there is a wide divergence in the circuits regarding the level of knowledge that the police must have. Some courts require less than probable cause (reason to believe), others require probable cause. The Third Circuit also held that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply in this case, because the police were not relying on binding precedent, or a search warrant when they entered the house.

1501
United States v. Stanbridge, 813 F.3d 1032 (7th Cir. 2016)

The police stopped the defendant because he did not signal for 100 feet prior to parking along the curb. The district court held that the defendant did not commit a motor vehicle offense, but the officer’s mistake of law was reasonable, so the exclusionary rule did not apply. The Seventh Circuit reversed: Reviewing the state law, the court concluded that when a turn is made, a 100-foot pre-turn signal is required, but not when a driver is changing lanes from a driving lane to the curb parking space. The law is not sufficiently ambiguous that the police could reasonably misunderstand it. Heien does not apply.

United States v. Rush, 808 F.3d 1007 (4th Cir. 2015)

A woman called the police and asked that they remove the defendant from her apartment where he had been staying and, according to her, dealing drugs. The woman met the police at a location away from the apartment and gave them consent to enter the apartment and gave them a key. The police went to the apartment and went in. The defendant was asleep in the master bedroom. They woke him up and told him that they had a search warrant to search the apartment. This was not true. But the police said that in order to protect the woman – hiding the fact that she had called the police and gave them permission to enter the apartment. The Fourth Circuit held that (1) searching the apartment was not a proper consent search because the defendant, as an occupant, had the right to object to a consensual search pursuant to Randolph; and (2) the police could not rely on the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule, because the police did not rely on some other authority in good faith in conducting the search (such as in Leon or Davis). Deterring the police from lying about the existence of a warrant is the type of case for which the exclusionary rule is particularly appropriate.

United States v. Cordova, 792 F.3d 1220 (10th Cir. 2015)

The search warrant in this case was so devoid of probable cause – it was based on stale information, information that did not relate to the defendant, information about marijuana that was seized on the highway that was supposedly destined to another location at which the defendant formerly lived – that no reasonable officer could have believed that the warrant was valid. The warrant did not pass the Leon test.

United States v. Alvarado-Zarza, 782 F.3d 246 (5th Cir. 2015)

A Texas statute requires that a turn signal be activated at least 100 feet prior to making the turn. In this case, the defendant activated his turn signal less than 100 feet prior to changing lanes, but more than 100 feet from where the turn actually occurred. The Texas police officer stopped the vehicle on the basis that the defendant violated the 100-foot rule by failing to activate his signal prior to changing lanes. The Fifth Circuit, in this post-Heien decision held that the officer’s mistake of law (applying the 100-foot rule to the change of lanes, rather than the actual turn) was not reasonable and his possible mistake about whether the turn itself was less than 100-feet from the point that the signal was activated was also not reasonable. The stop of the vehicle was improper and the evidence discovered as a result of the stop should have been suppressed.

United States v. Cordero-Rosario, 786 F.3d 64 (1st Cir. 2015)
The initial search warrant stated that the crime under investigation was “lewd actions” and that “in accordance with the interview of the child, there is currently pornography on the defendant’s computer. There was no information in the search warrant application about what the child said, how the alleged pornography was related to any offense, how the child knew about the presence of pornography on the computer, or why the affiant believed that pornography was evidence of a crime. The evidence should have been suppressed, because even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply to this warrant. Based on the discovery of child pornography during the search of the computer, the police went back to the apartment and secured the wife’s consent to search additional computers. The First Circuit held that this was arguably the fruit of the poisonous tree (exploiting the first illegal search), but further fact-finding was necessary to develop the record relating to the subsequent consent searches.

United States v. Ramirez-Rivera, 800 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015)

Based on information from an informant who had not previously been known to the police, the police went to the defendant’s house to search for a fugitive. Without a search warrant, the police entered the house and arrested the fugitive, as well as the defendant (on the basis that he was harboring the fugitive) and found guns. The defendant was then brought to the police station where he made a statement. The First Circuit held that entering the house without a warrant was illegal: there were no exigent circumstances; and there was no probable cause, because the informant’s information was not corroborated in any meaningful way, other than confirming the description of the house. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply, at least in part because of the egregiousness of the violation, but also because the police testified that the reason they did not get a warrant is because it required more confirming evidence (thus revealing that the police knew that they did not have probable cause and were intentionally proceeding with the intention of not getting a search warrant which could not be obtained based on the lack of sufficient information). The evidence found during the search, as well as the defendant’s statement should have been suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree.

United States v. Hill, 776 F.3d 243 (4th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was on supervised release. Nothing in the conditions of his supervised release amounted to a waiver of his Fourth Amendment rights. He was required to allow a probation officer to visit him in his home, and was required to alert the probation officer if he moved. The defendant failed to notify his probation officer when he moved. The officer went to his new house with law enforcement officers and after arresting him for moving without notifying the probation department, the officers brought in a drug-detecting dog. This was an illegal search and the evidence should have been suppressed (unless, on remand, the government could make a showing that the independent source rule applied). Moreover, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.

United States v. Bershchansky, 788 F.3d 102 (2d Cir. 2015)

The agents signed a search warrant application verifying in detail that they wanted to search Apartment 2 at a certain location where the defendant supposedly lived and where his computer IPS address was located. The warrant was issued. When the agents arrived, they realized that the defendant lived in Apartment 1. They searched that apartment. The Second Circuit held that the search was improper and was not conducted in good faith. This was not a case of a mere typographical error.

United States v. Camou, 773 F.3d 932 (9th Cir. 2014)

The defendant was stopped in his vehicle and charged with smuggling undocumented aliens. He was brought to the police station where he and one of his passengers were questioned. The passenger admitted that they regularly were engaged in smuggling activity. The police seized the defendant’s cell phone and listed it on a property report as seized evidence. Approximately 90 minutes later, the police searched the contents of the phone. The Ninth Circuit held that this was a not proper search incident to arrest search, not a proper exigent circumstances search and not a proper “automobile exception” search. In addition, the court rejected the inevitable discovery doctrine and the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule as reasons not to apply the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Vazquez, 724 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 2013)

The police told the defendant that with or without her consent, the police were going to search her house. They claimed to have the authority based on the fact that her boyfriend (who the police erroneously believed lived in the house, too) was on parole and subject to a warrantless search. She consented. This was not valid consent, because it amounted to nothing more than acquiescence to a show of authority (the police did not, in fact, have the authority to conduct a warrantless search), rather than free and voluntary consent. The court noted that the officers’ subjective good faith that they had the authority to conduct a warrantless search did not exempt this case from the application of the exclusionary rule. Their good faith was not, according to the First Circuit, reasonable.

United States v. Nicholson, 721 F.3d 1236 (10th Cir. 2013)

The police stopped the defendant’s vehicle or a motor vehicle offense that did not actually occur. In short, the police thought the defendant had made an illegal left turn, when, in fact, there was nothing illegal about the method by which he made the turn. (The law related to which lane a car must enter when making a left turn). This mistake of law on the part of the officer rendered the stop improper and any evidence discovered thereafter should have been suppressed. The Tenth Circuit distinguished mistakes of fact on the part of law enforcement officers which, if reasonable, will not lead to suppression of the evidence.

United States v. Underwood, 725 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2013)

The Ninth Circuit concludes that a state search warrant for the defendant’s house lacked probable cause and also was so deficient, that the Leon good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. The warrant application simply recited the contents of a related federal search warrant affidavit (which was used to search other conspirators’ houses) and, with regard to the defendant, noted that he had been seen delivering crates to alleged co-conspirators (in a suspicious manner) three months earlier and a personal-use amount of marijuana was observed in his house. Additional conclusory opinions were of no value in establishing probable cause.

United States v. Harrison, 689 F.3d 301 (3rd Cir. 2012)
The Third Circuit noted that if the police make a reasonable mistake of fact (such as whether an apartment is abandoned, as in this case), that does not negate probable cause. A mistake of law, on the other hand, is per se unreasonable.

United States v. Shaw, 707 F.3d 666 (6th Cir. 2013)

The police had an arrest warrant for Ms. Brown, located at 3171 Hendricks Ave. They went to the general area and found two houses across the street from each other, both of which had the number 3170. Rather than further investigating the situation, the police chose the house that appeared to be occupied, knocked on the door and announced that they had a warrant, went in, conducted a sweep search and found cocaine. The occupant, Mr. Shaw, was arrested and prosecuted for the cocaine. The house was not 3171 Hendricks and Ms. Brown did not live in Shaw’s house. The Sixth Circuit held that the evidence should be suppressed. There was no basis to enter that house; there was no basis to search that house; the officers were not acting in good faith when they said that they had a warrant for that house, or when they remained in the house after determining that it was the wrong house.

United States v. Voustianiouk, 685 F.3d 206 (2d Cir. 2012)

The police had a search warrant to search the first floor apartment at a certain address. When they arrived, they realized that the defendant lived in the second floor apartment so they went there and conducted a search. The Second Circuit held that this amounted to a warrantless search that would not be saved by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Grant, 682 F.3d 827 (9th Cir. 2012)

The police did not make a colorable claim that a weapon used in a homicide was likely to be found at the defendant’s house. The defendant, who lived in the house was not tied to the homicide and his son, who may have been involved, was not shown to have gone to the defendant’s house, or had the gun brought there. Even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not resurrect this flawed search warrant.

Virgin Islands v. John, 654 F.3d 412 (3rd Cir. 2011)

The defendant was known to have committed child molestation. There was no information to support the claim that there would be child pornography on the defendant’s computer. Issuing a search warrant for the defendant’s computer was not proper and the exclusionary rule applied. The affiant did not allege in the affidavit that there was a known correlation between child molestors and child pornography collectors. The failure to set forth this critical fact in the affidavit rendered the affidavit so lacking in probable cause that no reasonable officer could have relied on the warrant. The court explained that a magistrate may not infer a correlation between child abuse and the presence of evidence on a computer. That is a fact that must be averred in the affidavit. And when it is omitted, the court may not invoke the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule and assume that the officer was aware of this “fact.”

United State v. Doyle, 650 F.3d 460 (4th Cir. 2011)

The search warrant in this case failed to allege that pictures possessed by the resident of a house were pornographic and failed to allege when – or where – the pictures were possessed.
This warrant lacked probable cause and did not even survive a good faith Leon review. The probable cause basis of the warrant provided, the following: “Three minor children have come forward and stated that [Doyle] has sexually assaulted them at the Doyle residence. One victims [sic] disclosed to an Uncle that Doyle had shown the victim pictures of nude children.” This description failed to state that the “nude pictures” were pornographic (i.e., lewd depictions) and because there was no statement of when these events occurred, the information was stale (the court noted that the notion of staleness when it comes to computer evidence is rarely a basis to deny a search warrant, but in this case, there was no indication of when the pictures existed). In addition, the statement does not indicate where the pictures were shown to the child, so there was scant basis for believing that the evidence sought by the search warrant would be located at the residence, though the appellate court did not base its ultimate conclusion on this flaw in the warrant. With regard to the absence of probable cause, the court also noted that evidence of child molestation does not automatically authorize the search for child pornography.

United States v. Master, 614 F.3d 236 (6th Cir. 2010)

The defendant lived in Coffee County. The police believed that he lived in Franklin County. A Franklin County judge issued a search warrant. The Sixth Circuit held that if a state judge does not have authority under state law to issue a search warrant for a particular location, the execution of the warrant violates the Fourth Amendment and the evidence must be suppressed, even in a federal court. This is not a case, like Virginia v. Moore, 553 U.S. 164 (2008), in which the violation does not implicate the Fourth Amendment and only violates a state law. However, the Sixth Circuit also concluded that pursuant to Herring, the lower court must weigh the cost of suppression against the benefit of deterrence. Because the officers apparently believed that the property was located in the county where the judge was located, they acted in good faith and if this is satisfactorily established at a hearing, the exclusionary rule should not apply.

United States v. Davis, 598 F.3d 1259 (11th Cir. 2010)

When the defendant’s car was searched, Gant had not yet been decided, and the search was valid under then-prevailing law in the Circuit (interpreting Belton to authorize a car anytime there was an arrest of the driver). The question in this case, is whether a pre-Gant search is subject to suppression if the case is brought to court post-Gant. In other words, if the search was lawful when it was conducted, but subsequent changes in the law rendered it unlawful, should the exclusionary rule be applied. The Eleventh Circuit concluded that the exclusionary rule does not apply in this situation, relying on Illinois v Krull, 480 U.S. 340 (1987) and Herring v. United States, 129 S. Ct. 695 (2009). CERT GRANTED and the United States Supreme Court affirmed. 131 S. Ct. 2419 (2011).

United States v. Cha, 597 F.3d 995 (9th Cir. 2010)

The police seized the defendant’s house and held it for twenty-four hours (not allowing the defendant to enter), while a search warrant was obtained. This was too long and the evidence obtained from the search that was conducted thereafter should have been suppressed, even though it could not be said that the search or the discovery of the evidence was the “fruit” of the illegal seizure. The court also rejected the government’s effort to extend the Herring good faith exception to the exclusionary rule to this situation.
United States v. Pena-Montes, 589 F.3d 1048 (10th Cir. 2009)

The police pulled over the car in which the defendant was a passenger because the officer could not see a license plate on the car. Upon approaching the car, the officer saw a dealer plate displayed in the rear window. The officer thought the car might be stolen, because the driver had no paperwork establishing his ownership, but after calling in the VIN number, the officer found no report that the car was reported stolen. Nevertheless, the officer questioned the defendant – the passenger – and decided that his answers to various questions were suspicious and eventually, he was arrested. The police later determined that he was an illegal alien. The Tenth Circuit held that the continued detention of the occupants of the car was not legal. Once the officer saw the dealer tag, there was no basis for detaining them. The officer’s testimony that dealer tags are limited circumstances in which a driver test-drives a car was legally incorrect. The officer’s mistake of law (as opposed to mistake of fact) could not justify the continued detention of the vehicle’s occupants. The court remanded the case to the lower court to assess the extent to which the exclusionary rule would apply in this case (i.e., excluding evidence of the defendant’s identity and status as an illegal alien).

United States v. Clarkson, 551 F.3d 1196 (10th Cir. 2009)

In this Tenth Circuit decision, decided one week prior to the decision in Herring, the Tenth Circuit held that if a drug-sniffing dog is not properly trained, but a police officer relies in good faith on the statement of another officer that the dog is properly trained, the evidence will be subject to the exclusionary rule, because a police officer’s reliance on another police officer who provides erroneous information is not covered by Arizona v. Evans. Again, however, this decision was issued prior to Herring.

United States v. Hodson, 543 F.3d 286 (6th Cir. 2008)

The fact that the defendant was indisputably a child molester did not provide probable cause to believe that there was child pornography on his computer. The officer, moreover, could not have executed the warrant in good faith, because the application contained virtually no information that would have supported the search for pornography.

United States v. Valadez-Valadez, 525 F.3d 987 (10th Cir. 2008)

The Tenth Circuit holds that stopping a vehicle because it is proceeding 10 mph below the speed limit is not a valid traffic stop in the absence of evidence that the defendant is obstructing or impeding the flow of traffic. In this case, the officer was laboring under a mistake of law (as opposed to a mistake of fact) about whether the defendant’s speed must be impeding the flow of traffic before an offense is being committed. A mistake of law does not justify a stop which is not legally permissible. “An officer’s failure to understand the plain and unambiguous law he is charged with enforcing is not objectively reasonable.”

United States v. West, 520 F.3d 604 (6th Cir. 2008)

Two search warrants were issued in this case. The first was devoid of probable cause, because it contained bare bones assertions about the defendant (all of which were based on hearsay statements that the affiant learned from other officers and individuals). The warrant also failed to link any criminal activity on the part of the defendant with the location that the police wanted to search. The warrant did not even satisfy the Leon good faith standard. The second warrant set forth facts that an informant told the affiant that the defendant confessed to a murder and the body could be found in a well at a certain location; the warrant sought authorization to search the defendant’s van. The affiant, however, failed to reveal that the informant was serving time in federal custody and that the police went to the location where the body was supposedly located and found nothing – not even a well.

United States v. Rice, 478 F.3d 704 (6th Cir. 2007)

The Leon good faith exception to the exclusionary rule does not apply to Title III wiretap cases. Because suppression is a statutory remedy, the court-made exception to the court-created exclusionary rule in other search cases, does not apply. In this case, the warrant application contained misrepresentations and recklessly-made false statements which, when corrected, negated the necessity requirement for a wiretap. The court also upheld the trial court’s finding that various boilerplate representations about alternative methods were not useful in a wiretap application.

United States v. Luong, 470 F.3d 898 (9th Cir. 2006)

The linchpin of the basis for obtaining the search warrant was an unverified tip that someone arriving on a plane from overseas was a chemist who was involved in methamphetamine manufacturing. The affidavit did not even identify who the suspect was. There was insufficient probable cause to support the issuance of a search warrant and the affidavit was so lacking in probable cause that Leon did not apply. The Ninth Circuit also held that where a search warrant application is so lacking in probable cause, the court would not consider any supposed oral communications made by the affiant to the issuing magistrate in deciding whether Leon would resurrect the warrant.

United States v. McPhearson, 469 F.3d 518 (6th Cir. 2006)

The bare bones search warrant stated that a person was arrested in front of his house and that he had drugs in his pocket was so deficient in setting forth probable cause that drugs could be found in the house that even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule could not resurrect the search.

United States v. Washington, 455 F.3d 824 (8th Cir. 2006)

The police pulled the defendant over because his windshield was cracked. A gun was found and the defendant was prosecuted for being a felon in possession of a firearm. Driving with a cracked windshield, however, is not a violation of Nebraska State law. Therefore, the stop of the defendant was unlawful and the discovery of the gun was a fruit of the illegal stop. The government’s argument that the officer acted in good faith was rejected: The mistake of law was not objectively reasonable. The question is not whether the officer subjectively believed that the law was being violated, but whether, from an objective point of view, a belief that the law was being violated was reasonable.

United States v. Herrera, 444 F.3d 1238 (10th Cir. 2006)

A state administrative law permitted the inspection of any vehicle weighing over 10,000 pounds. The police officer in this case believed that the defendant’s pickup truck weighed over 1508
10,000 pounds and stopped the vehicle to perform an inspection. Actually, the truck did not weigh over 10,000 pounds. The officer’s mistake of fact rendered the search unlawful. In contexts of searches other than administrative searches, a reasonable mistake of fact does not render a search unlawful. But with regard to administrative searches, because the exception to the warrant requirement is based on the “target’s” acquiescence to being searched by engaging in the administratively regulated activity, the officer’s mistake of fact cannot be used as a basis for obviating the requirement of probable cause. In short, the defendant, by driving a vehicle that did not weigh over 10,000 pounds, did not knowingly engage in activity that was pervasively regulated.

United States v. Cole, 444 F.3d 688 (5th Cir. 2006)

The defendant stopped at a stop sign just shy of the cross walk, but over the solid white line. He claimed that this did not violate Texas law. The government argued that the traffic stop was valid regardless of the actual Texas law, because the officer, in good faith, thought that the law required the defendant to stop before the solid white line. The Fifth Circuit held that a good faith mistake as to the law was not a cure for an invalid stop.

United States v. Hython, 443 F.3d 480 (6th Cir. 2006)

The search warrant application revealed that a controlled purchase of cocaine occurred at the target location, but nowhere in the warrant did the affiant reveal when this controlled purchase occurred. Therefore, the information in the warrant application was stale and there was no probable cause to search the premises. Moreover, the Leon good faith exception did not apply. In reaching the Leon conclusion, the Sixth Circuit noted that whether an officer could objectively rely on the warrant as being valid, the court held that the inquiry is limited to the four corners of the affidavit. Thus, what the affiant actually knew (but did not recite in the affidavit) cannot be considered in the good faith analysis.

United States v. Angelos, 433 F.3d 738 (10th Cir. 2006)

Though the FBI and the AUSA intended to get a search warrant that would have allowed the agents to search the defendant’s car and house (and there was, in fact, probable cause to search both the car and the house), they mistakenly submitted a search warrant that only identified the car as the target of the search. Searching the house was therefore impermissible. Moreover, because the search warrant clearly only authorized the search of the car, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.

United States v. Frazier, 423 F.3d 526 (6th Cir. 2005)

When deciding whether an invalid search warrant may be resurrected under the good faith Leon rationale, the Sixth Circuit previously held (Laughton, below) that only information in the affidavit may be considered in making the good faith determination. In this case, however, the court extended Laughton and held that other information actually conveyed to the magistrate by the affiant may also be considered in evaluating the affiant’s good faith.

United States v. Laughton, 409 F.3d 744 (6th Cir. 2005)

The fact that the officer knew more facts than he recited in the warrant application is not relevant to the good faith analysis. The question to be decided in assessing whether the warrant which is facially invalid could be rescued by Leon is whether a reasonable officer would have believed in the validity of the warrant and the existence of probable cause, not whether the officer in this case actually had sufficient information which he simply did not recite in the application. The Eleventh Circuit reached a contrary result in United States v. Martin, 297 F.3d 1308 (11th Cir. 2002)

United States v. Gonzales, 399 F.3d 1225 (10th Cir. 2005)

The defendant’s car was searched after it was involved in a car accident. Ammunition was found, but no gun. A search warrant was issued, but the application never explained the basis for searching the specific location that the affiant wanted to search. The search warrant failed not only to establish probable cause, but also failed the good faith standard. “For good faith to exist, there must be some factual basis connecting the place to be searched to the defendant or suspected criminal activity.”

United States v. Gourde, 382 F.3d 1003 (9th Cir. 2004) REVERSED BY EN BANC COURT – 440 F.3d 1065 (9th Cir. 2006).

The FBI learned about a website that permitted members to download child pornography. Defendant Gourde was determined to have been a member of the website for two months. The FBI obtained a search warrant, claiming that any member would have had access to the child pornography. The affiant offered various expert opinions about the M.O. of child pornographers on the internet. The Ninth Circuit held that there was no probable cause to search the defendant’s house and seize his computers based on this information. Moreover, Leon did not apply, because no officer could have relied in good faith on this warrant. There was no information that Gourde had actually downloaded any files from the website, though the FBI acknowledged that it had the capability of determining whether he did prior to the time the search was executed. See also United States v. Weber, 923 F.2d 1338 (9th Cir. 1990). REVERSED BY EN BANC COURT.

United States v. Chanthaxouchat, 342 F.3d 1271 (11th Cir. 2003)

The police pulled over the defendant’s car because the officer believed that the defendant was in violation of a municipal law that required an inside rear view mirror. Actually, there was no such law. This rendered the stop illegal and the officer’s good faith did not rescue the government. An officer’s good faith mistake of fact may support a stop, but a mistake regarding the law cannot support an illegal stop and the evidence derived from the stop must be suppressed.

United States v. Parker, 373 F.3d 770 (6th Cir. 2004)

The magistrate who issued the search warrant in this case was a part-time employee of the local jail in an administrative capacity. She did not qualify as a “neutral and detached magistrate” as required by the Fourth Amendment and the Leon good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. Among other reasons, the judge had an interest in the outcome of the proceedings because of her work as the chief lieutenant deputy jailor for financial matters including the collection of fees and billings for housing inmates and for trying to secure the financial stability of the jail. See Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 510 (1927).
United States v. DeGasso, 369 F.3d 1139 (10th Cir. 2004)

Though the police were justified for other reasons in stopping the defendant’s vehicle, one of the purported justifications was invalid. The police officer mistakenly believed that the defendant was violating a local law which regulated the use of fog lamps on cars. The highway patrol officer mistakenly believed that the use of fog lamps was improper during daylight hours unless the weather conditions required their use. Actually, the use of fog lamps is only outlawed if they are used in lieu of regular headlights during the nighttime. The Tenth Circuit held that even though the officer acted in good faith, this was not a valid basis for stopping a car and is not excused by the officer’s supposed good faith.

United States v. Hammond, 351 F.3d 765 (6th Cir. 2003)

Because of the Franks v. Delaware violations that tainted the search warrant, the court concluded that the officer could not have acted in good faith in executing the search warrant. “The number of falsehoods and half-truths told are substantial and reflect, at the every least, a reckless disregard for the truth.”

United States v. Conner, 127 F.3d 663 (8th Cir. 1997)

The police received a tip that two burglars were at a motel. Six officers went to the motel and went to the room in front of which the burglars’ car was parked. The police knocked on the door and yelled, "Open up." When one of the defendants opened the door, the police observed (through the open door) various coins (they knew a coin collection had been stolen in the burglary). The officers pulled their weapons and arrested both defendants. They then obtained a search warrant on the basis of what they observed in the room. The trial court correctly granted a motion to suppress. Though the police did not enter the room in order to see the coins, when they ordered the occupants to open the door, and thereby gained the ability to see in the room, this amounted to a search. Demanding that the occupants open the door did not amount to a consent search and there were no exigent circumstances necessitating the immediate entry into the room. The search pursuant to the search warrant was not salvaged by Leon, because the information contained in the application (the observations that were gained through the illegal entry), negate the existence of good faith. Finally, the officers would not have inevitably discovered the evidence, because absent the illegal entry, no other investigatory effort was underway to obtain a search warrant for the motel room.

United States v. Moreno-Chaparro, 180 F.3d 629 (5th Cir. 1998)

A border patrol agent improperly stopped the defendant’s car. The government urged the court to recognize that the agent acted in good faith. However, there are only three good faith exceptions to the exclusionary rule, reliance on a statute found to be unconstitutional; reliance on an outdated computer-generated warrant report; and reliance on a search warrant issued by a magistrate. Application of the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule to a warrantless stop of a vehicle without an articulable suspicion or probable cause is not proper.

United States v. Fuccillo, 808 F.2d 173 (1st Cir. 1987)

The search warrant in this case authorized the seizure of cartons of women’s clothing, the contents of those cartons, without identifying the contents of the cartons, and control slips identifying the stores intended to receive those cartons. The vice with this warrant was the failure to specify what types of clothing were subject to seizure – that is what clothing was believed to have been stolen and thus within the parameters of the search warrant affidavit. The Court holds that the warrant was overbroad on its face and that the good faith exception did not apply because of the obvious infirmity of the warrant.

United States v. Reilly, 76 F.3d 1271 (2d Cir. 1996)

The police entered the defendant’s property and observed marijuana growing in a cottage. Armed with this information, the police went to a magistrate and acquired a search warrant. The district court granted the motion to suppress and the Second Circuit affirmed. First, the court held that the cottage was within the curtilage of the property and the initial search was unlawful. The court then held that the subsequent efforts of the police to secure a search warrant did not trigger the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. The police failed to reveal essential facts to the magistrate about their prior conduct, and the layout of the property when they obtained the search warrant. The court also cited numerous cases – but did not explicitly adopt this view – holding that the good faith exception should never apply where the police obtain a search warrant with evidence that was obtained during a warrantless and unlawful search.

United States v. Wilhelm, 80 F.3d 116 (4th Cir. 1996)

The affidavit in support of the search warrant relied entirely on the statements of a tipster who the affiant/officer had never met and who was not known to be reliable. The unsupported conclusions of the officer that the informant was reliable, mature and a concerned citizen were not sufficient, since the officer had no basis for asserting that the tipster was either reliable, mature, or concerned. The affidavit was so defective that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.

United States v. Weaver, 99 F.3d 1372 (6th Cir. 1996)

An informant went to the defendant’s house with $100 of government money to attempt to buy marijuana. The government agents did not provide surveillance, or in any other way corroborate the informant’s statement that he did, in fact, buy the marijuana at that location. This information did not support the issuance of a search warrant. Nowhere in the affidavit did the affiant disclose where the marijuana was kept or stored, the quantity of marijuana in the house, or any other particularized information that would have supported the belief that there was currently marijuana on the property. Also, the affidavit did not provide any information about the informant’s reliability, other than boilerplate language about his being reliable in the past. For example, the affidavit did not say that the informant’s past reliability related to drug cases. Finally, the corroboration of innocent details, such as the name on the utilities records for the residence, was meaningless. The court also held that when a police officer supplies a bare bones affidavit which is insufficient, and then executes the warrant himself, he cannot rely on the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Here, the officer attempted no meaningful corroboration of the informant’s information and conducted no other independent investigation, other than learning the identity of the occupant of the residence. The unlawful search, therefore, was not saved by Leon.

United States v. Leake, 998 F.2d 1359 (6th Cir. 1993)

An unknown tipster informed the police that marijuana was in the defendant’s basement. The tip was not “rich” in detail; he did not identify the occupants by name; he failed to state when he “smelled” the marijuana in the house; and no future conduct was accurately predicted.
as in Gates. Also, the corroboration of the tip was virtually meaningless. The court held that Leon did not rescue this search.

United States v. Bowling, 900 F.2d 926 (6th Cir. 1990)

After obtaining a search warrant in good faith, officers learned that certain facts contained in the affidavit were not correct and would have cast a doubt on the existence of probable cause. The Sixth Circuit holds that in such circumstances the appropriate course of action is for the agents to return to the Magistrate and obtain a new warrant if the Magistrate feels that probable cause still exists. In this case, prior to executing the search warrant, other law enforcement officers obtained the subject’s consent to search the property and did not find any of the evidence and contraband which the agents had stated were present on the property in their search warrant application. The court goes on to hold that such a search does not pass the Leon test of good faith. The law was clear that probable cause must exist both when the warrant is applied for and when it is executed. The officers knew that probable cause was questionable when they executed the warrant and thus they did not act in objective good faith.

A police officer applied for a search warrant stating that a confidential informant had advised him that drugs were at a certain location. In fact, there was no confidential informant, but rather an anonymous phone caller. The anonymous caller had not, contrary to what the police officer stated in the affidavit, provided any reliable information in the past. The Sixth Circuit holds that this constitutes a Franks violation and under Leon, there is no good faith exception to the exclusionary rule in cases where the police officer intentionally makes misstatements in the search warrant affidavit.

United States v. Fletcher, 91 F.3d 48 (8th Cir. 1996)

The factors upon which the government relied in support of the detention of the defendant’s luggage at an airport were not sufficient. However, having detained the bags, the officers then obtained a search warrant and the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied. The court held that if facts are learned during an illegal detention that are then used to acquire a search warrant, the Leon good faith rule may still apply. “The relevant inquiry is whether the facts surrounding reasonable suspicion are close enough to the line of validity that the police officers were entitled to a belief in the validity of the warrant and the existence of reasonable suspicion.”

United States v. O’Neil, 17 F.3d 239 (8th Cir. 1994)

The defendant and his brother arrived at a bus station in Minnesota from a source city, Chicago. The defendant and his brother walked immediately and briskly to the exit and were carrying athletic type bags. The brother had both of the bus tickets; the defendant, when confronted by drug agents, began sweating profusely. The police seized the bag, and the defendant immediately stated that it contained cocaine. The police brought the bag to a canine dog which alerted. The magistrate then issued a warrant. The appellate court held that the seizure was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The government then argued that because there was a warrant to support the search, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule should apply. The Eighth Circuit disagreed: if the evidence presented to a magistrate is derived from an unlawful warrantless search, then the government cannot rely on the good faith exception, even if the warrant is issued by a neutral and detached magistrate. In this case, however, the defendant’s confession was independent of the seizure.
United States v. Decker, 956 F.2d 773 (8th Cir. 1992)

After making a controlled delivery of drugs to the defendant’s house, the police went to a magistrate to obtain a search warrant for the home. The form used for the search warrant, however, referred to stolen property and only allowed the search of the package. The judge testified at the suppression hearing that he really never looked at the warrant; he simply listened to the officer explain why he thought the UPS package contained drugs. In this context, the judge was a mere “rubber stamp” and as such the government failed to show that the issuing judge was a neutral and detached magistrate. The officers could not act in good faith in reliance on this warrant.

United States v. Weber, 915 F.2d 1282 (9th Cir. 1990)

The defendant’s house was searched pursuant to a search warrant which was directed at the presence of obscene material in the defendant’s home. The search warrant, however, allowed officers to search for a wide variety of magazines and advertising materials, none of which was backed up by probable cause. The only evidence against this defendant was the fact that a couple of ads addressed to him apparently depicted child pornography. The affiant’s statement about the “proclivities of pedophiles” did not support a wall-to-wall search of the house. The affidavit simply did not support a search for child pornography in general. The court rejected certain aspects of the warrant as “rambling boiler-plate recitations designed to meet all law enforcement needs.” Finally, the court concludes that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. The court’s amended decision, 923 F.2d 1338, did not alter the result.

United States v. Hove, 848 F.2d 137 (9th Cir. 1988)

In the affidavit in support of the search warrant, the police officers failed to link the suspect with the residence which was sought to be searched. This inadvertent failure to link the suspect to the premises rendered the affidavit insufficient and the officers could not have relied on it in good faith in searching the premises. This absence of good faith exists even though the officer in fact knew the link between the suspect and the residence.

United States v. Washington, 797 F.2d 1461 (9th Cir. 1986)

Sections of the federal warrant in this case which authorized the seizure of documents showing an employer/employee relationship between persons named and unnamed and evidence of defendant’s association with anyone did not meet the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment. Furthermore, the search warrant was so facially deficient that officers could not have acted in “objectively reasonable” reliance upon them.

United States v. Scales, 903 F.2d 765 (10th Cir. 1990)

Leon does not apply to searches which were not performed in reliance on a warrant. Police officers seized a defendant’s luggage and held it for seven hours prior to having it sniffed by a drug detection dog. It took another fourteen hours to obtain a search warrant. Because the pre-sniff detention was too long, the police could not rely on the “good faith exception” to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Ellis, 971 F.2d 701 (11th Cir. 1992)

A search warrant directed the police to the wrong address. When they arrived there, the occupant told them where to go to find the target location. Because the information in the warrant did not adequately describe the place to be searched, the warrant failed the particularity test. Furthermore, the officers did not execute the warrant in good faith, because the officers did not actually know the correct location (such as those cases where the warrant simply has a typographical error, but the officer knew the correct location to be searched). Here, uncertain where the defendant lived, the officers simply accepted the word of the occupant of the first house.

United States v. Taxacher, 902 F.2d 867 (11th Cir. 1990)

In judging whether the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applies, the question is whether a police officer’s belief in the existence of probable cause underlying a search warrant was objectively reasonable from the viewpoint of a reasonable officer, not a reasonable jurist.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(GPS DEVICES and CELL SITE LOCATION INFORMATION)

The Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the D.C. Circuit in United States v. Maynard, though on somewhat different grounds. In the majority decision, the Court held that placing a GPS device on a car (a trespass), coupled with the effort to acquire information by exploiting that trespass, constitutes a search. The Court held that placing the device on the car was a form of “trespass” and under traditional and historical Fourth Amendment jurisprudence a trespass qualifies as a search if the trespass is conducted for the purpose of acquiring information. In a concurring opinion, which also garnered five votes, Justice Alito questioned the trespass theory, but held that the continuous monitoring of the defendant’s car for 28 days amounted to a search.

Placing a GPS device on a probationer as part of his sex offender registry conditions is a Fourth Amendment search that requires application of the “reasonableness” requirement of the Fourth Amendment.

United States v. Thompson, 866 F.3d 1149 (10th Cir. 2017)

Four months prior to the oral argument in Carpenter, the Tenth Circuit holds that the third party doctrine governs the analysis regarding the constitutionality of § 2703(d).

United States v. Stimler, 864 F.3d 253 (3rd Cir. 2017)

In anticipation of the Supreme Court decision in Carpenter, the Third Circuit reiterates that the third party doctrine does not bar a challenge to CSLI searches. However, also consistent with Third Circuit precedent, the Court holds that the government made an adequate showing pursuant to § 2703(d) for disclosure of the information.

United States v. Carpenter, 819 F.3d 880 (6th Cir. 2016)

The Sixth Circuit joins other Circuits and holds that obtaining records from a cell tower is not a fourth amendment search.

United States v. Graham, 824 F.3d 421 (4th Cir. 2016)

The Fourth Circuit, en banc, concludes that a search warrant is not necessary for law enforcement to collect historical cell site information from the provider, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 2703.

United States v. Davis, 785 F.3d 498 (11th Cir. 2015) (en banc)

Reversing the panel opinion, the en banc Eleventh Circuit holds that 18 U.S.C. § 2703 is not unconstitutional and there is no constitutional requirement that law enforcement establish probable cause, or obtain a search warrant, prior to obtaining historical cell tower information.

In re Application of the United States For Historical Cell Site Data, 724 F.3d 600 (5th Cir. 2013)
The Fifth Circuit holds that for historical cell site data (this opinion does not involve real time cell site data), the government may rely on a § 2703(d) application to the court and it is not necessary to establish probable cause in order to obtain such information from a cell phone provider. The data requested applied to data generated when the phone was in service and when it was idle but the government told the court that the providers do not keep records when the phone is in an idle state. Thus, only information relating to when a phone is in service was sought by the application. The Fifth Circuit rejected the Third Circuit approach (see below), which held that the Magistrate can require a showing of probable cause. The Fifth Circuit held that the statute is mandatory and directs the court to issue the order upon a showing that the information is needed for an ongoing investigation. In United States v. Guerrero, 768 F.3d 351 (5th Cir. 2014), the court held that the Supreme Court decision in Riley which held that the police need a search warrant to search a cell phone, has no impact on the Fifth Circuit’s earlier ruling that held that obtaining GPS tracking information is not a Fourth Amendment search.

United States v Pineda-Moreno, 688 F.3d 1087 (9th Cir. 2012)

The Ninth Circuit, in a decision that predated Jones, held that attaching a GPS device to a vehicle was not a search. The Supreme Court remanded that decision in light of Jones for reconsideration. This is the decision that reconsidered the holding in light of Jones. This time, the Ninth Circuit held that the officers acted in good faith reliance on existing law when they attached the GPS device to the vehicle and therefore, the evidence would not be suppressed.

United States v. Skinner, 690 F.3d 772 (6th Cir. 2012)

A magistrate issued an order directing the phone company to provide “ping” information to law enforcement. The agents were then able to “ping” the target’s phone and determine his location while he was en route delivering drugs. The Sixth Circuit held that the defendant had no expectation of privacy in the data emanating from his phone that showed its location. The Sixth Circuit distinguished Jones with the observation that the plurality in Jones relied on the trespass that occurred when the GPS device in that case was planted on the defendant’s car. No such intrusion occurred in this case. The court also distinguished Justice Alito’s concurring opinion in Jones (which did not rely on the trespass), because the tracking in this case only lasted three days, which does not reach the threshold for “intensive monitoring” that Justice Alito described as sufficient to invoke the Fourth Amendment.

In re Application of U.S. for Records From Provider of Electronic Communication Service, 620 F.3d 304 (3rd Cir. 2010)

The Third Circuit canvasses the law regarding the government’s effort to obtain Cell Site Location Information (“CSLI”) from a provider. The government sought records that would show where a certain cell phone was located at various times, based on the cell tower data. The appellate court considers what statute governs the government’s request (Stored Communications Act, 18 U.S.C. § 2703(d)) and what the government must show (specific and articulable facts establishing that there are reasonable goursnds to believe that the contents of a wire or electronic communication, or the records or other information from a cell tower are relevant and material to an ongoing criminal investigation). The court distinguished United States v. Knotts, 460 U.S. 276 (1983), because the CSLI will not reveal information about what is occurring in a home, which the court views as the limit of Knotts’ holding. The court holds that the trial court may require a warrant.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Highway Stops)

The Supreme Court emphasized that the tolerable duration of a traffic stop is determined by the legitimate mission of the stop: a traffic stop may not be prolonged – even for a few minutes – in order to engage in a criminal investigation. In Rodriguez, the defendant was pulled over on the Interstate for driving on the shoulder. After concluding the traffic stop procedures (checking the license and registration and issuing a warning), the officer asked for permission to walk his dog around the car. The defendant declined this invitation. The officer detained the defendant nevertheless and deployed the dog. The time that elapsed from the issuance of the traffic warning until the dog alerted was approximately seven or eight minutes. The Supreme Court condemned the stop and ordered that the evidence be suppressed: Though the police may engage in an unrelated investigation during the course of a legitimate highway stop (such as asking questions about the defendant’s itinerary), the stop may not be prolonged absent reasonable suspicion or probable cause. Whether the officer expeditiously concludes the traffic related investigation or not, the stop may not be prolonged to conduct a general criminal investigation.

If a defendant is pulled over for an investigatory stop illegally (there was no articulable suspicion or probable cause to support the stop) and the police determine that there is an outstanding arrest warrant for the defendant, a search incident to arrest is proper and the exclusionary rule does not bar the use of evidence discovered during the search incident to arrest. The illegal stop is too attenuated from the discovery of the evidence that was the product of the legal search incident to arrest.

A good faith mistake of law by a law enforcement officer does not render an arrest, or detention unreasonable under the Fourth Amendment. Even prior to the decision whether the exclusionary rule should apply, the court must consider that a Fourth Amendment violation requires that the arrest or detention be “unreasonable”. And if the police officer has made an objectively reasonable mistake of law, then the detention of a suspect is not unreasonable. In Heien, the police officer stopped the defendant because he had only one working brake light. Under North Carolina law, cars are only required to have one working brake light. The parties agreed that the officer’s mistake of law was reasonable. The defense claimed, however, that a mistake of law by a law enforcement officer renders a detention unreasonable for Fourth Amendment purposes. The Supreme Court disagreed. For the same reason that a reasonable mistake of fact does not render a detention unreasonable, a detention prompted by a reasonable mistake of law is also not an unreasonable detention.

Navarette v. California, 134 S. Ct. 1683 (2014)

A 911 caller who did not identify herself, told the dispatcher that a specific vehicle had just run her off the road. The police went to the highway and saw the described vehicle, followed it for a few minutes (observing no traffic infractions) and then stopped the vehicle.
Drugs were located in the car. The Supreme Court held that the traffic stop was permissible under the Fourth Amendment. Because the caller correctly identified the vehicle – a fact verified the police who later observed the vehicle traveling in the direction described by the caller; and because the caller would know that his or her cell phone could be traced, there was sufficient indicia of reliability to authorize the stop. Four Justices dissented.

When the police stop a vehicle that has a driver and passenger, the passenger is also “detained” for fourth amendment purposes. Therefore, if there was no basis for the stop, the passenger may contest the admissibility of any fruits of that stop (for which he has standing), such as a statement he made, or evidence seized from his person or personal belongings.

The defendant was stopped for a routine speeding violation. While the car was stopped and the trooper was preparing a warning ticket, another officer walked a drug dog around the car. The dog alerted; the car was searched based on probable cause; and drugs were found. The Supreme Court held that this was permissible. A dog alert is not a “search” and in this case, the time it took to walk the dog around the car did not prolong the stop. Thus, there was no Terry violation and no need for a warrant or an articulable suspicion to authorize the use of the dog.

The Supreme Court reversed the Ninth Circuit which had categorically held that various innocent factors could not be considered by the police in assessing whether there was an articulable suspicion supporting a stop of a vehicle on the road. In this case, the officer’s suspicions were aroused by the location of the vehicle (in the desert of rural Arizona); the vehicle slowed when it approached the officer; children in the minivan waved at the officer in a manner that struck the officer as unusual; and the driver did not acknowledge the officer’s presence. The Ninth Circuit had held that these factors could not even be considered by the court in determining whether there was a basis for stopping the vehicle. The Supreme Court unanimously held that under the totality of the circumstances test, all facts may be considered by the court in reviewing the officer’s basis for stopping a vehicle. The Court also noted that the officer was entitled to make an assessment of the situation in light of his specialized training and familiarity with the customs of the area’s inhabitants.

United States v. Campbell, --- F.3d --- (11th Cir. 2019)

Rodriguez led the Eleventh Circuit to condemn a traffic stop in this recent Eleventh Circuit decision. The defendant in Campbell was stopped on I-20 in Georgia on the basis that his direction signal light was blinking too rapidly, indicating a possible malfunction of the wiring or a bulb. The police officer asked the driver a number of questions about his destination and decided to write him a warning ticket because of the malfunctioning light. The officer then asked a few questions focusing on whether the driver had any contraband in the car, including drugs, counterfeit items, or guns or “dead bodies.” These questions were not normal inquiries addressing traffic safety issues. The Eleventh Circuit held that asking these questions prolonged the stop – albeit just for 25 seconds – but that any delay violated Rodriguez, because there is no de minimis exception to the Fourth Amendment. In Campbell, a total of six minutes and seven seconds elapsed from the time the stop was made until the driver consented to the search. Nevertheless, the 25-second delay caused by the questioning unrelated to the traffic stop rendered the stop illegal. (The court went on to hold that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied, because Rodriguez had not been decided at the time the traffic stop was made in Campbell).

United States v. Bowman, 884 F.3d 200 (4th Cir. 2018)
In a lengthy opinion, the Fourth Circuit holds that adding up numerous factors that did not establish reasonable suspicion to prolong a stop results in nothing more than an absence of reasonable suspicion. Therefore, prolonging a stop based on an anonymous tip, plus the driver’s nervousness and inability to exactly recite his itinerary violated the Fourth Amendment.

United States v. Rodriguez-Escalera, --- F.3d --- (7th Cir. 2018)
There was insufficient information known to the trooper to prolong a traffic stop beyond the time it was necessary to accomplish the mission of the traffic stop. The driver and passenger provided inconsistent statements about the couple’s travel plans. The presence of a strong odor of air fresheners did not add to the level of reasonable suspicion.

United States v. Gorman, 859 F.3d 705 (9th Cir. 2017)
A police officer stopped the defendant without sufficient articulable suspicion and then prolonged the stop to the point that it amounted to an illegal detention. Finding no evidence during this encounter, the officer radioed ahead to another officer and told him to get a drug dog and stop the defendant again. The second officer had a dog ready when he stopped the car and the dog promptly alerted, providing probable cause to search the vehicle. The Ninth Circuit held that the second stop was the fruit of the initial illegal stop. The evidence was suppressed.

United States v. Orozco, 858 F.3d 1204 (9th Cir. 2017)
The defendant’s truck was pulled over because the police received a tip that he was hauling drugs. There was insufficient basis under Terry to stop the truck, so the government relied on the administrative warrant exception to support the legality of the stop (which led to a consent search). The Ninth Circuit held that the evidence was clear that the police did not pull the truck over on the basis of the administrative search provisions, but solely based on the tip. This was a classic “pretextual” stop and therefore the stop was not legitimate and the resulting consent to search was invalid. The Court emphasized that in the context of administrative searches (and roadblocks), the actual motive of the police does matter.

United States v. Lopez, 849 F.3d 921 (10th Cir. 2017)
The police pulled the defendants’ car over for speeding. After determining that the driver had a valid license and asking some questions to the driver and passenger, the officer returned the papers to the driver and began to walk away, but then turned back and asked for consent to search, which was denied. The officer then summoned a drug dog, which took twenty minutes to arrive. The government contended that there was sufficient basis to detain the driver and passenger because (1) nervousness; (2) unusual travel itinerary; (3) the passenger asked the police not to look in the backseat because it was too messy (it was not messy). The Tenth Circuit held that these factors did not rise to the level of an articulable suspicion justifying prolonging... the stop. The court also held that both the driver and the passenger had standing to object to the prolonged stop and the evidence would be suppressed for both of them.

United States v. Paniagua-Garcia, 813 F.3d 1013 (7th Cir. 2016)

The police saw the defendant “fiddling” with a cell phone. It is a violation of Indiana state law to “text-while-driving” but it is not a violation to talk on the phone or use GPS. The Seventh Circuit holds that the officer’s observation did not amount to an articulable suspicion that the defendant was violating the texting-while-driving prohibition.

United States v. Williams, 808 F.3d 238 (4th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was the driver of a car driving on I-85. When stopped for speeding, the officer initially decided to have the defendant take a breath test (which the defendant passed). The driver said that he and his companion were heading to Charlotte. The passenger said the same thing. (At an initial suppression hearing, the officers testified that there was a second car that was stopped that was driving in tandem with the defendant’s car and that the driver of that car disavowed knowing the defendant; though the defendant said that the other driver was his brother. When a tape of the stop of the other car was located, it revealed that the officer was wrong in his testimony and that the driver of that car expressly acknowledged that the other car was being driven by his brother). The defendant was unable to provide a permanent home address where he lived in New York. Eventually, the officer asked for consent to search, which the defendant refused. The officers then detained the defendant while a drug dog was summoned. The delay lasted two minutes, after which the drug dog alerted. The Fourth Circuit held that any detention beyond the time it takes to complete the stop’s mission is unconstitutional, and there was insufficient information to rise to the level of articulable suspicion to justify the detention for two minutes. The government’s argument (that the use of a rental car; driving on the Interstate after midnight; driving on a known drug corridor, I-85; and the inability to specify a permanent home address), were rejected by the court as insufficient factors to justify a detention.

United States v. Patiutka, 804 F.3d 684 (4th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was pulled over on the Interstate for a traffic offense. The trooper asked him for his driver’s license and asked the defendant some identifying information, including the defendant’s age. The trooper thought that the defendant gave an answer about his age that was inconsistent with the driver’s license. The trooper asked for consent to search the car. Initially, the defendant apparently consented (his foreign accent made it difficult to understand him), but shortly thereafter revoked his consent. At that point, the trooper detained the defendant and began to search again. The district court granted the motion to suppress: 1) there was no probable cause to arrest the defendant (the judge found that there was insufficient evidence that the defendant lied about his birthdate), and therefore no basis for a search incident to arrest; 2) the automobile exception did not apply, because the evidence known to the officers (even the evidence found during the aborted consent search) did not amount to probable cause. All that was found was a credit card reader and three IPads. This does not amount to probable cause to search a car.

United States v. Wilbourn, 799 F.3d 900 (7th Cir. 2015)
Law enforcement was aware of extensive evidence linking the defendant to drug dealing, including recent activities (earlier in the day). The government failed to present any evidence, however, that law enforcement’s knowledge of the defendant’s activities was ever communicated to the two officers who stopped the car in which the defendant was a passenger. While there was sufficient information known to law enforcement generally, because there was no evidence that the police who stopped the vehicle had any articulable suspicion, the evidence derived from the stop should have been suppressed.

United States v. Flores, 798 F.3d 645 (7th Cir. 2015)

In this post-Heien v. North Carolina decision, the Seventh Circuit held that the officer’s belief that the defendant’s vehicle was being operated in violation of the state license plate law was unreasonable and, therefore, the stop of the vehicle was not justifiable and the resulting search of the car was the fruit of the unlawful stop. The frame around the license plate obscured in a minimal way, one letter of the “Baja California” words on the plate. The frame was typical of the frames provided by car dealers and did not violate the state law.

United States v. Alvarado-Zarza, 782 F.3d 246 (5th Cir. 2015)

A Texas statute requires that a turn signal be activated at least 100 feet prior to making the turn. In this case, the defendant activated his turn signal less than 100 feet prior to changing lanes, but more than 100 feet from where the turn actually occurred. The Texas police officer stopped the vehicle on the basis that the defendant violated the 100-foot rule by failing to activate his signal prior to changing lanes. The Fifth Circuit, in this post-Heien decision held that the officer’s mistake of law (applying the 100-foot rule to the change of lanes, rather than the actual turn) was no reasonable and his possible mistake about whether the turn itself was less than 100-feet from the point that the signal was activated was also not reasonable. The stop of the vehicle was improper and the evidence discovered as a result of the stop should have been suppressed.

United States v. Evans, 786 F.3d 779 (9th Cir. 2015)

After completing the normal traffic stop inquiry, the police prolonged the stop of the defendant in order to determine if he was properly registered as an ex-felon. This was an unconstitutional extension of the stop (see Rodriguez, annotated above) and rendered the resulting discovery of evidence subject to suppression.

United States v. Iraheta, 764 F.3d 455 (5th Cir. 2014)

If a driver consents to the search of his automobile, including all closed containers, and there are suitcases belonging to passengers in the vehicle, if the passengers hear the consent given by the driver and don’t object, the consent is valid. However, where, as here, the consent is given outside the earshot of the passengers, the consent is not a valid consent insofar as it purports to consent to the search of passengers’ belongings.

United States v. Noble, 762 F.3d 509 (6th Cir. 2014)

The police were watching the Interstate for a vehicle that was suspected to be involved in a methamphetamine distribution operation. When the vehicle was spotted, an officer pulled behind it. The vehicle crossed a lane line without a proper signal. The officer activated his lights. The officer determined that the tint on the window was too dark. The driver and the passenger (the defendant) were excessively nervous. The driver consented to a search of the vehicle, at which point the passenger/defendant was asked to exit the vehicle and he was frisked. Because there was no basis to believe that he was armed or dangerous, there was no legitimate basis to frisk the defendant and the evidence derived from this frisk should have been suppressed. The facts that the driver and passenger were nervous and that the vehicle was suspected of being involved in a drug trafficking operation are not sufficient to support a reasonable belief that the passenger was armed or dangerous, even coupled with the officer’s experience that drug dealers are often armed. The court ridicules the notion that any passenger in a car can be frisked if the driver or the vehicle is suspected of being involved in drugs: this would presumably include “a fourth grader, a ninety-five-year-old gentleman with Parkinson’s disease, or a judge this court.” The law requires individualized suspicion of the person who is to be frisked, not a general belief that someone in the vehicle might possibly be armed.

United States v. $45,000.00, 749 F.3d 709 (8th Cir. 2014)

A police officer stopped the defendant’s vehicle on the basis that he could not read the state on the license plate and because the defendant exited the Interstate on an exit that was unusual for an interstate traveler (the defendant was heading to Utah and was passing through Nebraska) because it had no services at the exit. After giving the defendant a citation for the unreadable license plate, the officer deployed a drug dog. The dog alerted and the police found $45,000 in currency. The officer later conceded that once he came within 100 feet of the car, he could see the license plate said “Utah,” though the state name was partially obscured. Thus, there really was no violation that prompted the initial stop. The Eighth Circuit held that if there was no actual violation, the stop was improper. Because the license plate was readable within 100 feet, the stop was improper. The defendant’s decision to use a particular exit, while possibly characterized as unusual, added little to the probable cause basis for detaining him.

United States v. Saafir, 754 F.3d 262 (4th Cir. 2014)

The police stopped the defendant for a motor vehicle infraction. Dispatch advised the officer that the defendant was a gang member with prior convictions, but no outstanding warrants. The police asked for consent to search the car, but the defendant refused. Then, based on the observation of a “flask” which the officer believed contained alcohol, the officer advised the defendant that they had probable cause to search the vehicle with or without his consent. (This was not true). The defendant then sighed, and when asked if there was “something in the car” the defendant responded, that there might be; there “might be” a gun and it “might” be under the seat. In fact, there was no evidence that the flask actually contained alcohol. The probable cause that existed to search the car (defendant’s acknowledgement that he had a gun in the car) was the product of the false assertion that the police would search without a warrant based on the presence of the alcohol in the flask. As in Bumper v. North Carolina, 391 U.S. 543 (1968), which consent was the product of a false assertion of authority to search, the existence of probable cause in this case was the product of a false assertion of authority to search.

United States v. Nicholson, 721 F.3d 1236 (10th Cir. 2013)

The police stopped the defendant’s vehicle or a motor vehicle offense that did not actually occur. In short, the police thought the defendant had made an illegal left turn, when, in fact, there was nothing illegal about the method by which he made the turn. (The law related to which lane a car must enter when making a left turn). This mistake of law on the part of the officer rendered the stop improper and any evidence discovered thereafter should have been suppressed. The Tenth Circuit distinguished mistakes of fact on the part of law enforcement officers which, if reasonable, will not lead to suppression of the evidence.

United States v. Uribe, 709 F.3d 646 (7th Cir. 2013)

The defendant was driving a blue Nissan on the Interstate and there was no evidence that he was violating any motor vehicle law. A police officer driving behind him, however, determined that the car was actually registered to a white Nissan. The officer pulled the defendant over and thereafter, a canine alerted to the vehicle. The trial court determined that there was no basis for the stop and the Seventh Circuit agreed. The color of a vehicle is irrelevant because an owner may point his car without changing the registration information.

United States v. Murphy, 703 F.3d 182 (2d Cir. 2012)

The trial court’s findings of fact, which included the finding that the trooper stopped the defendant’s vehicle without having observed a traffic violation, were not clearly erroneous and therefore, the suppression of evidence was proper. The defendant’s consent to search the car was tainted by the unlawful detention.

United States v. Sowards, 690 F.3d 583 (4th Cir. 2012)

An officer’s testimony that he visually determined that a driver was traveling five miles per hour over the speed limit did not establish probable cause to support the stop of the defendant’s car. The officer did not “pace” the car, or use his radar equipment, but only visually estimated the speed and his testimony at the suppression hearing showed that he was not trained to do so.

United States v. Neff, 681 F.3d 1134 (10th Cir. 2012)

The defendant exited the highway immediately after he passed a “checkpoint sign” that alerted drivers that a drug dog would sniff cars farther ahead. The Tenth Circuit concluded that the defendant’s exiting the highway in apparent response to this “ruse-checkpoint” tactic did not provide sufficient information to justify a stop in this case.

United States v. Lewis, 672 F.3d 232 (3rd Cir. 2012)

The police received information from a reliable informant that firearms were in a white Toyota that had a license plate that included the numbers “181.” The informant did not relay his basis of knowledge, or whether the firearms were illegally possessed. The police stopped the vehicle. A gun was found on the defendant. Later, the officers determined that the vehicle had illegally tinted windows. The Third Circuit held that the traffic stop could not be supported by the illegal tint, because even though that might have been a valid basis for stopping the vehicle, the officers were not aware of that offense when the vehicle was stopped. The informant’s information was also insufficient to support the stop. It is not illegal to possess a firearm, consequently, the mere fact that a firearm is in a vehicle is not a legitimate basis to stop the vehicle.

United States v. Macias, 658 F.3d 509 (5th Cir. 2011)

1525
The duration of the traffic stop in this case lasted too long to be justified as a legitimate motor vehicle stop. The state trooper pulled the defendant over because he was not wearing a seat belt. He determined that the defendant did not have proof of insurance. The trooper then questioned the defendant at length about his work history, his itinerary, his purpose for traveling and his health. The defendant’s consent to search the vehicle was the product of the illegal detention.

United States v. Digiovanni, 650 F.3d 498 (4th Cir. 2011)

The defendant was pulled over based on a traffic violation. Yet, the police spent the first fifteen minutes of the stop talking about drugs and the defendant’s itinerary and did nothing to pursue the typical traffic violation procedures. The Fourth Circuit held that even though the entire stop, prior to the discovery of drugs, lasted only fifteen minutes, a Terry stop must not only be limited in terms of duration, but also in scope. In short, the police must act reasonably and this includes a component of acting diligently to pursue the legitimate basis of the stop. The detention in this case was not proper. The officer’s claim that he had a reasonable suspicion based on various facts – there were two shirts hanging in the back of the car; there was a hygiene bag in the back seat; the car was clean; the defendant’s hands were trembling while he was being questioned – were rejected as providing any basis for the prolonged stop.

United States v. Raney, 633 F.3d 385 (5th Cir. 2011)

The Fifth Circuit concludes that there was no violation of the Texas motor vehicle code that justified the police officer’s stop of the defendant. All evidence derived from the stop should have been suppressed.

United States v. Olivares-Pacheco, 633 F.3d 399 (5th Cir. 2011)

Two hundred miles from the border, the border patrol agents saw the defendant driving a Chevy truck with numerous passengers. Nobody made eye contact with the agents, but all of the passengers looked the opposite direction when one of the passengers pointed to something on the other side of the road. The police also saw some “brush” under the vehicle. The Fifth Circuit concluded that these two factors, even coupled with the agents’ experience, were not sufficient to support the stop of the vehicle. “If we were to affirm the district court’s denial of the suppression motion in this case, we would be doing so based on facts of an unprecedented suspicionsless nature.”

United States v. Foster, 634 F.3d 243 (4th Cir. 2011)

The Fourth Circuit condemns the government’s use of post hoc explanations to justify a police officer’s detention of a defendant. Relying on such observations as “sudden hand movement in the car” and “suddenly appearing from crouched position” are not valid bases for stopping a defendant and then claiming that these were factors that justified the stop. The Court suppressed the evidence found during a search that followed a stop based on these circumstances.

United States v. Prokuper, 632 F.3d 460 (8th Cir. 2011)

The police set up a fake road block warning advising driver’s on the interstate of a forthcoming road block. The defendant exited prior to the designated location. The police then pulled the defendant over. On the recorded encounter between the defendant and the officer, the officer said that the defendant used his turn signal when he turned off the exit ramp onto the county road, but not when he exited the interstate. At the suppression hearing, the officer acknowledged that he did not see the defendant actually exit the interstate and that the traffic stop was based on the failure to use his turn signal when he turned on the county road. The officer could not explain his contemporaneous statement that he made during the recorded stop. The district court simply found a valid stop based on the failure to use a turn signal when the turn was made on the county road. The Eighth Circuit reversed. There was no way to reconcile the officer’s testimony at the hearing and his statement on the tape.

United States v. Pena-Montes, 589 F.3d 1048 (10th Cir. 2009)

The police pulled over the car in which the defendant was a passenger because the officer could not see a license plate on the car. Upon approaching the car, the officer saw a dealer plate displayed in the rear window. The officer thought the car might be stolen, because the driver had no paperwork establishing his ownership, but after calling in the VIN number, the officer found no report that the car was reported stolen. Nevertheless, the officer questioned the defendant – the passenger – and decided that his answers to various questions were suspicious and eventually, he was arrested. The police later determined that he was an illegal alien. The Tenth Circuit held that the continued detention of the occupants of the car was not legal. Once the officer saw the dealer tag, there was no basis for detaining them. The officer’s testimony that dealer tags are limited circumstances in which a driver test-drives a car was legally incorrect. The officer’s mistake of law (as opposed to mistake of fact) could not justify the continued detention of the vehicle’s occupants. The court remanded the case to the lower court to assess the extent to which the exclusionary rule would apply in this case (i.e., excluding evidence of the defendant’s identity and status as an illegal alien).

United States v. Gross, 550 F.3d 578 (6th Cir. 2008)

A sheriff’s deputy stopped the defendant’s vehicle on the Interstate on the basis that it appeared to be straddling two lanes of traffic. The officer’s testimony, however, revealed that the defendant was essentially changing lanes, though it took some distance to complete the lane change (100 yards). The Sixth Circuit held that the testimony of the officer, even if believed in its entirety, did not establish a violation of the traffic laws that would support a stop of the vehicle. The resulting consent to search was invalid and the evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Peralez, 526 F.3d 1115 (8th Cir. 2008)

The traffic stop of the car in which the defendant was riding lasted too long. The police officer asked various drug interdiction questions that doubled the length of time that the stop would have lasted had he confined himself to the motor vehicle infraction questions. However, this did not support suppression of the evidence, because a drug dog alerted to the vehicle during this period of questioning.

United States v. Valadez-Valadez, 525 F.3d 987 (10th Cir. 2008)

The Tenth Circuit holds that stopping a vehicle because it is proceeding 10 mph below the speed limit is not a valid traffic stop in the absence of evidence that the defendant is obstructing or impeding the flow of traffic. In this case, the officer was laboring under a mistake of law (as opposed to a mistake of fact) about whether the defendant’s speed must be impeding the flow of traffic before an offense is being committed. A mistake of law does not justify a stop which is not legally permissible. “An officer’s failure to understand the plain and unambiguous law he is charged with enforcing is not objectively reasonable.”

United States v. Blair, 524 F.3d 740 (6th Cir. 2008)

The police stopped the defendant both because he had an inoperable taillight and because they thought he was involved in drug activity. Based on the evidence developed at the hearing, the court concluded that there was insufficient basis to stop the defendant based on any drug suspicion, but there was sufficient information to stop him based on the taillight violation. However, the stop lasted too long based on a taillight violation. After the information was obtained that was necessary to issue a citation, the police asked for consent to search the car (which was denied) and then said that they would detain the defendant until a drug dog arrived. This prolonged the stop beyond what was justified by a taillight infraction.

United States v. Urrieta, 520 F.3d 569 (6th Cir. 2008)

After pulling the defendant over for improper registration and weaving, the trooper determined that the defendant had a Mexican driver’s license which the trooper incorrectly believed did not authorize the defendant to drive in Tennessee. The trooper wrote a ticket for the registration violation, but prolonged the traffic stop based on his erroneous belief that the license was insufficient (and because of his suspicion that the defendant was smuggling drugs). Eventually (twenty-four minutes after the stop commenced), the trooper asked for consent to search the car, which the defendant provided. The Sixth Circuit held that the stop lasted too long, based on the trooper’s erroneous understanding of the law and the consent was tainted by the prolonged detention. The court also rejected the government’s suggestion that the trooper had a reasonable basis for believing that the defendant was smuggling drugs. The "characteristics” upon which the government relied were not sufficient to amount to a reasonable articulable suspicion. Finally, the court held that even if there was reasonable suspicion to believe that the defendant was in the country without proper documents, the trooper lacked the authority to investigate this matter.

United States v. Henderson, 463 F.3d 27 (1st Cir. 2006)

In a lengthy opinion carefully reviewing the record of the suppression hearing, the First Circuit held that the trial court erred in making a credibility determination that the officer who made the traffic stop in this case was truthful about the passenger (the defendant) not wearing a seatbelt. Based on the officer’s testimony, which was riddled with inconsistencies and contradictions, the district court should have granted the suppression motion.

United States v. Guerrero-Espinoza, 462 F.3d 1302 (10th Cir. 2006)

The defendant was a passenger in a car that was stopped on the Interstate for a motor vehicle offense. After the warning ticket was given to the driver, but before he returned to the car, the trooper began questioning the defendant. This was not a consensual continuation of the stop and was not authorized by any reasonable articulable suspicion.
United States v. Jenson, 462 F.3d 399 (5th Cir. 2006)
The police pulled the defendant over for speeding and the officer’s suspicion was aroused by varying stories told by the defendant and his passenger about what they were doing and where they worked. Some of the questioning occurred after the warning was issued. The police asked for permission to search the car, which was granted. Prior to starting the search, the police started to frisk the defendant, but he resisted, which prompted the officer to draw his weapon and order the defendant to raise his arms. The defendant was searched and a small gun was found. The Fifth Circuit held that the detention lasted longer than was justified by the information known to the police and that the consent to search was invalid, thereby also invalidating the decision to frisk the defendant.

United States v. Washington, 455 F.3d 824 (8th Cir. 2006)
The police pulled the defendant over because his windshield was cracked. A gun was found and the defendant was prosecuted for being a felon in possession of a firearm. Driving with a cracked windshield, however, is not a violation of Nebraska State law. Therefore, the stop of the defendant was unlawful and the discovery of the gun was a fruit of the illegal stop. The government’s argument that the officer acted in good faith was rejected: The mistake of law was not objectively reasonable. The question is not whether the officer subjectively believed that the law was being violated, but whether, from an objective point of view, a belief that the law was being violated was reasonable.

United States v. Cole, 444 F.3d 688 (5th Cir. 2006)
The defendant stopped at a stop sign just shy of the cross walk, but over the solid white line. He claimed that this did not violate Texas law. The government argued that the traffic stop was valid regardless of the actual Texas law, because the officer, in good faith, thought that the law required the defendant to stop before the solid white line. The Fifth Circuit held that a good faith mistake as to the law was not a cure for an invalid stop.

United States v. Hudson, 405 F.3d 425 (6th Cir. 2005)
The police had an arrest warrant for the defendant, but could not find him. The police made a warrantless, illegal stop of a car being driven by the defendant’s girlfriend and discovered that the defendant was in the car. He was searched. The Sixth Circuit held that this was an illegal search. Because the stop was illegal, the search of the defendant was the fruit of that illegality, despite the fact that the police had a warrant for the defendant.

United States v. Edgerton, 438 F.3d 1043 (10th Cir. 2006)
A trooper pulled the defendant’s car over because the tag was not visible. Upon approaching the car, the trooper saw that the temporary tag was in the rear window. This complied with state law requirements. Nevertheless, the trooper asked for the driver’s license and registration and after reviewing it, asked for consent to search the car, which was given. Drugs were then found in the trunk. The Tenth Circuit reversed: once the trooper determined, while walking up to the car, the tag was proper, he should have explained to the defendant the reason for the initial stop and then allowed her to continue on her way without requiring her to produce her license and registration. See also United States v. McSwain, 29 F.3d 558 (10th Cir. 1994).
United States v. Davis, 430 F.3d 345 (6th Cir. 2005)
When a drug dog failed to alert to the defendant’s car, which had been stopped on the highway, the police summoned a second drug dog. This unlawfully prolonged the duration of the stop (initially prompted by a speeding charge).

United States v. Laughrin, 438 F.3d 1245 (10th Cir. 2006)
Knowledge of a person’s prior criminal involvement is alone insufficient to give rise to the requisite reasonable suspicion supporting a traffic stop. In this case, the officer testified that he had stopped the defendant repeatedly in the past for driving without a license, or on a suspended license. On that basis, when the officer saw the defendant driving, he pulled him over. This was an unlawful stop. The officer’s encounter with the defendant was more than twenty-two weeks previously and this was too long a time to presume that the defendant’s license was still suspended. The information known to the officer, therefore, was too stale to support a stop of the defendant’s vehicle.

United States v. Jaquez, 421 F.3d 338 (5th Cir. 2005)
The police received a report of gun shots at a location and that a red car was involved. Fifteen minutes later, an officer pulled over the defendant who was driving a red car in the general vicinity of the reported gun shots. The Fifth Circuit held that there was insufficient information to support the stop of the defendant’s car and the subsequent consent search was invalid.

United States v. Richardson, 385 F.3d 625 (6th Cir. 2004)
After issuing the driver a warning ticket, the police asked him to “stay where he was” and then approached one of the passengers (the owner of the car) for consent to search. This direction to the driver amounted to a detention – a detention that had no basis in an articulable suspicion – and amounted to an unlawful stop that tainted any subsequent search, even a consensual search. The detention of the driver amounted to a detention of all the car’s occupants.

United States v. DeGasso, 369 F.3d 1139 (10th Cir. 2004)
Though the police were justified for other reasons in stopping the defendant’s vehicle, one of the purported justifications was invalid. The police officer mistakenly believed that the defendant was violating a local law which regulated the use of fog lamps on cars. The highway patrol officer mistakenly believed that the use of fog lamps was improper during daylight hours unless the weather conditions required their use. Actually, the use of fog lamps is only outlawed if they are used in lieu of regular headlights during the nighttime. The Tenth Circuit held that even though the officer acted in good faith, this was not a valid basis for stopping a car and is not excused by the officer’s supposed good faith.

United States v. Valenzuela, 365 F.3d 892 (10th Cir. 2004)
The police stopped a Cadillac and discovered 250 pounds of marijuana. The police believed that a pickup truck had been driving in tandem with the Cadillac and later stopped that vehicle. The pickup drove in close proximity to the Cadillac for twenty-five miles, including through two cities; both cars had Arizona license plates (this was occurring in New Mexico); the appearance of the cars suggested that they were involved in drug smuggling. The appellate court held that the information known to the police was insufficient to support stopping the pickup. Though United States v. Arvizu requires the court to consider all the factors together, the court warned that it would not pile hunch upon hunch.

United States v. Chanthaxouxat, 342 F.3d 1271 (11th Cir. 2003)

The police pulled over the defendant’s car because the officer believed that the defendant was in violation of a municipal law that required an inside rear view mirror. Actually, there was no such law. This rendered the stop illegal and the officer’s good faith did not rescue the government. An officer’s good faith mistake of fact may support a stop, but a mistake regarding the law cannot support an illegal stop and the evidence derived from the stop must be suppressed.

United States v. Boyce, 351 F.3d 1102 (11th Cir. 2003)

The defendant was stopped on the Interstate. His license was checked and the officer issued a warning citation and then asked for consent to search the vehicle. The defendant declined to consent. The officer then summoned a drug dog and instituted a warrant check. Though in United States v. Purcell, 236 F.3d 1274 (11th Cir. 2001), the court held that a warrant check that prolongs a stop is permissible, in that case, the warrant check was instituted as part of the normal traffic stop, whereas in this case, it was only initiated after the defendant declined to consent to a warrantless search. Here, the drug dog arrived in about six minutes, but the prolonged stop was unlawful and the ensuing search was unlawful.

United States v. Perkins, 348 F.3d 965 (11th Cir. 2003)

The defendants’ car was pulled over for drifting over the shoulder lane marker. This was permissible and a driver license check was also permissible. During this time, the officer questioned the driver and the passenger about their itinerary. Their answers were arguably inconsistent, and the officer testified that the defendant was extremely nervous during the questioning. Based on the inconsistent statements as well as the defendant’s nervousness, the officer decided not to allow the defendants to leave and summoned a drug dog. The Eleventh Circuit held that the duration of the detention did not per se violate the Fourth Amendment, but there was no reasonable suspicion justifying any detention after the warning ticket for the lane violation. The appellate court concluded that nervousness can be explained by the “unsettling show of authority” that can create substantial anxiety with every traffic stop.

Joshua v. Dewitt, 341 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 2003)

The defendant was stopped for speeding and the trooper determined that he, along with his passenger were acting nervous and suspicious. The trooper called his dispatcher and was told that the defendant was listed as a suspicious person who was believed to be a drug courier in a “Read & Sign” book maintained by the police department. Based on this information, the trooper detained the defendant while waiting for a canine to arrive. The dog arrived forty-two minutes later. Drugs were found on the passenger, who implicated the defendant. State trial counsel failed to challenge the legitimacy of the Read and Sign book that prompted the detention. Instead, he simply challenged the length of the detention. Based on United States v.
Hensley, 469 U.S. 221 (1985), a detention based on a “flyer” or something else akin to a “Read and Sign” book requires proof that the author of the flyer had reasonable suspicion to list the suspect as a criminal. In this case, however, the state offered no proof that the Read and Sign book was based on reliable information. Moreover, the state’s contention that the defendant’s nervousness justified a detention was meritless. Nervousness may be a basis for an articulable suspicion, but only when it is coupled with evasive behavior. The state trial lawyer’s failure to challenge the stop and search on this basis was ineffective assistance of counsel. The Sixth Circuit also noted that Hensley is not limited to initial stops, but also covers situations in which a stop is prolonged based on this type of information. The Sixth Circuit concludes that not only was trial counsel ineffective, but appellate counsel was, as well.

United States v. Childs, 277 F.3d 947 (7th Cir. 2002) (en banc)

In this en banc decision, the Seventh Circuit holds that the nature of the questions that are asked a driver who is stopped for a motor vehicle infraction does not alter a lawful stop into an unlawful stop, unless the questioning has the effect of lengthening the detention beyond what would be justified by the traffic infraction.

United States v. Patzer, 277 F.3d 1080 (9th Cir. 2002)

The police lacked probable cause to arrest the defendant for DUI. The officer may have believed that the defendant had ingested marijuana, but there was no information suggesting that this impaired his ability to drive which is an element of the DUI offense. Absent probable cause to arrest the defendant, the ensuing search of his automobile could not be justified as a search incident to arrest. Similarly, the defendant’s consent was tainted by the unlawful arrest. Finally, the court ordered suppressed the statements made by the defendant that were the product of the illegal arrest.

United States v. Yousif, 308 F.3d 820 (8th Cir. 2002)

The police set up a fake “drug interdiction” road block, alerting drivers that it was located farther down the highway. Between the location of the notice and the supposed checkpoint was an exit with no services for motorists. The police then stopped the cars that exited. The checkpoint in this case occurred prior to the Supreme Court’s decision in Indianapolis v. Edmond, 531 U.S. 32 (2000). The Eighth Circuit concluded that the fact that the defendant exited the highway after seeing a drug checkpoint sign, even when viewed in combination with other factors, was not a sufficient basis for stopping the vehicle.

United States v. Townsend, 305 F.3d 537 (6th Cir. 2002)

The facts known to the state highway patrol officer were not sufficient to justify a prolonged stop. The facts were: the defendant promptly raised his hands in the air when stopped and promptly had his documentation ready to give to the officer; he readily admitted driving over the speed limit; he said he was driving to his sister’s house, but did not know the address and was going to call her when he arrived. Moreover, the police saw food wrappers in the car, three cell phones and a bible. The officer also felt a “roll of money” when he frisked the defendant. The Sixth Circuit upheld the lower court’s decision suppressing the search. Even after United States v. Arvizu, 534 U.S. 266 (2002), the courts are not obligated to defer to the police officer’s experience in evaluating the lawfulness of a detention.
United States v. Beck, 140 F.3d 1129 (8th Cir. 1998)

The defendant was stopped on the Interstate for following another vehicle too closely. When the officer explained the basis of the stop to the defendant, he appeared nervous. He was driving a rental car (rented by his wife) and had started his trip in California (a source state). He had fast food trash on the front passenger floorboard. No luggage was observed in the back seat. After the defendant was given a warning ticket, the officer told him he was free to leave and started walking back to his car. He stopped, however, and asked the defendant if he had any guns or drugs. The defendant answered, "No." The officer then asked for consent to search the car and the defendant asked why, after which the officer and defendant engaged in a colloquy. The defendant asked what would happen if he refused consent. The officer responded that he would walk a drug dog around the car. A drug dog arrived and was walked around the car. He alerted. Thereafter, the defendant admitted having some drugs in his briefcase. The Eighth Circuit reversed the conviction. The detention of the driver, without his consent, after the warning ticket was given to him and he asked what would happen if he refused consent, was unlawful. When the officer told him that even if he did not consent, a drug dog would be walked around the outside of the car, the defendant could not reasonably believe that he was free to leave. The facts known to the police at that time did not create a reasonable articulable suspicion that the defendant had any contraband in the car, so there was no lawful basis for detaining the defendant. The court reviewed the factors, outlined above, and concluded that the starting point of the defendant's travel (California) is not suspicious (the court reviewed the case law, showing that dozens of states and cities around the country have been identified in other cases as "source cities"). Fast food wrappers, moreover, are hardly uncommon in vehicles traveling across country. Also, nervousness is not uncommon in people when confronted by law enforcement officers. Finally, the driver's explanation that he was going to North Carolina to look for a job was not suspicious.

United States v. Winningham, 140 F.3d 1328 (10th Cir. 1998)

The defendant was stopped by border patrol agents and told that he was suspected of smuggling aliens. He consented to a search of the van and other than one passenger, nobody was found. The defendant then was told that the agent had information that the defendant was smuggling drugs. The defendant again consented to a search of his van, but it took about five minutes for a drug dog to arrive. The dog jumped into the open door of the van and alerted to the presence of drugs near the rear vent. The defendant did not consent to having the dog enter the vehicle. The trial court suppressed the evidence, concluding that the defendant's consent did not encompass allowing the dog to enter the vehicle. The Court of Appeals affirmed. There was no reasonable suspicion justifying the detention of the driver and the van after the initial search yielded nothing; therefore, the only basis for holding the van for five or six minutes, was the driver's consent. The consent that was given, the appellate court concluded, was not voluntary: the driver had been asked to exit the vehicle and stand next to three armed officers. After the initial search ended, the driver was not told that he was free to leave. When the driver started walking away, a law enforcement officer followed him. These factors, taken together, show that any consent given by the driver was not free and voluntary.

United States v. Miller, 146 F.3d 274 (5th Cir. 1998)
A deputy sheriff was patrolling the highway, looking for vehicles engaged in traffic violations so that he could pursue drug interdiction. The deputy observed the defendant driving a motor home with its left turn signal on, but the vehicle neither made a left turn, nor changed lanes. For this reason, the deputy pulled the defendant over. After issuing the defendant a warning citation, he asked for consent to search the vehicle and the defendant agreed. Eighty kilograms of marijuana were found. The district court admitted the evidence. The Fifth Circuit reversed: driving with a left turn signal on (without making a left turn at the first intersection) is not a violation of Texas law and there was, therefore, no basis for stopping the vehicle. The defendant’s consent to search was not valid in light of the illegal stop. The Court observed that the flip-side of the decision in Whren v. United States, 517 U.S. 806 (1996) (allowing the stop of a vehicle for a traffic-related offense, even if the real motivation of the officer is to search for drugs), is that only a valid objectively-grounded traffic-related detention can support such a stop.

United States v. Jones, 149 F.3d 364 (5th Cir. 1998)

The defendant’s vehicle, with fresh mud on it, was observed driving north, approximately 80 miles north of the Mexico – Texas border. The Fifth Circuit held that the evidence supporting the stop of the vehicle (and the discovery of marijuana) was insufficient. First, the court held that there was insufficient justification for believing that the vehicle had recently crossed the border. The court also noted, with considerable skepticism, the government’s argument that the reason that the Border Patrol agent was suspicious, was because the defendant did not look like a smuggler – thus raising the agent’s suspicion that he was a cleverly disguised smuggler. Also, the court rejected the government’s contention that the defendant was acting suspicious because he frequently glanced back at the agent, who was tailgating him for several miles, prior to the stop.

United States v. Salzano, 158 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 1998)

The defendant was stopped while driving a motor home. The officer initially stopped the vehicle because it strayed off the road. When the officer questioned the defendant, he found him to be nervous and also determined that the rental papers indicated that there were supposed to be three occupants (and the defendant was alone). The officer was also suspicious that the defendant had rented a motor home to drive across country and that the trip had originated in California. His suspicions were further aroused by the scent of evergreen in the vehicle. He requested permission to search the vehicle and the defendant declined. The officer then summoned a drug dog which arrived twenty-seven minutes later. The Tenth Circuit holds that the detention of the defendant for 27 minutes was not supported by an articulable suspicion and reverses the denial of the motion to suppress. The court declined to accept the government’s invitation to find more suspicion in the aggregate of these factors, than the sum of its parts: “It is impossible for a combination of wholly innocent factors to combine into a suspicious conglomeration unless there are concrete reasons for such an interpretation.”

United States v. Mesa, 62 F.3d 159 (6th Cir. 1995)

The defendant and a passenger in her car were stopped for speeding. The defendant was placed in the back of the patrol car which would not open from the inside. The officer issued the citation, but rather than letting the defendant out, he then questioned the two about their destination. He believed that they acted nervously, and gave slightly inconsistent stories about their reasons for travelling. He requested consent to search the car and though a drug dog did not alert, the search continued. Eventually, the police discovered cocaine in the back. This was an unlawful search. Once the traffic citation was issued, the police should have immediately released the defendant. This was an unlawful detention after the citation was issued. The Sixth Circuit has suggested, in a later opinion, that the Mesa decision is no longer good law, following the decision in Ohio v. Robinette, 519 U.S. 33 (1996). See United States v. Burton, 334 F.3d 514 (6th Cir. 2003).

1534

United States v. Garcia, 23 F.3d 1331 (8th Cir. 1994)
The defendants were driving on the interstate in a rental car. The driver veered off the road onto the shoulder and a trooper pulled the vehicle over. The defendants were Hispanic. One defendant stated that they were moving to El Paso with furniture; the other stated that they were simply taking the furniture there. The trooper reviewed the defendants’ identification and received consent to search the cargo area of the vehicle which he did. He radioed in for a computer check of the defendants, but there was a delay in obtaining this report. He allowed the defendants to leave. Later, he received a report that one of the defendants had a prior firearms violation. He called ahead and asked that the vehicle be stopped again. He went to the scene and asked for further consent to search the car, which he obtained. This was an illegal stop. There was no basis for stopping the truck a second time. There was no information derived during the first stop which created an articulable suspicion justifying a second search – including the subsequent discovery that one of the defendants had a criminal record.

United States v. Rodriguez, 976 F.2d 592 (9th Cir. 1992)
The defendant, a Hispanic, drove on the Interstate past where two agents were sitting in their marked cars. The defendant did not acknowledge the agents’ presence and appeared nervous as he drove past. The officers testified that the car appeared to go over bumps “sluggishly” (thus indicating that it was weighted down with something). The court rejected these bases for stopping the vehicle: “In short, the agents in this case saw a Hispanic man cautiously and attentively driving a 16 year old Ford with a worn suspension, who glanced in his rear view mirror while being followed by agents in a marked Border Patrol car. This profile could certainly fit hundreds or thousands of law abiding daily users of the highways of Southern California.” The court concluded, “We are not prepared to approve the wholesale seizure of miscellaneous persons, citizens or non-citizens, who are seen driving any place near the Mexican border – driving with caution and circumspection – in the absence of well-founded suspicion based on particular, individualized, and objectively observable factors which indicate that the person is engaged in criminal activity.”

Nicacio v. United States Immigration Naturalization Service, 797 F.2d 700 (9th Cir. 1986)
The I.N.S. could not stop the vehicle to search for illegal aliens merely based upon the appearance and dress factors such as Hispanic appearance, work clothing, dirty, unkempt appearance and “lean and hungry look.”

United States v. Salzano, 158 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 1998)
The defendant was stopped on the interstate, driving a motor home, after it strayed onto the shoulder. The trooper detained the defendant for twenty-seven minutes while awaiting the arrival of a drug dog. The information known to the trooper did not amount to an articulable suspicion. The information upon which the government relied to justify the stop were: the driver was nervous; the unusual decision to rent a mobile home to drive across country; the fact that there was more than one person listed on the rental agreement, but the defendant was alone; and other innocuous factors.

United States v. Wood, 106 F.3d 942 (10th Cir. 1997)

The defendant was pulled over on I-70 for speeding. The driver rented the car in California and said that he was unemployed, but was enjoying the drive back to Topeka, after traveling to California with his sister. He appeared nervous. The trooper determined that he had a narcotics conviction. This was not sufficient information to justify a detention of the vehicle while waiting for a drug dog to arrive. The court noted that the presence of fast-food wrappers in the car, as well as maps on the passenger seat did not add to the articulable suspicion calculus.

United States v. Gregory, 79 F.3d 973 (10th Cir. 1996)

The defendant was driving on I-70 in Utah when he was observed by a trooper weaving over the shoulder line. The defendant was stopped and following a brief encounter, consented to a search of his vehicle. The trooper’s stop of the vehicle was not lawful. Weaving over the shoulder line one time is not an offense under Utah law and there was insufficient evidence that the defendant was DUI or was a danger to the public. In this case, moreover, the ensuing consent was not untainted by the illegal stop. The court concluded that it was evident that, from the moment the vehicle was stopped, the trooper’s sole interest was in viewing the contents of the vehicle.

United States v. Angulo-Fernandez, 53 F.3d 1177 (10th Cir. 1995)

The police approached the defendant who was on the side of the road with his car which was apparently disabled. After a brief discussion, the officer requested the registration for the vehicle, as well as the defendant’s driver’s license, which was provided. There were no problems in the “records check.” The evidence did not reveal whether the officer then returned the documentation to the defendant. The officer did request an opportunity to search the car, however. A search revealed a considerable quantity of cocaine. The trial court erroneously failed to decide whether the consent was voluntary, in light of the length of the preceding encounter, and did not indicate whether the defendant was in possession of his documents, and thus free to leave.

United States v. Jones, 44 F.3d 860 (10th Cir. 1995)

In this case, where the defendant was stopped on the highway and questioned, one of the reasons that the officer testified that he had an articulable suspicion that the car was carrying contraband was that the driver did not appear nervous, suggesting that she had prior experience with being stopped. The Tenth Circuit agreed that this was a factor which the officer could consider in assessing whether there was an articulable suspicion justifying further investigation.

United States v. McSwain, 29 F.3d 558 (10th Cir. 1994)

A trooper stopped the defendant’s vehicle because it was unclear whether his temporary tag had expired. Upon approaching the vehicle, it was immediately apparent to the trooper that the tag had not expired. Nevertheless, the trooper questioned the defendant about his itinerary and requested to see his license and registration. The trooper then asked his dispatcher to run a computer check on the defendant, which revealed a record for drug and gun violations. The trooper returned to the defendant and asked for permission to search the vehicle, which the defendant gave. This was an invalid consent, based on a stop which exceeded the scope of a permissible Terry stop. By the time the trooper asked for the defendant’s identification and registration, he had already dispelled all basis for the stop – the temporary tag’s expiration date.

United States v. Sandoval, 29 F.3d 537 (10th Cir. 1994)

The defendant was stopped for speeding. He produced his license and registration, which was checked and came back normal. After returning the paperwork to the defendant, the defendant asked if “that is it?” to which the officer responded, “No, wait a minute.” The officer decided to ask the defendant some additional questions about his criminal background (he learned during the license check about an arrest for a narcotics violation several years earlier). This questioning amounted to an additional detention, which was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The fact that the defendant had an earlier arrest – and no conviction – for a drug offense, does not justify a Terry stop of any duration. Even though the defendant then gave consent to search the car, this consent occurred after the detention had become unlawful and it was, therefore, not a free and voluntary consent. The evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Fernandez, 18 F.3d 874 (10th Cir. 1994)

The defendant was stopped on the interstate, because the trooper considered the tinted windows to be in violation of state law and for improper lane travel. The trooper examined the driver’s license and issued a citation. However, rather than allowing the defendant to proceed, the trooper held the identification and questioned the driver and then asked for consent to search the car. The search yielded 121 kilograms of cocaine. The Tenth Circuit concluded that there were insufficient facts to support the detention of the defendant beyond the time necessary to examine the license and issue the citation (i.e., nervousness and “unusual behavior”). The subsequent consent to search the vehicle was tainted by the unlawful detention. Among other factors considered in determining whether the consent was free and voluntary was the trooper’s failure to advise the defendant that he had the right to refuse.

United States v. Walker, 941 F.2d 1086, on rehearing from 933 F.2d 812 (10th Cir. 1991)

The defendant was stopped for speeding. The officer then began questioning the defendant about contraband. While holding the defendant’s license and registration in his hand, the officer then asked for permission to search the car. Though the defendant consented, the search was invalid. The continued detention of the defendant beyond the time necessary to issue the speeding ticket was not based on any articulable suspicion and the only issue for remand was whether the consent was invalid in light of the illegal detention.

United States v. Valdez, 931 F.2d 1448 (11th Cir. 1991)

Police were following a car which they believed contained narcotics. The car made a right turn at a red light which caused a car coming from the left to slow down. The police followed the car another eighteen blocks and then stopped the vehicle for the traffic offense of interfering with another car’s right-of-way. This was an invalid pretext stop. The officer who made the stop testified that he had been told by narcotics officers to follow the car and make a stop. “In determining when an investigatory stop is unreasonably pretextual, the proper inquiry is not whether the officer could validly have made the stop but whether under the same circumstances a reasonable officer would have made the stop in the absence of the invalid purpose.” This case would probably be decided differently after Whren v. United States, 517 U.S. 806 (1996).
United States v. Campbell, 920 F.2d 793 (11th Cir. 1991)

The police received a tip from an informant that the defendant would be hauling marijuana into Montgomery, Alabama in a particular pickup truck. When the truck arrived at the designated location, the police arrested the occupants and brought the pickup to the police station where it was sniffed by one dog who did not alert, then another dog, who did. The defendant then consented to a search of the car. The search was illegal. The information supplied by the informant was not sufficient to rise to the level of probable cause. At most, pursuant to Alabama v. White, the police had sufficient information to conduct an investigatory stop. Here, however, the length of the detention was beyond a mere Terry stop. The consent was clearly the product of the illegal detention.

United States v. Tapia, 912 F.2d 1367 (11th Cir. 1990)

The defendant was stopped on Interstate 59 travelling towards Birmingham, Alabama. The officer claimed to have had a reasonable suspicion based on the fact that the vehicle had out-of-state plates, the driver was Mexican and appeared to be nervous or shaking during the initial confrontation with the trooper. The officer also stated that the vehicle appeared to have few pieces of luggage. This does not constitute “reasonable suspicion” and did not justify the detention of the driver and the subsequent consent form signed by the defendant was invalid.

United States v. Strickland, 902 F.2d 937 (11th Cir. 1990)

The defendant consented to a search of his vehicle, including consent to search the trunk and luggage. This did not, however, include permission to slash his spare tire to investigate its contents. Nevertheless, what the police learned from their lawful search was sufficient to give them probable cause to continue the search and thereby discover the contraband. The court holds that when a person gives a general statement of consent to search without express limitations, the scope of the search is, nevertheless, not limitless. Rather, it is constrained by the bounds of reasonableness: What police officers can reasonably interpret the defendants consent to have encompassed.

United States v. Miller, 821 F.2d 546 (11th Cir. 1987)

The Eleventh Circuit follows the Smith decision in holding that this highway stop was a mere pretext to search for drugs because of the occupants’ fitting the drug courier profile on the highway.

United States v. Smith, 799 F.2d 704 (11th Cir. 1986)

The Eleventh Circuit holds that a highway stop by Trooper Vogel was clearly a pretextual stop. Though the officer stated that there may have been a one inch weave over the center line, the Court finds that the sole purpose of the stop was a search for drugs which was not supported by any articulable suspicion or probable cause.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Incident to Arrest)

_Riley v. California_, 134 S. Ct. 2473 (2014)

The Supreme Court decided that a cell phone may not be searched incident to arrest. Neither officer safety, nor the need to preserve evidence justifies the need to dispense with the warrant requirement.

In _New York v. Belton_, 453 U.S. 454 (1981), the Court held that the police may conduct a search incident to arrest of the interior of a car whenever an occupant is arrested. In this case, the Court concluded that the same rationale allows the police to search a vehicle, even if the occupant is arrested by the police after exiting the car and is not within reach of the interior of the vehicle.

Five years after _Thornton_ was decided, the Supreme Court followed up on the promise of the five Justices in _Thornton_ who expressed displeasure with the scope of _Belton_, in the case of _Arizona v. Gant_, 129 S. Ct. 1710 (2009). Though stating that _Belton_ was not expressly overruled, the Court determined that _Belton_ required significant reigning in and held that a search incident to arrest, following an automobile stop, is only permissible “if it is reasonable to believe that the arrestee might access the vehicle at the time of the search or that the vehicle contains evidence of the offense of arrest.” Thus, if the arrestee is in the back of the patrol car and restrained, the police may not automatically search the passenger compartment of the vehicle, simply because the defendant was arrested in, or immediately after exiting, the vehicle. What matters is the accessibility of the vehicle at the time of the search, not at the time of the arrest. A search may occur, however, even if the arrestee is not within reach of the car if there is “reason to believe” (i.e., not necessarily probable cause) that evidence of the crime for which the defendant is arrested is in the vehicle. In _Gant_, the defendant was arrested after he exited his vehicle in his driveway. He was arrested based on a warrant for a previous offense. There was no reason to believe that there was any evidence in the vehicle relating to the offense listed in the warrant. He was arrested and handcuffed in the back of the patrol car when the search of his vehicle occurred. The Court held that _Belton_ – as heretofore construed – did not authorize this search and the evidence should have been suppressed.

If a defendant is pulled over for an investigatory stop illegally (there was no articulable suspicion or probable cause to support the stop) and the police determine that there is an outstanding arrest warrant for the defendant, a search incident to arrest is proper and the exclusionary rule does not bar the use of evidence discovered during the search incident to arrest. The illegal stop is too attenuated from the discovery of the evidence that was the product of the legal search incident to arrest.

The Fourth Amendment is violated if a defendant who refuses to take a blood test after having been arrested for DUI, is prosecuted for the refusal. But it is not a Fourth Amendment violation if the police demand that the defendant take a breath test. A blood test, unlike a breath test, is too intrusive to be subject to an implied consent provision. Compare Maryland v. King.

Smith v. Ohio, 494 U.S. 541 (1990)

In a per curium opinion, the Supreme Court holds that evidence found during a purported search incident to arrest cannot be relied upon to justify the arrest. The Supreme Court holds, “Justifying the arrest by the search and at the same time the search by arrest just will not do.” It is axiomatic that an incident search may not precede an arrest and serve as part of its justification.

When the police make a traffic stop and issue a citation and do not make a custodial arrest, the police may not thereafter conduct a search of the vehicle on the theory that it is a search incident to arrest.

United States v. Patiutka, 804 F.3d 684 (4th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was pulled over on the Interstate for a traffic offense. The trooper asked him for his driver’s license and asked the defendant some identifying information, including the defendant’s age. The trooper thought that the defendant gave an answer about his age that was inconsistent with the driver’s license. The trooper asked for consent to search the car. Initially, the defendant apparently consented (his foreign accent made it difficult to understand him), but shortly thereafter revoked his consent. At that point, the trooper detained the defendant and began to search again. The district court granted the motion to suppress: (1) there was no probable cause to arrest the defendant (the judge found that there was insufficient evidence that the defendant lied about his birthdate), and therefore no basis for a search incident to arrest; (2) the automobile exception did not apply, because the evidence known to the officers (even the evidence found during the aborted consent search) did not amount to probable cause. All that was found was a credit card reader and three iPads. This does not amount to probable cause to search a car.

United States v. Camou, 773 F.3d 932 (9th Cir. 2014)

The defendant was stopped in his vehicle and charged with smuggling undocumented aliens. He was brought to the police station where he and one of his passengers were questioned. The passenger admitted that they regularly were engaged in smuggling activity. The police seized the defendant’s cell phone and listed it on a property report as seized evidence. Approximately 90 minutes later, the police searched the contents of the phone. The Ninth Circuit held that this was a not proper search incident to arrest search, not a proper exigent circumstances search and not a proper “automobile exception” search. In addition, the court rejected the inevitable discovery doctrine and the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule as reasons not to apply the exclusionary rule.

United States v. McCraney, 674 F.3d 614 (6th Cir. 2012)
The limitations on a search incident to arrest announced in Gant are not limited to situations where the defendant is handcuffed in the rear of a patrol car. Here, the defendants were outside the car, surrounded by several law enforcement officers. A search of the car was not a valid search incident to arrest.

United States v. Camacho, 661 F.3d 718 (1st Cir. 2011)

The police went to the scene of a street brawl and saw two people walking on the sidewalk. Suspicious that they had been involved in the brawl, the police pulled their car in front of the defendant, stopping him and then frisked the defendant and felt a gun. The defendant pushed the officer’s hand away, after which the defendant was arrested. The First Circuit concluded that the initial encounter was a seizure; there was no lawful basis for the seizure (i.e., there was no articulable suspicion); the frisk was not proper; the discovery of the weapon was not the result of a valid search incident to arrest.

United States v. Edwards, 666 F.3d 877 (4th Cir. 2011)

The police arrested the defendant and then unbuckled his pants, pulled out his underwear and when they saw a baggie tied around his penis, they used a knife to remove it. The Fourth Circuit held that this was an unreasonable strip search and search incident to arrest, that violated the defendant’s rights under the Fourth Amendment.

United States v. Curtis, 635 F.3d 704 (5th Cir. 2011)

The Fifth Circuit concludes that the police may search a cell phone, including text messages when a defendant is arrested in possession of the cell phone. The appellate court reviews the precedent in numerous circuits before reaching this decision.

United States v. Gross, 662 F.3d 393 (6th Cir. 2011)

The police stopped an automobile in which the defendant was a passenger. The stop was found to be improper, because there was no articulable suspicion supporting the stop. During the course of the stop, the police learned that there was an arrest warrant for the defendant. The question in the Sixth Circuit was whether the existence of an arrest warrant and the evidence found during a search incident to the arrest was the fruit of the illegal stop, and did the exclusionary rule bar the introduction of the evidence. The Sixth Circuit held that the exclusionary rule did apply and the evidence would be suppressed. Contrary authority in the Seventh Circuit in United States v. Green, 111 F.3d 515 (7th Cir. 1997), was rejected by the Sixth Circuit.

United States v. Maddox, 614 F.3d 1046 (9th Cir. 2010)

If a defendant has been arrested, handcuffed and placed in a police car, the police may not then search a container that was taken from the defendant’s possession under the search incident to arrest theory. In this case, the defendant’s key chain was taken from him and after the defendant was arrested and secured, the police opened a small vial that was attached to the chain. While the key chain was in the defendant’s possession at the time of the defendant’s arrest, it was not within his reach after he was arrested and detained in the police car and at that point a search incident to arrest of the key chain was not valid.
United States v. Caseres, 533 F.3d 1064 (9th Cir. 2008)

The defendant was driving his car and was seen by the police, who thought the car had improper window tinting and that the defendant had not properly signaled a turn. The police followed the defendant, but did not activate their emergency lights. The defendant parked his car and started walking towards his house. The police parked behind the defendant’s car and then walked to catch up with the defendant who was finally approached on the front lawn of a neighbor. The police told the defendant to stop; he fled. After catching him, the police went back to the car and searched it. This was not proper. This was not a proper inventory search or a proper search incident to arrest.

United States v. Hudson, 405 F.3d 425 (6th Cir. 2005)

The police had an arrest warrant for the defendant, but could not find him. The police made a warrantless, illegal stop of a car being driven by the defendant’s girlfriend and discovered that the defendant was in the car. He was searched. The Sixth Circuit held that this was an illegal search. Because the stop was illegal, the search of the defendant was the fruit of that illegality, despite the fact that the police had a warrant for the defendant.

United States v. Patzer, 277 F.3d 1080 (9th Cir. 2002)

The police lacked probable cause to arrest the defendant for DUI. The officer may have believed that the defendant had ingested marijuana, but there was no information suggesting that this impaired his ability to drive which is an element of the DUI offense. Absent probable cause to arrest the defendant, the ensuing search of his automobile could not be justified as a search incident to arrest. Similarly, the defendant’s consent was tainted by the unlawful arrest. Finally, the court ordered suppressed the statements made by the defendant that were the product of the illegal arrest.

United States v. Myers, 308 F.3d 251 (3rd Cir. 2002)

The police were called to an apartment regarding a disturbance. When the police arrived, a young girl was on the front step and she told the officer that her mother and her boyfriend were inside fighting and the boyfriend had a gun. The officer entered the apartment and after finding the defendant behind a door arrested him. The officer observed the defendant throw a bag on the ground. The defendant was handcuffed and the woman was brought downstairs. The officer then went back upstairs and opened the bag, finding a gun. The Third Circuit held that there was no probable cause to arrest the defendant, and even if there had been probable cause, the search of the bag was not incident to the arrest and was therefore unlawful. Regarding probable cause, at most there was some indication that there had been a simple assault, but that had not occurred in the officer’s presence and thus he could not arrest the defendant for that offense. Regarding the search, with the defendant handcuffed and immobilized, there was no need to search the bag.

United States v. Johnson, 16 F.3d 69 (5th Cir. 1994), aff’d on rehearing, 18 F.3d 293 (5th Cir. 1994)

The defendant was in his office which was approximately ten feet by twelve feet. Law enforcement officers served him with an arrest warrant. Approximately eight feet from where he was sitting was the defendant’s briefcase. The officer opened the briefcase claiming that it was a search incident to the arrest. The Fifth Circuit holds that the briefcase was not within the reach of... the defendant at the time of the arrest; therefore it was not a valid search incident to arrest. The defendant was never handcuffed and the officer conceded that he did not fear that the defendant had a gun, or that he would destroy evidence. His search of the briefcase was “just good police work.” Well, not really. The Fifth Circuit reversed based on this “police work.”

United States v. Strahan, 984 F.2d 155 (6th Cir. 1993)

The defendant was arrested approximately thirty feet away from his car. The police searched his glove compartment. This was not a proper search incident to arrest. Even though the police observed the defendant exit his vehicle shortly before his arrest, the glove compartment was not accessible to him and thus could not be searched without a warrant. While Belton allows a search of the entire contents of the car, even after the defendant is removed, the initial stop must occur when the defendant is in the car.

United States v. Levy, 990 F.2d 971 (7th Cir. 1993)

A local ordinance outlawed face-to-face solicitations. In this case, a telemarketer called a billiards parlor operator and asked for a twenty-five dollar donation for the Police Federation. The billiards operator agreed. The telemarketer sent a runner to pick up the donation and the police met him there, arrested him and found a gun in his possession. He was charged with a 922(g) violation (possession of a firearm by a convicted felon). Because the defendant had not violated the ordinance, however, there was no probable cause to arrest him and the search incident was improper. The evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Berkowitz, 927 F.2d 1376 (7th Cir. 1991)

When the police come to the door to arrest the person who lives in the house, a search incident to arrest inside the house would only be permissible if the arrest occurred inside the house and police were lawfully in the house. If, however, the police come to the house and after the defendant opens the door, the police barge in and make an arrest, the entry was unlawful and the ensuing search would be illegal. In short, the police must have a warrant to make an arrest inside the defendant’s home unless the defendant acquiesces to the officer’s entry after learning of his intent to make an arrest.

United States v. Shephard, 21 F.3d 933 (9th Cir. 1994)

State officers were given verbal authority by a probation officer to arrest a probationer for violation of the terms of probation. After arresting him, the officers received permission by the probationer to go into his room and retrieve his wallet. While in the room, they discovered a gun. He was prosecuted in federal court for possession of the weapon. Because the arrest by state agents was illegal under state law (the police need a written order to arrest a probationer, not verbal authority), and because the search was sufficiently linked to the unlawful arrest, the evidence should have been suppressed. The federal court looks to state law to determine if an arrest by a state officer for a state offense is lawful. Ker v. California, 374 U.S. 23 (1963).

United States v. Mota, 982 F.2d 1384 (9th Cir. 1993)

The State of California does not permit a custodial arrest based on an infraction (such as selling corn-on-the-cob without a license). In this case, the state agents arrested the defendants and then during a search, discovered counterfeit currency. The federal government could not use the evidence because the search incident to arrest was invalid insofar it was predicated on an illegal arrest (under state law).
United States v. Parr, 843 F.2d 1228 (9th Cir. 1988)

The defendant was stopped by a police officer who suspected that he was driving with a suspended license. The suspect was placed in the patrol car. Subsequently, the police officer searched the defendant’s car and found various contraband. The government contended that this was a lawful arrest and the search of the car was permissible under the search incident to arrest doctrine. The Ninth Circuit disagreed, holding that this was a lawful Terry stop, which does not authorize a search incident to arrest. The search of the automobile was improper and the Motion to Suppress should have been granted.

United States v. Vasey, 834 F.2d 782 (9th Cir. 1987)

The defendant was arrested, handcuffed and placed in a patrol car. Thirty to forty-five minutes later, the officers executed a search of the car contending that it was “incident to arrest.” The Ninth Circuit holds that the evidence should have been suppressed. The court initially concluded that it was not an inventory search because the subjective intent of the officers was to conduct a search for evidence rather than to conduct a search to inventory the contents. The court further concluded that it was an improper search incident to arrest because of the amount of time which had expired between the arrest and the search, the inaccessibility of the car to the defendant at the time of the search, and because the defendant was handcuffed and removed from the car at the time of the search.

United States v. Lugo, 978 F.2d 631 (10th Cir. 1992)

Defendant was arrested for driving with a suspended license. The car was parked in a gas station and the defendant was taken away. The police then inventoried the contents; the officer removed the cover of a speaker in the door panel and located cocaine. This was not a proper search incident to arrest, nor a proper inventory search. It could not be a search incident to arrest, because the defendant had already been taken away in a patrol car. United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1 (1977). This was not a valid inventory search, because searching inside speakers in door panels is not standard police procedure.

United States v. Bonitz, 826 F.2d 954 (10th Cir. 1987)

The defendant was arrested for purchasing a gun by a convicted felon. Following his arrest and being handcuffed, the police searched some plastic cases which were found in the bedroom of his house. They claimed the search was necessary under the exigent circumstance exception and as an incident to the arrest. The first rationale was untrue because the police officers spent two hours inventorying the entire house and exhibited no particular fear for their own safety. The search was also not justified as an incident to arrest because the defendant was already handcuffed and taken into custody at the time that the police officers conducted a search of his bedroom and the containers found therein.

United States v. Ford, 56 F.3d 265 (D.C.Cir. 1995)

Under Maryland v. Buie, two types of searches for people are permissible in connection with the arrest of a suspect: (1) a search of areas adjacent to the scene of the arrest, regardless of any likelihood of finding evidence; and (2) a search of other areas where there is a reasonable suspicion of finding someone who poses a threat to the officers. In this case, the officers, while looking in adjacent areas, discovered a gun clip. This did not authorize the officers to look behind a window shade, or under a mattress, because in neither location were the officers likely to discover any other person who posed a threat to the officers. The gun found behind the window shade, therefore, should have been suppressed.
United States v. $639,558, 955 F.2d 712 (D.C.Cir. 1992)

Defendant was arrested on an Amtrak train after a dog alerted to his luggage. He was handcuffed, removed from the train and brought to the Amtrak security office where he was handcuffed to a chair. The officers then contemplated what to do and after consulting with an AUSA, they decided to open the luggage. The opening of the luggage occurred at least thirty minutes after the arrest. This was not a valid search incident to arrest. The luggage was in the exclusive control of the police.

United States v. Fafowora, 865 F.2d 360 (D.C.Cir. 1989)

Police officers had probable cause to believe that the defendant was engaged in “counter-surveillance” and thus could arrest the defendant during the course of a narcotics transaction. The subsequent search of the defendant’s vehicle could not be authorized under a search incident to arrest, however, since the car was not within the “immediate surrounding area” of the defendant. However, the car could be forfeited and thus an inventory search was proper.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Independent Source)

The police unlawfully entered private premises and observed marijuana. The police left the scene and went to a Magistrate to obtain a search warrant. They did not tell the Magistrate about the prior entry or about their observations made inside the premises. The Magistrate issued a search warrant and the police searched and seized the evidence. The Supreme Court holds that the independent source rule exonerates the police from the misconduct of unlawfully entering the premises and saves the search. That is, because the Magistrate was not aware of the illicit entry, the search warrant was valid and the police officers were permitted to execute the search warrant. However, the Court also holds that the District Court must determine whether the police officers were motivated to go to the Magistrate because of their discovery of the marijuana during the illegal entry. If the police officers were so motivated, then the search warrant does not constitute an independent source and the evidence must be suppressed.

United States v. Sicilian, 578 F.3d 61 (1st Cir. 2009)

This case contains a detailed analysis of the independent source doctrine. The police suspected that the defendant was engaged in manufacturing MDMA. Not confident that they had sufficient information to obtain a search warrant, the police went to the defendant’s apartment and asked if they could talk with him. He consented. Several agents then entered the apartment and began a “sweep search” and located various items of evidence which supported their suspicion of drug manufacturing. The defendant then demanded that the agents leave and, based in part on the information acquired during the sweep search, the police obtained a search warrant. The government agreed that the sweep search was invalid, but argued that the independent source doctrine saved the search. The First Circuit (and the district court) disagreed and held that all evidence obtained through the execution of the search warrant would be suppressed. The agents were prompted to obtain the search warrant based on what they saw during the illegal search. The fact that the agents had already drafted an affidavit before they went to the apartment does not contradict the lower court’s finding.

United States v. Johnson, 380 F.3d 1013 (7th Cir. 2004)

The Seventh Circuit, in a decision by Judge Posner, holds that both the independent source doctrine and the inevitable discovery doctrine do not apply where the alternative source of information was derived from another illegal search (and one for which the defendant has no standing to complain). In this case, the defendant and others were sitting in his parked car when two police officers approached. The police ordered the three occupants to exit the vehicle, though there was no articulable suspicion or probable cause. Contraband was found under the defendant’s seat and other contraband was found in the other people’s possession. The police then searched the trunk of the car and found counterfeit money. The government argued that the search under the seat and in the trunk would inevitably have occurred as a result of the illegal evidence seized from the other people. The defendant contended that even though he lacked standing to challenge the search of the other people, the government could not rely on that illegal seizure and argue that the illegal search of the trunk would have occurred as a result of those other illegal searches (or that there was an independent source for the evidence found in the illegal trunk search). Judge Posner wrote, in essence, that two wrongs do not make a right.

United States v. Lin Lyn Trading Co., 149 F.3d 1112 (10th Cir. 1998)

The government conceded that it improperly seized a notepad from the defendant that contained attorney-client communications. It claimed, however, that other evidence was derived from an independent source. The Tenth Circuit holds that the lower court’s decision granting the motion to suppress was supported by the evidence.

Hamilton v. Nix, 809 F.2d 463 (8th Cir. 1987)

The police were aware of a witness who could provide important evidence about the criminal conduct in this case. Before interviewing this witness, however, the police had questioned the defendant in an improper manner: They had made various promises of leniency and help in exchange for a confession. A panel of the Eighth Circuit originally held that the improper interrogation tainted the evidence obtained from the witness. However, the court en banc holds that because the evidence would have been obtained through an “independent source” it represents an exception to the “fruit of the poisonous tree” doctrine. The Court holds that under Ceccolini, the evidence is admissible because the witness was known to the police and would have been discovered even absent the improper interrogation of the defendant. The court also reviews more recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions, e.g., Nix v. Williams, 467 U.S. 431 (1984) in this lengthy analysis of the attenuation and independent source doctrines.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Inevitable Discovery)

The police unlawfully entered private premises and observed marijuana. The police left the scene and went to a Magistrate to obtain a search warrant. They did not tell the Magistrate about the prior entry or about their observations made inside the premises. The Magistrate issued a search warrant and the police searched and seized the evidence. The Supreme Court holds that the independent source rule exonerates the police from the misconduct of unlawfully entering the premises and saves the search. That is, because the Magistrate was not aware of the illicit entry, the search warrant was valid and the police officers were permitted to execute the search warrant. However, the Court also holds that the District Court must determine whether the police officers were motivated to go to the Magistrate because of their discovery of the marijuana during the illegal entry. If the police officers were so motivated, then the search warrant does not constitute an independent source and the evidence must be suppressed.

United States v. Lundin, 817 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2016)

Acting on the basis of a BOLO, but without an arrest warrant, the police went to the defendant’s home at 4:00 a.m. and started knocking on the door. They heard a crashing noise near the rear of the home and ran around back and stopped the defendant who was in the backyard. They then looked inside the house and found two handguns. The Ninth Circuit ordered that the evidence must be suppressed: (1) the government could not rely on the exigent circumstances exception, because the police were not allowed to be where they were located when the exigent circumstances arose (i.e., they heard the crashing noise); (2) while the police may walk up to the front door of a house and engage in a “knock-and-talk,” that exception to the rule that bars police from entering the curtilage of the home does not apply at 4:00 a.m. when nobody would expect visitors to appear and knock on the door; (3) in addition, walking up to the front door to make a warrantless arrest is not a permissible purpose and Jardines provides that the police may not enter the curtilage of the home for investigative purposes; (4) the security sweep of the house was not justified, because the defendant was already handcuffed and any further security measures in the house were not necessary; (5) the inevitable discovery doctrine did not apply, because the officers were not in the process of obtaining a search warrant when the illegal searches occurred.

United States v. Camou, 773 F.3d 932 (9th Cir. 2014)

The defendant was stopped in his vehicle and charged with smuggling undocumented aliens. He was brought to the police station where he and one of his passengers were questioned. The passenger admitted that they regularly were engaged in smuggling activity. The police seized the defendant’s cell phone and listed it on a property report as seized evidence. Approximately 90 minutes later, the police searched the contents of the phone. The Ninth Circuit held that this was a not proper search incident to arrest search, not a proper exigent circumstances search and not a proper “automobile exception” search. In addition, the court rejected the inevitable discovery doctrine and the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule as reasons not to apply the exclusionary rule.
United States v. Stokes, 733 F.3d 438 (2d Cir. 2013)

The police had reason to believe that the defendant was responsible for a homicide, but did not seek an arrest warrant for strategic reasons (having to do with state law that would prohibit any questioning after the issuance of an arrest warrant). The police went to the defendant’s hotel room and entered the open door. While handing him his pants to get dressed, the police saw a gun in a duffle bag. The Second Circuit held the entry was unlawful. If the police had an arrest warrant, entry into the hotel room may have been permissible, but absent an arrest warrant, entering the room was not permissible and only an arrest in a public place would have been permissible (absent consent to enter). The government also failed in its effort to invoke the inevitable discovery doctrine, because the guns in the duffle bag would not inevitably have been discovered: if the police had waited for the defendant to exit the room, it is certainly possible that he would have left without the guns, been arrested and taken away, in which case the guns would not have been discovered. It is also possible the defendant’s companion might have left the hotel room first, with the guns, and there was no basis to arrest or search her. These contingencies were possible and rendered the inevitable discovery doctrine inapplicable.

United States v. Quinney, 583 F.3d 891 (6th Cir. 2009)

The police conducted a brief consent search and saw, in the defendant’s room, a printer. They then left the premises, but learned later that day that the printer may have been used to produce counterfeit currency. The agents returned to the premises and without consent (or a warrant) seized the printer. At the hearing on the motion to suppress, the government relied on the inevitable discovery doctrine. The Sixth Circuit rejected this theory, because the agents were not in the process of obtaining a warrant when the illegal search and seizure occurred. Merely stating that they “would have” and “could have” obtained a warrant does not invoke the inevitable discovery doctrine.

United States v. Tejada, 524 F.3d 809 (7th Cir. 2008)

The police lawfully arrested the defendant in his home. Pursuant to a lawful search incident to arrest, they searched an entertainment cabinet that was within reach of the defendant. Inside the cabinet, they found a blue bag that had another bag inside it. The court held that searching that bag was not a proper search incident to arrest because it was not accessible to the defendant at the time of his arrest. However, the police knew the bag contained contraband, because the defendant (shortly before) had offered to sell drugs to an undercover agent and the bag contained the drugs that he offered to sell. Judge Posner, writing for the Seventh Circuit, held that the inevitable discovery doctrine was satisfied. It is not necessary that a search warrant actually be in the process of being obtained. That is, in fact, one method of satisfying the inevitable discovery hurdle; but another circumstance is where, as here, the police actually know that the container contains contraband when they search it. As Judge Posner put it, “there isn’t even a shadow of a doubt” that had they requested a search warrant for the bag, it would have been authorized.

United States v. Virden, 488 F.3d 1317 (11th Cir. 2007)

The police stopped the defendant’s car after watching it leave the location where a search was about to occur. Because a drug dog was not available at that location, the police put the defendant in a police car in handcuffs and brought the car to a location two miles away where the dog was located. The Eleventh Circuit held that this exceeded the bounds of a Terry stop and amounted to a seizure requiring probable cause. Because there was no probable cause, the search of the car was unlawful. Nor would this evidence have been inevitably discovered, because no investigation was ongoing relating to the defendant or his car at the time that the unlawful search occurred.

United States v. Heath, 455 F.3d 52 (2d Cir. 2006)

Illegally-obtained evidence will be admissible under the inevitable discovery exception to the exclusionary rule only where a court can find, with a high level of confidence, that each of the contingencies necessary to the legal discovery of the contested evidence would be resolved in the government’s favor. In this case, the district court employed the incorrect standard and a remand was necessary to determine if the evidence would have been discovered but for the illegal arrest. This case contains a lengthy discussion of the inevitable discovery doctrine.

United States v. Johnson, 380 F.3d 1013 (7th Cir. 2004)

The Seventh Circuit in a decision by Judge Posner, holds that both the independent source doctrine and the inevitable discovery doctrine do not apply where the alternative source of information was derived from another illegal search (and one for which the defendant has no standing to complain). In this case, the defendant and were sitting his parked car when two police officers approached. The police ordered the three occupants to exit the vehicle, though there was no articulable suspicion or probable cause. Contraband was found under the defendant’s seat and other contraband was found in the other people’s possession. The police then searched the trunk of the car and found counterfeit money. The government argued that the search under the seat and in the trunk would inevitably have occurred as a result of the illegal evidence seized from the other people. The defendant contended that even though he lacked standing to challenge the search of the other people, the government could not rely on that illegal seizure and argue that the illegal search of the trunk would have occurred as a result of those other illegal searches (or that there was an independent source for the evidence found in the illegal trunk search). Judge Posner wrote, in essence, that two wrongs do not make a right.

United States v. James, 353 F.3d 606 (8th Cir. 2003)

The defendant was in jail. He asked a friend to destroy the contents of an envelope that the defendant had given to the friend (it contained computer disks). The police acquired the envelope and the friend gave the police permission to open it and review the contents. After rejecting the government’s argument that the friend validly consented, the court also rejected the government’s inevitable discovery argument. There was no alternative then-existing investigation that inevitably would have led to a search warrant for the disks.

United States v. Villalba-Alvarado, 345 F.3d 1007 (8th Cir. 2003)

The police had a search warrant for the defendant’s property. He was arrested a short distance away and questioned about the location of contraband in the house. He answered the questions, revealing where drugs and money were hidden behind a secret panel in the house. The statements were obtained in violation of Miranda. The Eighth Circuit initially holds that the physical fruit of a Miranda violation should not be suppressed. (The Supreme Court later agreed with this holding, United States v. Patane). The Eighth Circuit also held, however, that if it were wrong in this holding (which it wasn’t), the inevitable discovery doctrine would not apply, because there was insufficient showing that the drugs and money would have been found, even in executing the search warrant, absent the defendant’s statement. The fact that a drug dog was present and might have been used and might have discovered the secret panel was not sufficient to prove the inevitability of the discovery.

United States v. Conner, 127 F.3d 663 (8th Cir. 1997)

The police received a tip that two burglars were at a motel. Six officers went to the motel and went to the room in front of which the burglars' car was parked. The police knocked on the door and yelled, "Open up." When one of the defendants opened the door, the police observed (through the open door) various coins (they knew a coin collection had been stolen in the burglary). The officers pulled their weapons and arrested both defendants. They then obtained a search warrant on the basis of what they observed in the room. The trial court correctly granted a motion to suppress. Though the police did not enter the room in order to see the coins, when they ordered the occupants to open the door, and thereby gained the ability to see in the room, this amounted to a search. Demanding that the occupants open the door did not amount to a consent search and there were no exigent circumstances necessitating the immediate entry into the room. The search pursuant to the search warrant was not salvaged by Leon, because the information contained in the application (the observations that were gained through the illegal entry), negate the existence of good faith. Finally, the officers would not have inevitably discovered the evidence, because absent the illegal entry, no other investigatory effort was underway to obtain a search warrant for the motel room.

United States v. Vasquez de Reyes, 149 F.3d 192 (3rd Cir. 1998)

The police received a tip that three undocumented aliens were at a bar. The INS went to the bar and detained the defendant who did not meet the description of any of the subjects. The result of stopping the defendant was the discovery that she had engaged in immigration marriage fraud (the evidence included the defendant’s confession; and a statement by the defendant’s supposed husband). The government contended that this would inevitably have been discovered during routine INS investigation when the defendant applied for a residency permit. The Third Circuit held that this was not the type of inevitable discovery envisioned by Nix v. Williams, 467 U.S. 431 (1984). Though the inevitable discovery rule is not necessarily limited to the discovery of physical evidence, it is not applicable to a subsequent confession, or statement of another witness, the inevitability of which is far from certain. (Note that the court did not analyze in any detail whether the exclusionary rule – or the fruit of the poisonous tree doctrine – should operate to bar the testimony of the putative husband, whose identity was discovered only through the detention of the defendant. In other words, it was assumed, but not explained, that all evidence, including other witnesses’ testimony, could be barred as the fruit of the poisonous tree. See United States v. Ceccolini).

United States v. Lang, 149 F.3d 1044 (9th Cir. 1998)

Though there is authority for a contrary position in other Circuits, the Ninth Circuit concludes that inevitable discovery rulings are mixed questions of law and fact that nevertheless should be reviewed under a clearly erroneous standard.
United States v. Madrid, 152 F.3d 1034 (8th Cir. 1998)

After the defendant and his colleague were arrested making a drug sale, the colleague told the police that some of the drugs came from the defendant’s house and that more drugs were left there. The police went back to that location and “secured” the home which involved detaining four occupants, and searching the house, including requiring each of the occupants to empty their pockets. The agents then endeavored to get a search warrant, including in the application information obtained during the search. The Court refused to allow the evidence to be admitted under an inevitable discovery theory. The blatant violation of the defendant’s rights prior to getting a search warrant doomed the search. The court distinguished both Segura v. United States, 468 U.S. 796 (1984) and Murray v. United States, 487 U.S. 533 (1988). In Segura and Murray, the warrant did not contain any information learned during the illegal search. Moreover, “the offensiveness of the officers’ actions in this case was not limited to the seizure of premises, but extends to the detention of occupants and the continued, prolonged, illegal search by wandering officers.”

United States v. Allen, 159 F.3d 832 (4th Cir. 1998)

The police entered a bus and questioned the occupants about their luggage. The defendant was asked if he had any bags and he pointed to a knapsack. The police pulled down the knapsack and asked for permission to search it. The defendant consented and the police found marijuana in the bag. The defendant was arrested. After he was removed from the bus, the police found another duffel bag which none of the other passengers claimed. The police searched that bag and found cocaine. The lower court upheld the search of the duffel bag on the theory that its discovery would inevitably have been discovered. The trial court reasoned that if nobody claimed the bag, the police would have brought a drug-detecting dog to sniff the bag and if he alerted, the police would then obtain a search warrant and locate the cocaine. The Fourth Circuit reversed. There was insufficient evidence that a drug dog would have been summoned. In fact, testimony at the hearing demonstrated that there was a dog present, but that the dog had never been used inside the bus before (it had previously been used to sniff the undercarriage of the bus). Moreover, the inevitable discovery doctrine does not apply where the police were not already in the process of obtaining a search warrant when the illegal search occurred. Under the government’s theory, whenever there is probable cause, the inevitable discovery doctrine would apply. That is not the purpose of the inevitable discovery doctrine.

United States v. Infante-Ruiz, 13 F.3d 498 (1st Cir. 1994)

The defendant was a passenger in a vehicle which was stopped by the police. The police arrested him on an outstanding warrant from another state. The police obtained the driver’s consent to search the trunk, where they found the defendant’s briefcase. They opened the briefcase and found a gun. The court held that this search was not a proper consent search, nor supported by probable cause. The government argued that the weapon inevitably would have been discovered pursuant to an inventory search. The government failed to show, however, that without the discovery of the gun the car would have been seized. Therefore, the briefcase would not have been discovered.

United States v. Cabassa, 62 F.3d 470 (2d Cir. 1995)

The police received information that drugs were being stored at a particular location. Several agents went to the U.S. Attorney’s office to prepare a search warrant application, while... other agents went to the apartment. Concerned that they would be seen, the agents at the scene entered the apartment and discovered evidence. Shortly thereafter, the agents at the U.S. Attorney’s office called the agents at the scene and said they needed additional information about the source of the information, etc. Meanwhile the occupant of the house consented to a search and at that point, the effort to obtain a search warrant was abandoned. The inevitable discovery doctrine did not resurrect this search. It was not clear that a warrant would have been obtained, nor was it certain that the evidence would still be at the location at the time that a warrant was obtained.

United States v. Gorski, 852 F.2d 692 (2d Cir. 1988)

The defendant was arrested and after he was handcuffed his suitcase was searched. There were no exigent circumstances justifying a search incident to arrest. The government claimed that the search could be justified as an inventory search or under the inevitable discovery doctrine. However, the government failed to introduce evidence that all suitcases were in fact inventoried at the FBI agent’s office where the defendants were ultimately taken. In the absence of such evidence that the bag would have been opened at that location, the cocaine found in the suitcase would not inevitably have been discovered and the search could not be justified under either an inventory or inevitable discovery theory.

United States v. Thomas, 955 F.2d 207 (4th Cir. 1992)

Police entered a hotel room, suspecting that the occupants were engaged in drug dealing. They searched and found thousands of dollars in bank wrappers. They then set up surveillance, questioned the first person to enter the room and when he implicated his partner, the police re-entered the room and “re-discovered” the money. This evidence was not admissible under the inevitable discovery doctrine. The money would not inevitably have been discovered. The court agreed with other circuits which have held that the doctrine requires the fact that makes discovery inevitable arise from circumstances other than those disclosed by the illegal search itself.

United States v. Wilson, 36 F.3d 1298 (5th Cir. 1994)

The police went to a hotel room to check out an informant’s tip. Once inside the hotel room, one of the officers looked in the bathroom and found some checks in a wastebasket. The officer seized the checks. The officer then asked for consent to search the room. One of the occupants said that was fine. The seizure of the checkbooks could not be justified by the inevitable discovery doctrine. The government was not actively pursuing an independent line of investigation that inevitably would have resulted in the discovery of the checkbooks.

United States v. Leake, 95 F.3d 409 (6th Cir. 1996)

Evidence seized from the defendant’s house had been ordered suppressed due to an illegal search. The question before the court was whether derivative evidence should also be suppressed. The government argued that the evidence would inevitably be discovered. It also argued that it had an independent source for the discovery of the evidence. The Sixth Circuit disagreed with both theories. Among other conclusions, the court held that the government could not introduce evidence which derived from questioning witnesses who were identified during the illegal search.
United States v. Buchanan, 904 F.2d 349 (6th Cir. 1990)

The police lacked sufficient basis to enter the defendant’s home without a search warrant solely on their belief that the defendant’s wife would destroy evidence after the defendant was arrested by DEA agents. Because the police were aware that the defendant’s wife was at home asleep, there was no reason to believe that she would be aware that the defendant had been arrested and thus there was time to get a search warrant. Furthermore, once the police entered the house without a search warrant, the subsequent consent of the defendant (even assuming he was lawfully arrested) was tainted by this unlawful entry and the police could not rely on a consent search. Finally, the government cannot rely on the “inevitable discovery” exception because the police were not pursuing an alternate line of investigation at the time that the search was conducted. The police who believed they had probable cause to search may not enter the premises and excuse their failure to get a warrant on the basis that they would have gotten one anyway.

United States v. Madrid, 152 F.3d 1034 (8th Cir. 1998)

The police arrested the defendant at a convenience store where a drug transaction was planned to occur. The police then decided that they wanted to search the defendant’s house. So that is just what they did. However, they did so without obtaining a warrant, though they started the warrant application process while they were in the house rummaging through the defendant’s papers and detaining the other occupants of the house. This was not a lawful “securing of the house” pursuant to Segura v. United States, 468 U.S. 796 (1984), and the inevitable discovery doctrine did not undo this violation of the Fourth Amendment. The court noted that the Fourth Amendment contains a “warrant” requirement, not a “warrant application” requirement.

United States v. Marts, 986 F.2d 1216 (8th Cir. 1993)

The police announced their presence and entered the defendants’ house five seconds thereafter. This violated the knock and announce rule and was not salvaged by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Also, the inevitable discovery rule has no application in this context, because the knock and announce rule would be rendered meaningless.

United States v. Mejia, 69 F.3d 309 (9th Cir. 1995)

The inevitable discovery doctrine does not apply in a case in which the police had probable cause to search the premises but made no effort to secure a search warrant. To accept this argument would, in effect, eliminate the warrant requirement entirely.

United States v. Boatwright, 822 F.2d 862 (9th Cir. 1987)

Police officers and a probation officer were hunting for the probationer. When they arrived at his house, they saw him coming out of a nearby garage reeking of chemicals. The garage smelled the same. The police officer decided to enter the garage where they found the defendant, (the probationer’s brother), involved in concocting some brew. The search of the garage was improper and evidence seized must be suppressed. There was no independent means by which the police would inevitably have searched the garage and acquired the evidence there. Nothing outside of the unlawful search itself made likely the discovery of the weapons which were found in that garage and for which the defendant was on trial. The court holds, however, that the inevitable discovery doctrine applies not only where an independent investigation is already in progress. But here, not only was there no independent investigation under way, there were no seeds for such an investigation.

1554
United States v. $639,558, 955 F.2d 712 (D.C.Cir. 1992)

Defendant was arrested on an Amtrak train after a dog alerted to his luggage. Without opening the suitcase, the defendant was handcuffed, removed from the train and brought to the Amtrak security office where he was handcuffed to a chair. The officers then contemplated what to do and after consulting with an AUSA, they decided to open the luggage. The opening of the luggage occurred at least thirty minutes after the arrest. The court rejected the search incident to arrest theory, and also rejected the theory that the luggage would have been searched pursuant to the inventory exception and thus the inevitable discovery doctrine applied: The opening of the suitcase as part of an inventory would only have happened if the defendant was being processed as part of his arrest at the jail. This would not have happened until after the police learned what was in the suitcase. Thus, the luggage was not inevitably bound to be inventoried – not unless the contents were known. The case contains a lengthy analysis of the inevitable discovery doctrine, including (in dictum) suggesting that the doctrine should not apply to “primary evidence” as opposed to derivative evidence. Primary evidence is the evidence directly obtained by the constitutional violation. Derivative evidence is the evidence which was later discovered by exploiting something learned by the constitutional violation, but would have been discovered inevitably, even without the constitutional violation.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Informants)

United States v. Ramirez-Rivera, 800 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015)

Based on information from an informant who had not previously been known to the police, the police went to the defendant’s house to search for a fugitive. Without a search warrant, the police entered the house and arrested the fugitive, as well as the defendant (on the basis that he was harboring the fugitive) and found guns. The defendant was then brought to the police station where he made a statement. The First Circuit held that entering the house without a warrant was illegal: there were no exigent circumstances; and there was no probable cause, because the informant’s information was not corroborated in any meaningful way, other than confirming the description of the house. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply, at least in part because of the egregiousness of the violation, but also because the police testified that the reason they did not get a warrant is because it required more confirming evidence (thus revealing that the police knew that they did not have probable cause and were intentionally proceeding with the intention of not getting a search warrant which could not be obtained based on the lack of sufficient information). The evidence found during the search, as well as the defendant’s statement should have been suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree.

United States v. Glover, 755 F.3d 811 (7th Cir. 2014)

The failure of the search warrant application to reveal any information about the informant rendered it devoid of probable cause. Though a close call, the exclusionary rule would not apply because of Leon. However, because of the absence of information about the informant’s credibility, a Franks hearing was necessary to determine whether the omission of this information would taint the search warrant. The informant, unbeknownst to the magistrate, had more than a dozen prior criminal convictions, including several while he was working as an informant. He was also a gang member and was receiving payments from the police department.

United States v. Gifford, 727 F.3d 92 (1st Cir. 2013)

The police obtained a search warrant for the defendant’s house to search for a marijuana grow operation. The basis for the search was (1) an informant’s tip; (2) information that the electricity usage at the defendant’s house exceeded the neighbor’s electricity usage; and (3) an officer visited the house and smelled burnt marijuana when the defendant opened the door. The First Circuit upheld the lower court’s decision granting the motion to suppress. Regarding the informant’s information, other than the statement that the informant was reliable, no information was provided in the warrant to support the claim that the informant was, in fact, reliable. There was also no information about the informant’s basis of knowledge. Regarding the electricity usage, the lower court found that the officer was reckless in failing to include in the warrant application information that the neighbor’s house was considerably smaller and the fact that the defendant had a horse boarding business on the premises; this was a Franks violation that altered the probable cause calculus. The smell of marijuana was not necessarily indicative of a grow operation.

United States v. Bell, 585 F.3d 1045 (7th Cir. 2009)
The informant who provided information to the police did not reveal how he knew the target of the search, or what he was doing at the target’s house. The informant told the police that he had been at the defendant’s house and seen cocaine there, but the police did nothing to corroborate this information. This did not amount to probable cause; but the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied.

United States v. Higgins, 557 F.3d 381 (6th Cir. 2009)

The information provided to the Magistrate about the informant’s reliability and any corroboration of his allegations that the defendant supplied him the drugs with which he was caught was insufficient to provide a probable cause basis to search the defendant’s house. Not only was the informant’s veracity insufficiently revealed: the affidavit also failed to reveal any connection between the drugs that were allegedly acquired from the defendant, and the defendant’s house. The affidavit did not say that the informant had ever been in the defendant’s house, or seen drugs in the defendant’s house. Despite these flaws in the affidavit, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied.

United States v. Hammond, 351 F.3d 765 (6th Cir. 2003)

The information supplied by an informant was vague, not obviously reliable and entirely unsupported by any independent investigation on the part of the police. Even though the information was offered by a neighbor of the defendant, there was still no statement by the affiant that the informant was reliable. Nor was there any corroboration of the information provided by the informant (in fact, vast amounts of the search warrant affidavit were subject to a valid Franks v. Delaware challenge).

United States v. Wilhelm, 80 F.3d 116 (4th Cir. 1996)

The affidavit in support of the search warrant relied entirely on the statements of a tipster who the affiant/officer had never met and who was not known to be reliable. The unsupported conclusions of the officer that the informant was reliable, mature and a concerned citizen were not sufficient, since the officer had no basis for asserting that the tipster was either reliable, mature, or concerned. The affidavit was so defective that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.

United States v. Jackson, 818 F.2d 345 (5th Cir. 1987)

The affidavit in this case failed to establish probable cause for the defendant’s arrest. The affidavit relied on the statement of an informant who failed to indicate the basis of his knowledge and failed to indicate that the defendant who took possession of stolen property was aware of the burglary which the informant had committed.

United States v. Barrington, 806 F.2d 529 (5th Cir. 1986)

A conclusory affidavit does not establish probable cause for the issuance of a search warrant. The affidavit here stated only that the affiant had received information from a confidential informant who had provided information in the past leading to an arrest and conviction.

United States v. Weaver, 99 F.3d 1372 (6th Cir. 1996)

An informant went to the defendant’s house with $100 of government money to attempt to buy marijuana. The government agents did not provide surveillance, or in any other way corroborate the informant’s statement that he did, in fact, buy the marijuana at that location. This information did not support the issuance of a search warrant. Nowhere in the affidavit did the affiant disclose where the marijuana was kept or stored, the quantity of marijuana in the house, or any other particularized information that would have supported the belief that there was currently marijuana on the property. Also, the affidavit did not provide any information about the informant’s reliability, other than boilerplate language about his being reliable in the past. For example, the affidavit did not say that the informant’s past reliability related to drug cases. Finally, the corroboration of innocent details, such as the name on the utilities records for the residence, was meaningless. The court also held that when a police officer supplies a bare bones affidavit which is insufficient, and then executes the warrant himself, he cannot rely on the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Here, the officer attempted no meaningful corroboration of the informant’s information and no other independent investigation, other than learning the identity of the occupant of the residence. The unlawful search, therefore, was not saved by Leon.

United States v. Leake, 998 F.2d 1359 (6th Cir. 1993)

An unknown tipster informed the police that marijuana was in the defendant’s basement. The tip was not “rich” in detail; he did not identify the occupants by name; he failed to state when he “smelled” the marijuana in the house; and no future conduct was accurately predicted, as in Gates. Also, the corroboration of the tip was virtually meaningless.

United States v. Campbell, 920 F.2d 793 (11th Cir. 1991)

The police received a tip from an informant that the defendant would be hauling marijuana into Montgomery, Alabama in a particular pickup truck. When the truck arrived at the designated location, the police arrested the occupants and brought the pickup to the police station where it was sniffed by one dog who did not alert, then another dog, who did. The defendant then consented to a search of the car. The search was illegal. The information supplied by the informant was not sufficient to rise to the level of probable cause. At most, pursuant to Alabama v. White, the police had sufficient information to conduct an investigatory stop. Here, however, the length of the detention went beyond a mere Terry stop. The consent was clearly the product of the illegal detention.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Inventory Searches – Impoundment)

Florida v. Wells, 495 U.S. 1 (1990)
Police officers searched a locked suitcase removed from a trunk of an impounded car and pried it open after the driver was arrested on charges of DUI. There were no policies for that jurisdiction addressing a need to inventory closed containers when a car was impounded after a DUI arrest. The Supreme Court holds that this is not a valid inventory search.

The Supreme Court holds that law enforcement officers may conduct an inventory search of closed containers which are found in an automobile so long as the inventory is carried out pursuant to standard police procedures that require the opening of such containers and is not conducted in a bad faith effort solely at investigating criminal conduct.

United States v. Johnson, 889 F.3d 1120 (9th Cir. 2018)
Following its earlier decision in United States v. Orozco, 858 F.3d 1204 (9th Cir. 2017), The Ninth Circuit holds that the police officer’s motive in performing an administrative, inventory search, is relevant in determining the reasonableness and lawfulness of the search. If, as here, the officer testifies that he conducted the search in his search for evidence of a crime, the search is not a lawful inventory / administrative search.

United States v. Sanders, 796 F.3d 1241 (10th Cir. 2015)
If a defendant is arrested and his car is parked on private property, the car may not be impounded unless the car poses a threat to public safety or there is a standardized policy that addresses non-pretextual community-caretaking concerns. See South Dakota v. Opperman, 428 U.S. 364 (1976). The impoundment in this case was not justified under these standards.

United States v. Cervantes, 703 F.3d 1135 (9th Cir. 2012)
A man was seen leaving what was described by the police as a stash house with a white box. That man was later observed giving the box to the defendant. The defendant’s car was followed briefly and the police believed that he engaged in counter-surveillance maneuvers. Later the defendant, with the box was pulled over for a minor technical motor vehicle infraction and the officer could no confirm that he had a valid driver’s license. The car was searched and the box was found to contain cocaine. The government contended that there was probable cause to search the car. The Ninth Circuit disagreed: the officer’s testimony that the house was a “stash house” was worth little, because no facts were offered to support that conclusory statement. The claim that the defendant engaged in counter-surveillance was equally unhelpful. The government next argued that the car was subject to impoundment and inventory, but the Ninth Circuit rejected this theory, too, because there was insufficient information that the car was obstructing traffic, or otherwise in need of being impoundment. Moreover, the government did not show that the impoundment was appropriate under California law.

United States v. Taylor, 636 F.3d 461 (10th Cir. 2011)
After impounding the defendant’s vehicle, the police found drugs. The police relied on the inventory exception to the search warrant requirement. However, the inventory that was prepared by the police simply listed the contents of the vehicle as “miscellaneous tools” which showed that the police were not seriously inventorying the contents for a legitimate purpose. The drug evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Edwards, 632 F.3d 633 (10th Cir. 2001)

The defendant was arrested on the sidewalk near a parking lot. The court concluded that there was probable cause to support the arrest (a belief that the defendant had participated in a bank robbery). The police then searched a rental car, which had been rented by his girlfriend which was in the parking lot. The Tenth Circuit held that the defendant did not have standing to contest the search of the car in general, because he was not on the rental agreement, but he did have standing to challenge the search of the closed suitcases which he owned that were in the trunk of the vehicle. The court also held that the search was not a valid probable cause search of the vehicle, because there was no probable cause to believe that the car contained any evidence. The search was not a valid search incident to arrest, because the defendant was over 100 feet away from the car when he was arrested and he was handcuffed in the back of the patrol car (note, this case was decided pre-Gant). This was not an inventory search, because the police conceded that they were searching for evidence and had not decided to impound the car until the evidence was found.

United States v. Proctor, 489 F.3d 1348 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

The defendant was arrested for DUI. An officer promptly searched the car and found a gun. The defendant contended that the search did not comply with the D.C. impound and inventory procedures. Indeed, it did not. Though the officer testified that there was a new and improved procedure that authorized him to search the car immediately after the arrest (even though the written policy did not even authorize impoundment in every case), the court concluded that this was not the official policy which the police must obey in order to invoke the inventory search exception to the search warrant requirement.

United States v. Kennedy, 427 F.3d 1136 (8th Cir. 2005)

The defendant’s girlfriend said that the defendant “deals” drugs and “keeps” drugs in his car. This did not establish probable cause that the defendant then had drugs in his car. The police also searched the car pursuant to their inventory policy, but the policy only directed the police to search containers in the car. The search in this case involved searching behind a speaker in the trunk – the place where the girlfriend revealed that the defendant stored his drugs. This was not a proper inventory search.

Miranda v. City of Cornelius, 429 F.3d 858 (9th Cir. 2005)

In this § 1983 case, the plaintiffs challenged the police officer’s decision to impound a vehicle which was lawfully parked on the plaintiff’s private property when the plaintiff was arrested for a motor vehicle offense. The Ninth Circuit held that impounding the vehicle was not permissible.

The defendant was arrested in his car for speeding and driving with a suspended license. The officer decided not to impound the car and pulled it into a parking lot. He noticed a mobile phone on the floor and opened a console between the bucket seats for the purpose of hiding the phone in there. In the console, he discovered a gun. This amounted to a search and was unlawful. This was not a valid inventory search, moreover, because there was no departmental policy that authorized this type of search of unimpounded vehicles.

United States v. Best, 135 F.3d 1223 (8th Cir. 1998)

After the trooper stopped the defendant's car, she determined that the defendant was driving with a suspended license. Prior to the arrival of a tow truck, the trooper noticed that the windows would not roll down properly. She shined her flashlight into the door panel and saw a bundle of marijuana. This was not a lawful inventory search. The inventory policy of the trooper's department did not provide for searching inside door panels of cars that were to be impounded.

United States v. Gorski, 852 F.2d 692 (2d Cir. 1988)

The defendant was arrested and after he was handcuffed his suitcase was searched. There were no exigent circumstances justifying a search incident to arrest. The government claimed that the search could be justified as an inventory search or under the inevitable discovery doctrine. However, the government failed to introduce evidence that all suitcases were in fact inventoried at the FBI agent’s office where the defendants were ultimately taken. In the absence of such evidence that the bag would have been opened at that location, the cocaine found in the suitcase would not have been inevitably discovered and the search could not be justified under either an inventory or inevitable discovery theory.

United States v. Salmon, 944 F.2d 1106 (3rd Cir. 1991)

Following the defendant’s arrest, his car was seized for forfeiture under state law. The car was then inventoried. The state agency that seized the car, however, had no policy on the method of conducting inventories of seized-forfeitue cars. The case might be different if federal agents had seized the car, because under the federal forfeiture laws, title to the car passes to the government when the car is used in an unlawful manner, whereas under the state’s law, title does not pass to the state until after a hearing.

United States v. Showalter, 858 F.2d 149 (3rd Cir. 1988)

A drug agent accompanied United States Marshals during the civil forfeiture inventory of residential premises. This was improper. The marshals were entitled to conduct an inventory of the property which they had seized but there was nothing in the seizure warrant permitting agents access to the house to see what was in plain view. Nor does this satisfy the requirements of an inventory search since privacy rights at home are far greater than those in a car, and there was no evidence that it was uniform or standard procedure for DEA agents to accompany marshals to inventory the goods in a house which had been seized.

United States v. Hahn, 922 F.2d 243 (5th Cir. 1991)

After seizing the defendant’s car, IRS agents searched its contents under an inventory rationale. However, the IRS had no standards or procedures regarding the inventorying of cars, thus this search was illegal. The fact that the IRS agents complied with local police guidelines was irrelevant, because the agents, at the time, were not aware of those procedures.

United States v. Duguay, 93 F.3d 346 (7th Cir. 1996)

The court recognized that the police must have a legitimate basis not only for inventorying a vehicle, but also for impounding the vehicle. Here, the police failed to show an established departmental policy for the impoundment of the vehicle. Moreover, there were other people around who were available to drive the car, including the defendant’s girlfriend and brother.

United States v. Marshall, 986 F.2d 1171 (8th Cir. 1993)

Though defendant’s vehicle was properly impounded, the government failed to prove that the law enforcement agency had standardized procedures for inventorying the contents of seized cars. Also, it was evident that the police were motivated by their investigation of the defendant for drug and gun-related crimes.

United States v. Ramos-Oseguera, 120 F.3d 1028 (9th Cir. 1997)

San Francisco’s inventory policy required officers to identify all visible property in an impounded vehicle. The policy did not authorize the opening of closed containers to inventory the contents of containers. Here, the police searched the pants pockets of a pair of jeans found in the back seat and found heroin. This was not a lawful inventory search because there was no authorization in the city policy to search the pockets of clothes found in an impounded vehicle.

United States v. Johnson, 936 F.2d 1082 (9th Cir. 1991)

The police violated the state inventory policy in searching the locked trunk of a seized automobile. The federal agents could not rely, therefore, on that established policy to justify the inventory search of the car.

United States v. Wanless, 882 F.2d 1459 (9th Cir. 1989)

The Washington State courts have imposed certain requirements on officers making inventory searches. These requirements must be complied with before the fruits of such a search may be introduced in federal court. This is because an inventory search must comply with the local standards and practices or it cannot, by definition, be a valid inventory search.

United States v. Haro-Salcedo, 107 F.3d 769 (10th Cir. 1997)

Though the defendant’s car was properly impounded, the inventory search was not proper. The agent who conducted the search conceded that he searched the vehicle for investigative purposes. He also acknowledged that he was unfamiliar with the procedures and policy of the local law enforcement agency which had impounded the vehicle. Finally, the officer never completed an inventory form listing the contents of the car. The court concluded, however, that the evidence would inevitably be discovered when the impounding agency performed a proper inventory search.

United States v. Lugo, 978 F.2d 631 (10th Cir. 1992)

Defendant was arrested for driving with a suspended license. The car was parked in a gas station and the defendant was taken away. The police then inventoried the contents; the officer removed the cover of a speaker in the door panel and located cocaine. This was not a proper search incident to arrest, nor a proper inventory search. It could not be a search incident to arrest, because the defendant had already been taken away in a patrol car. United States v. Chadwick,

1562
433 U.S. 1 (1977). This was not a valid inventory search, because searching inside speakers in door panels is not standard police procedure.

Sammons v. Taylor, 967 F.2d 1533 (11th Cir. 1992)

In this civil rights action, the Eleventh Circuit sets forth the standard for an inventory search. The plaintiff, complaining about an “unnecessary” inventory search, argued that impoundment, followed by an inventory search, is only appropriate when there is no alternative means of disposing of the car. The court rejected this argument: Even if an arrestee’s car is not impeding traffic or otherwise presenting a hazard, a law enforcement officer may impound the vehicle, so long as the decision to impound is made on the basis of standard criteria and on the basis of “something other than suspicion of evidence of criminal activity.”

United States v. Khoury, 901 F.2d 948 (11th Cir. 1990)

Following the defendant’s arrest, the police leafed through a spiral notebook found in the trunk of the car. Later, the agent came back to the notebook and more thoroughly examined it.
This was not a proper inventory search. A search warrant should have been obtained before the officer went back to the notebook to study it in depth. An inventory search is not a surrogate for investigation and the scope of the inventory search may not exceed that necessary to accomplish the ends of the inventory. It is clear that the second examination of the notebook was conducted for investigatory purposes, not merely to inventory items found in the car.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Knock and Announce)

When the police violate the knock-and-announce rule, the appropriate remedy is not suppression of the evidence. Though there is obviously a deterrent component to the exclusionary rule, the knock-and-announce rule is not principally designed to prevent the government from seeing or obtaining evidence in the house (i.e., the purpose of the rule is not to enable the homeowner to destroy the evidence), suppressing the evidence is not an appropriate remedy.

The Supreme Court held that waiting 15 – 20 seconds prior to forcibly entering a house was permissible under both the federal knock and announce statute and the Constitution. The Court held that the standard of “reasonableness” was the only appropriate yardstick in gauging whether the police waited an appropriate length of time prior to entering the apartment when nobody responds to knocking on the front door. What matters are the facts known to the police (thus, the fact that the defendant was in the shower – unbeknownst to the officers – is not relevant). The officers may break open the door if they reasonably believe that they have been denied admission into the house.

A no-knock entry is justified if police have a reasonable suspicion that knocking and announcing their presence before entering would be dangerous or futile, or inhibit the effective investigation of the crime. Here, with good reason, the police obtained a no-knock warrant. The police executed the warrant by breaking open a garage window and announcing their presence. Excessive or unnecessary property destruction during a search may violate the Fourth Amendment, even though the entry itself is lawful. 18 U.S.C. §3109, which authorizes the breaking of windows where the police are denied admittance, does not prohibit the breaking of a window, as in this case, even in circumstances where admittance is not denied. Where, as here, the police act reasonably, this satisfies the Fourth Amendment and §3109.

The Fourth Amendment does not authorize a blanket exception to the knock and announce rule (the constitutional requirement recognized in _Wilson v. Arkansas_) in all felony drug investigations. While the magistrate, in an appropriate case, may authorize an entry without knocking and announcing, there must be a showing to authorize this method of gaining entry, as opposed to a _per se_ exception (created by the state supreme court in Wisconsin) to the knock and announce rule in all cases of a general category.

The knock and announce rule, which has its roots in the common law, is part of the fabric of the Fourth Amendment and in some cases, the failure to knock and announce can render a search violative of the Fourth Amendment.
United States v. Weaver, 808 F.3d 26 (D.C. Cir. 2015)

   Though Hudson v. Michigan held that the exclusionary rule did not apply when officers violate the knock and announce rule when executing a search warrant, the DC Circuit holds in this case that the exclusionary rule does apply when the entry is not pursuant to a search warrant, but while executing an arrest warrant. Hudson premised its holding on the inevitability of the search occurring, and thus the evidence would be found, had the officers knocked and announced prior to executing the search warrant. But the inevitability of conducting a search is not present when the entry is made pursuant to an arrest warrant.

Trent v. Wade, 776 F.3d 368 (5th Cir. 2015)

   Even if an officer is engaged in hot pursuit of a suspect to a home, this does not necessarily eliminate the knock and announce rule, which is designed to protect the safety not only of the suspect and the officer, but also other occupants of the house.

United States v. Neilson, 415 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. 2005)

   Law enforcement officers did not have an objectively reasonable basis for believing that the no-knock provision in the search warrant was valid. Though there was some information known to the police that weapons and drugs were inside, there was no evidence of violence and a prior search at the premises did not involve any violence, even though guns were found at that time. Moreover, though there was probable cause that a small amount of drugs were at the scene (apparently personal use quantities), there was no indication that any trafficking occurred at the house.

United States v. Smith, 386 F.3d 753 (6th Cir. 2004)

   Officers must have more than a mere hunch before they can claim that exigent circumstances support the issuance of a no-knock warrant. The fact that drugs and guns are known to be in the house and that one of the occupants is known to be a biker is not sufficient to support the issuance of a no-knock warrant. Wilson v. Arkansas, 514 U.S. 927 (1995); Richards v. Wisconsin, 520 U.S. 385 (1997). The warrant in this case also did not satisfy the good faith standard of Leon. Among other things, the warrant in this case did not, in fact, authorize a no-knock entry (though one was requested and it was arguable that the magistrate intended to grant that authority).

United States v. Bates, 84 F.3d 790 (6th Cir. 1996)

   The mere fact that officers are aware that there are firearms inside a house is not sufficient, alone, to justify entering with a warrant without knocking and announcing. Absent more, such as knowledge that an occupant has a record of violence; prior threats to an officer’s safety; or a verified reputation of an occupant’s violent tendencies, the police must still knock and announce, even if they know that there are drugs and guns inside. The court also held that the mere possibility that the occupants might destroy drugs inside the apartment is not enough to violate §3109, or the Fourth Amendment’s common law knock and announce requirement.

United States v. Marts, 986 F.2d 1216 (8th Cir. 1993)

   The police announced their presence and entered the defendants’ house five seconds thereafter. This violated the knock and announce rule and was not salvaged by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Also, the inevitable discovery rule has no application in this context, because the knock and announce rule would be rendered meaningless.

United States v. Zermeno, 66 F.3d 1058 (9th Cir. 1995)

The trial court did not clearly err in holding that the police violated the federal knock and announce rule, 18 U.S.C. §3109. The police approached the front door of the defendant’s house and yelled, “Open the door.” Before the defendant could reach the door, the police had commenced using a battering ram. The fact that this was a narcotics investigation did not establish, without more, that there were exigent circumstances justifying the agents’ conduct.

United States v. Becker, 23 F.3d 1537 (9th Cir. 1994)

A SWAT team kicked in the door of the defendant’s home in order to execute a search warrant. The government argued that there was fear of an active methamphetamine lab on the premises, as well as volatile chemicals. At co-conspirators’ homes, there were also loaded weapons found during searches. None of these factors justified a search without notification. There was no information then known to the police that there actually was an operating methamphetamine laboratory at the home. Also, the fact that the co-conspirators had been arrested suggests that the defendant would have dismantled his laboratory, assuming that there was one previously in existence. Finally, the fact that co-conspirators had guns does not support an entry without notice.

United States v. Mendonsa, 989 F.2d 366 (9th Cir. 1993)

Though the police heard noise inside, were aware that one of the occupants was a parolee from an armed robbery conviction, and that drug activity was known to have occurred at the location, this did not excuse a violation of the knock and announce requirement.

United States v. Moore, 91 F.3d 96 (10th Cir. 1996)

The police approached the defendant’s house with a search warrant and within three seconds of announcing their presence battered the door down. This violated the constitutional requirement that the police knock and announce. Even if the police were aware of the existence of guns in the house, this was not sufficient, absent any proof that the officers were concerned about their safety.

United States v. Stewart, 867 F.2d 581 (10th Cir. 1989)

Exigent circumstances did not justify a SWAT Team’s use of a steel battering ram and stun grenade to serve a residential search warrant. There was no knowledge on the part of officers that such force was required. All evidence seized during the course of the ensuing search was suppressed. The mere fact that drug dealers commonly carry firearms and may destroy evidence does not excuse compliance with the knock and announce rule.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Neutral and Detached Magistrate)

United States v. Horton, 863 F.3d 1041 (8th Cir. 2017)

The government utilized a Network Investigative Technique (NIT) to obtain information from the defendant’s laptop computer. Even though some of the information obtained was not within the defendant’s legitimate expectation of privacy, the information was contained on his laptop, for which he did have a legitimate expectation of privacy. The agents obtained a search warrant from a Magistrate in another district, who had no authority to issue a search warrant for a computer in another district. Nevertheless, the agents acted in good faith, so the evidence was not suppressed.

United States v. Krueger, 809 F.3d 1109 (10th Cir. 2015)

A magistrate judge in Kansas issued a search warrant to search the defendant’s home in Kansas. When the agents arrived to conduct the search, the defendant was not present and his roommate explained that the defendant (and his laptop) were in Oklahoma. The agent sought a new search warrant for the Oklahoma location from a Kansas Magistrate Judge. The Kansas Magistrate Judge issued the warrant. This violated Rule 41(b)(1) and the Tenth Circuit held that suppressing the evidence was required.

United States v. Master, 614 F.3d 236 (6th Cir. 2010)

The defendant lived in Coffee County. The police believed that he lived in Franklin County. A Franklin County judge issued a search warrant. The Sixth Circuit held that if a state judge does not have authority under state law to issue a search warrant for a particular location, the execution of the warrant violates the Fourth Amendment and the evidence must be suppressed, even in a federal court. This is not a case, like Virginia v. Moore, 553 U.S. 164 (2008), in which the violation does not implicate the Fourth Amendment and only violates a state law. However, the Sixth Circuit also concluded that pursuant to Herring, the lower court must weigh the cost of suppression against the benefit of deterrence. Because the officers apparently believed that the property was located in the county where the judge was located, they acted in good faith and if this is satisfactorily established at a hearing, the exclusionary rule should not apply.

United States v. Parker, 373 F.3d 770 (6th Cir. 2004)

The magistrate who issued the search warrant in this case was a part-time employee of the local jail in an administrative capacity. She did not qualify as a “neutral and detached magistrate” as required by the Fourth Amendment and the Leon good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Nexus between crime and place to be searched)

United States v. Griffith, 867 F.3d 1265 (D.C. Cir. 2017)

The police had reason to believe that the defendant had participated (perhaps as the getaway driver) in a homicide that occurred a year earlier. The search warrant affidavit reviewed all the facts amounting to probable cause and then sought permission to search the defendant’s current apartment (where he had moved after the homicide and a brief stint in jail). The warrant only sought authority to seize cell phones, because criminals communicate by phone. During the execution of the search warrant, the defendant threw a gun out the window. The D.C. Circuit held that (1) the warrant was deficient, because there was no probable cause that the defendant even had a cell phone or that it had any incriminating information contained in it; (2) there was no probable cause that a phone would be found in the apartment (as opposed to on his person if he were not present at the apartment when the warrant was executed); (3) the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply because the warrant was so lacking in probable cause to search or seize a cell phone; (4) the “abandonment” of the gun was the fruit of the execution of the defective search warrant and therefore the gun that was thrown out of the window was subject to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Abernathy, 843 F.3d 243 (6th Cir. 2016)

The search warrant affidavit stated that the police conducted a “trash pull” at the defendant’s residence and found marijuana residue. This evidence, alone, was insufficient to establish that evidence of drug trafficking could be found at the residence. See United States v. McPhearson, 469 F.3d 518 (6th Cir. 2006), noted below.

United States v. Brown, 826 F.3d 375 (6th Cir. 2016)

Though there was probable cause to search the defendant’s car; and though there was some evidence to believe that the defendant was involved in a heroin distribution conspiracy, there was insufficient information provided in the search warrant affidavit to justify a search of the defendant’s house. There was no information that he ever sold heroin, or possessed heroin in his house. Instead, the agents relied only on their knowledge about what types of items are typically found in a drug dealer’s house. The connection between the residence and the evidence of criminal activity must be specific and concrete, not “vague” or “generalized.” This is an inadequate basis to issue a search warrant. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply in this case, because the application “was so lacking in indicia of probable cause as to render official belief in its existence entirely unreasonable.”

United States v. Cordero-Rosario, 786 F.3d 64 (1st Cir. 2015)

The initial search warrant stated that the crime under investigation was “lewd actions” and that “in accordance with the interview of the child, there is currently pornography on the defendant’s computer. There was no information in the search warrant application about what the child said, how the alleged pornography was related to any offense, how the child knew about the presence of pornography on the computer, or why the affiant believed that pornography was evidence of a crime. The evidence should have been suppressed, because even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply to this warrant. Based on the discovery of child pornography during the search of the computer, the police went back to the apartment and secured the wife’s consent to search additional computers. The First Circuit held that this was arguably the fruit of the poisonous tree (exploiting the first illegal search), but further fact-finding was necessary to develop the record relating to the subsequent consent searches.

United States v. Grant, 682 F.3d 827 (9th Cir. 2012)

The police did not make a colorable claim that a weapon used in a homicide was likely to be found at the defendant’s house. The defendant, who lived in the house, was not tied to the homicide and his son, who may have been involved, was not shown to have gone to the defendant’s house, or had the gun brought there. Even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not resurrect this flawed search warrant.

United States v. Doyle, 650 F.3d 460 (4th Cir. 2011)

The search warrant in this case failed to allege that pictures possessed by the resident of a house were pornographic and failed to allege when – or where – the pictures were possessed. This warrant lacked probable cause and did not even survive a good faith Leon review. The probable cause basis of the warrant provided, the following: “Three minor children have come forward and stated that [Doyle] has sexually assaulted them at the Doyle residence. One victims [sic] disclosed to an Uncle that Doyle had shown the victim pictures of nude children.” This description failed to state that the “nude pictures” were pornographic (i.e., lewd depictions) and because there was no statement of when these events occurred, the information was stale (the court noted that the notion of staleness when it comes to computer evidence is rarely a basis to deny a search warrant, but in this case, there was no indication of when the pictures existed). In addition, the statement does not indicate where the pictures were shown to the child, so there was scant basis for believing that the evidence sought by the search warrant would be located at the residence, though the appellate court did not base its ultimate conclusion on this flaw in the warrant. With regard to the absence of probable cause, the court also noted that evidence of child molestation does not automatically authorize the search for child pornography.

United States v. Roach, 582 F.3d 1192 (10th Cir. 2009)

The search warrant affidavit documented years of gang activity by numerous members of the gang. The incidents involving the defendant were numerous, but the last identified offense was years prior to the issuance of the warrant. The warrant was issued for the defendant’s girlfriend’s house, where he was believed to be living. The only link to the house was the assertion in the affidavit that the officers believed that he was living there. The Tenth Circuit held that the information was insufficient, as well as being stale, to support a search warrant for the house. But the search was saved by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Higgins, 557 F.3d 381 (6th Cir. 2009)

The information provided to the Magistrate about the informant’s reliability and any corroboration of his allegations that the defendant supplied him the drugs with which he was caught was insufficient to provide a probable cause basis to search the defendant’s house. Not only was the informant’s veracity insufficiently revealed: the affidavit also failed to reveal any connection between the drugs that were allegedly acquired from the defendant, and the defendant’s house. The affidavit did not say that the informant had ever been in the defendant’s house, or seen drugs in the defendant’s house. Despite these flaws in the affidavit, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied.

United States v. Hodson, 543 F.3d 286 (6th Cir. 2008)

The fact that the defendant was indisputably a child molester did not provide probable cause to believe that there was child pornography on his computer. The officer, moreover, could not have executed the warrant in good faith, because the application contained virtually no information that would have supported the search for pornography.

United States v. West, 520 F.3d 604 (6th Cir. 2008)

Two search warrants were issued in this case. The first was devoid of probable cause, because it contained bare bones assertions about the defendant (all of which were based on hearsay statements that the affiant learned from other officers and individuals). The warrant also failed to link any criminal activity on the part of the defendant with the location that the police wanted to search. The warrant did not even satisfy the Leon good faith standard. The second warrant set forth facts that an informant told the affiant that the defendant confessed to a murder and the body could be found in a well at a certain location; the warrant sought authorization to search the defendant’s van. The affiant, however, failed to reveal that the informant was serving time in federal custody and that the police went to the location where the body was supposedly located and found nothing – not even a well.

United States v. McPhearson, 469 F.3d 518 (6th Cir. 2006)

The bare bones search warrant which stated that a person was arrested in front of his house and that he had drugs in his pocket was so deficient in setting forth probable cause that drugs could be found in the house that even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule could not resurrect the search.

United States v. Frazier, 423 F.3d 526 (6th Cir. 2005)

The information provided by confidential informants linked the defendant to drug dealing, but did not link the defendant’s premises to the illegal activity. There was no probable cause based on the search warrant affidavit to search the premises. Nevertheless, the officers acted in good faith and the evidence would not be suppressed.

United States v. Laughton, 409 F.3d 744 (6th Cir. 2005)

The search warrant in this case was woefully inadequate in establishing any nexus between certain criminal activity that a CI reported and that the officer supposedly corroborated and the location that the search warrant targeted. The warrant simply said that the CI reported buying drugs (not from whom, or where) and that the officer corroborated the CI’s statements. The search warrant application then sought permission to search a particular location but failed to link that location to the CI. Not only was the warrant defective, but reliance on it by the police was not reasonable and the exclusionary rule applied, notwithstanding Leon.

United States v. Gourde, 382 F.3d 1003 (9th Cir. 2004) REVERSED BY en banc COURT.
The FBI learned about a website that permitted members to download child pornography. Defendant Gourde was determined to have been a member of the website for two months. The FBI obtained a search warrant, claiming that any member would have had access to the child pornography. The affiant offered various expert opinions about the M.O. of child pornographers on the internet. The Ninth Circuit held that there was no probable cause to search the defendant’s house and seize his computers based on this information. Moreover, Leon did not apply, because no officer could have relied in good faith on this warrant. There was no information that Gourde had actually downloaded any files from the website, though the FBI acknowledged that it had the capability of determining whether he did prior to the time the search was executed. See also United States v. Weber, 923 F.2d 1338 (9th Cir. 1990). REVERSED BY EN BANC COURT IN 2006. – 440 F.3d 1065 (9th Cir. 2006) (en banc).

United States v. Carpenter, 360 F.3d 591 (6th Cir. 2004)

Information contained in the search warrant established that marijuana was found growing near a residence and that a road was seen from the location where the marijuana was seen and the residence. This information did not amount to probable cause to believe that evidence of a crime could be found in the residence. The officers acted in good faith, however, in relying on the search warrant.

United States v. Zimmerman, 277 F.3d 426 (3rd Cir. 2002)

The police obtained a search warrant to search the defendant’s home to look for child and adult pornography. There was no information in the warrant application that indicated that any pornography would be found in his home, though there was information that one clip of adult pornography was seen in the home months earlier by one (or perhaps more than one) high school student. That information, however, was stale. The police relied for the most part on evidence that the defendant was believed to have molested numerous high school students (he was a high school teacher). The police also offered expert opinion in the warrant application that child molesters often keep child pornography in their houses. The Third Circuit held that the warrant was lacking in probable cause and, in fact, could not even have been executed in good faith, given the absence of any evidence that pornography was then located in the house. The use of a seven page, single spaced, affidavit which never even mentioned child pornography could not reasonably have been relied upon to obtain a search warrant. Addressing the boilerplate “expert” opinion, the court wrote, “Rambling boilerplate recitations designed to meet all law enforcement needs do not produce probable cause . . . Experience and expertise, without more, is insufficient to establish probable cause.”

United States v. Ricciardelli, 998 F.2d 8 (1st Cir. 1993)

Postal inspectors mailed a child pornography tape to the defendant at a P.O. Box and obtained an anticipatory warrant from the Magistrate. Though the Constitution does not forbid anticipatory warrants per se, the magistrate must be sure that the triggering event is certain, leaving no discretion to the searching agents, and second, the contraband must be on a sure and irreversible course to its destination. In this case, however, the triggering event was not the arrival of the tape at the house, but the defendant’s receipt of the tape, wherever that might occur – in this case, the post office. Because the warrant did not specifically and expressly require that the tape be delivered to the house before the warrant was executed (it just required that the defendant obtain possession of the tape), it failed to satisfy the critical nexus requirement. The officers could not have relied on this warrant in good faith.

United States v. Lalor, 996 F.2d 1578 (4th Cir. 1993)

An informant stated that the defendant was frequently selling drugs at the corner of Northern Parkway and Loch Raven Boulevard. A second informant provided the same information, and told the officer what the defendant’s home address was. The officer confirmed that the defendant lived at that location and also saw the defendant’s car at the location where the sales allegedly occurred. In determining whether a search warrant is supported by probable cause, the crucial element is not whether the target of the search is suspected of a crime, but whether it is reasonable to believe that the items to be seized will be found in the place to be searched, Zurcher v. Stanford Daily, 436 U.S. 547 (1978). See also United States v. Ramos, 923 F.2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1991); United States v. Stout, 641 F.Supp. 1074 (N.D.Cal. 1986). Nevertheless, the officer acted in good faith in executing the search in this case.

United States v. Brown, 951 F.2d 999 (9th Cir. 1991)

Though there was considerable evidence that members of a law enforcement narcotics team were corrupt and that members stole evidence, including money which was seized, this did not authorize the search of each member’s house. There was not enough specific information dealing with each member’s culpability to justify the search of every house. Also, the narcotics unit was not a “wholly illegitimate” organization, thus justifying the search of every member’s residence. Nevertheless, the officers consulted with an AUSA before obtaining the search warrant and acted in good faith, thus the evidence would not be suppressed.

United States v. Hove, 848 F.2d 137 (9th Cir. 1988)

In the affidavit in support of the search warrant, the police officers failed to link the suspect with the residence which was sought to be searched. This inadvertent failure to link the suspect to the premises rendered the affidavit insufficient and the officers could not have relied on it in good faith in searching the premises. This absence of good faith exists even though the officer in fact knew the link between the suspect and the residence.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Particularity of Place to Be Searched)

Officers who were executing a search warrant and who were put on notice of a risk that they had entered a home that was unconnected with the illegal activity described in the warrant had an immediate duty to retreat.

United States v. McLellan, 792 F.3d 200 (1st Cir. 2015)

The First Circuit, citing Garrison, noted that if officers while executing a warrant, realize that the warrant incorrectly identified the place to be searched, or that the place being searched was a multi-dwelling house, they have a duty to discontinue the search.

United States v. Bershchansky, 788 F.3d 102 (2d Cir. 2015)

The agents signed a search warrant application verifying in detail that they wanted to search Apartment 2 at a certain location where the defendant supposedly lived and where his computer IPS address was located. The warrant was issued. When the agents arrived, they realized that the defendant lived in Apartment 1. They searched that apartment. The Second Circuit held that the search was improper and was not conducted in good faith. This was not a case of a mere typographical error.

United States v. Shaw, 707 F.3d 666 (6th Cir. 2013)

The police had an arrest warrant for Ms. Brown, located at 3171 Hendricks Ave. They went to the general area and found two houses across the street from each other, both of which had the number 3170. Rather than further investigating the situation, the police chose the house that appeared to be occupied, knocked on the door and announced that they had a warrant, went in, conducted a sweep search and found cocaine. The occupant, Mr. Shaw, was arrested and prosecuted for the cocaine. The house was not 3171 Hendricks and Ms. Brown did not live in Shaw’s house. The Sixth Circuit held that the evidence should be suppressed. There was no basis to enter that house; there was no basis to search that house; the officers were not acting in good faith when they said that they had a warrant for that house, or when they remained in the house after determining that it was the wrong house.

United States v. Voustianiouk, 685 F.3d 206 (2d Cir. 2012)

The police had a search warrant to search the first floor apartment at a certain address. When they arrived, they realized that the defendant lived in the second floor apartment so they went there and conducted a search. The Second Circuit held that this amounted to a warrantless search that would not be saved by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Clark, 638 F.3d 89 (2d Cir. 2011)

The search warrant authorized the police to search the premises located at a certain address which was described as a “multi-family” dwelling. The warrant did not specify which unit to search, nor did it reveal how many units were present in this “multi-family” dwelling.
The warrant lacked probable cause to the extent that it authorized a search of the entire structure at that address. However, the Second Circuit concluded that Leon saved the search.

United States v. Ritter, 416 F.3d 256 (3rd Cir. 2005)

The police obtained a search warrant for a house, but learned after entering that it was a multi-dwelling structure. The proper course of conduct was for the police to return to the magistrate and seek a more particularized warrant. In deciding whether to suppress any evidence, the question is what the police observed prior to determining that the house was a multi-dwelling structure. See Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79 (1987).

United States v. Schroeder, 129 F.3d 439 (8th Cir. 1997)

The police had a search warrant that particularly described a certain location, including a mobile home on the property, as well as a vehicle. The police disobeyed the clear description in the warrant, however, and entered another mobile home (albeit owned by the same person as the target mobile home). The police did not act reasonably in executing the search warrant in the manner they did and therefore the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.

United States v. Curry, 911 F.2d 72 (8th Cir. 1990)

The search warrant in this case failed to identify the place which was subject to be searched. However, the affidavit did identify the location. Nevertheless, the search warrant did not incorporate the affidavit specifically. A second search warrant, which did identify the location, was based on evidence uncovered during the execution of the first search warrant. The second search warrant was also invalid because based on unlawfully obtained evidence. The Eighth Circuit, however, holds that the searches were undertaken by the officers in good faith and thus the exclusionary rule was not applicable.

United States v. Collins, 830 F.2d 145 (9th Cir. 1987)

The search warrant did not describe the place to be searched with sufficient particularity. The search warrant gave a numbered street address and also stated that the house was the last one on the west side of the street. The number did not correspond with the last house on the west side of the street. The officers searched both houses: The one at the correct street number and the one at the end of the west side of the street. The court holds that the search warrant failed the particularity requirement.

United States v. Ellis, 971 F.2d 701 (11th Cir. 1992)

A search warrant directed the police to the wrong address. When they arrived there, the occupant told them where to go to find the target location. Because the information in the warrant did not adequately describe the place to be searched, the warrant failed the particularity test. Furthermore, the officers did not execute the warrant in good faith, because the officers did not actually know the correct location (such as those cases where the warrant simply has a typographical error, but the officer knew the correct location to be searched). Here, uncertain where the defendant lived, the officers simply accepted the word of the occupant of the first house.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Particularity of Things to be Seized)

Though the search warrant application and the supporting affidavit both listed the types of items that the officers intended to seize, the search warrant itself did not list any items that were authorized to be seized and failed to incorporate the affidavit or application. The Court held that when an affidavit is needed to render the search warrant itself valid, the affidavit must be served on the person who is being searched at the time the warrant is served. The Supreme Court held that the search was unlawful and the agent could be sued by the homeowners.

The “to be seized clause” stated, “Items to be searched for and seized include but are not limited to” followed by a list of categories. This allowed the agents to search for and seize anything. The warrant was overbroad and not subject to the good faith exception. A phrase “not limited to” may be applied to a limited category, but not the entire search. See also Cassady v. Goering, 567 F.3d 628 (10th Cir. 2009).

United States v. Russian, 848 F.3d 1239 (10th Cir. 2017)

The search warrant application in this case requested permission to search two cell phones of the defendant that had already been seized when he was arrested, as well as permission to search his residence. The warrant, however, authorized the police to search residence and seize cell phones found in the residence, but did not authorize the search of the phones already seized. This warrant did not authorize the search of the phones. The officers acted in good faith, however, so no suppression.

United States v. Franz, 772 F.3d 134 (3rd Cir. 2014)

The warrant presented to the target at the time the search is executed must contain a list of the items to be seized. The failure to have a particularized list in this case was a constitutional violation, but the officers executed the warrant in good faith.

United States v. Galpin, 720 F.3d 436 (2d Cir. 2013)

The search warrant affidavit provided inadequate probable cause to support the search and seizure of defendant’s computer. The application sought a warrant to look for evidence of the violation of a particular New York statute, “and or federal statutes”. That statute related to the registration of internet service provider and communications accounts (the officer simply cited the wrong code section). The Second Circuit held that this warrant violated the particularity requirement in that it did not properly limit the scope of the search, or, for that matter, the type of evidence that the police were authorized to search for. The Second Circuit emphasized the importance of having proper limits when a computer is the subject of the search. The court also addressed the proper method of “severing” the improper portions of a search warrant from the legitimate clauses. If only limited parts of the warrant are valid (in a warrant that is otherwise sweeping and invalid), suppression of the evidence is appropriate. However, where isolated portions are invalid, the court may uphold the search that is authorized by the legitimate portions of the warrant.
United States v. Rosa, 626 F.3d 56 (2d Cir. 2010)

The search warrant authorized the agents to seize all computers and other hardware. The application specified that the agents were looking for child pornography. The application, however, was not incorporated into the search warrant. The Second Circuit agreed that the search of the computers was improper, because of the lack of particularity regarding what the agents were searching for. Nevertheless, the exclusionary rule did not apply, because the agents did, in fact, know what they were looking for and acted in good faith.

Cassady v. Goering, 567 F.3d 628 (10th Cir. 2009)

A search warrant that authorized the seizure of all possible evidence of any crime was overbroad. The overbreadth of the warrant in this case rendered the entire warrant defective (regardless of the manner in which the warrant was actually executed). Note that this is a civil case, so the question did not focus on suppressing evidence, but rather on the liability of the sheriff for executing the warrant.

United States v. SDI Future Health, Inc., 568 F.3d 684 (9th Cir. 2009)

The search warrant was overbroad with respect to certain categories of documents that the agents were required to seize. The Ninth Circuit held that his is not technically a “particularity” defect, because the warrant was particular – it was just too broad. However, the Court held that suppression of those categories of documents was sufficient to cure the defect. This was not a case in which total suppression was required, as in United States v. Kow, 58 F.3d 423 (9th Cir. 1995); United States v. Cardwell, 680 F.2d 75 (9th Cir. 1982) and United States v. Spilotro, 800 F.2d 959 (9th Cir. 1986).

United States v. Angelos, 433 F.3d 738 (10th Cir. 2006)

Though the FBI and the AUSA intended to get a search warrant that would have allowed the agents to search the defendant’s car and house (and there was, in fact, probable cause to search both the car and the house), they mistakenly submitted a search warrant that only identified a safe in the house and the car as the target of the search. Searching the entire house was therefore impermissible. Moreover, because the search warrant clearly only authorized the search of the car and the safe, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. The evidence suppressed, however, was limited to the evidence that was seized that was not located in the car or safe.

San Jose Charter of Hells Angels Motorcycle Club v. City of San Jose, 402 F.3d 962 (9th Cir. 2005)

A search warrant that authorized the seizure of “any evidence of gang affiliation” was too broad and the execution of the warrant was so abusive (including shooting dogs) that the officers would not be entitled to qualified immunity.

United States v. Bridges, 344 F.3d 1010 (9th Cir. 2003)

There was probable cause to search the defendant’s office based on the information in the application that documented his efforts to provide illegal tax advice to various clients, including undercover agents. The search warrant in this case, however, was overly broad. It listed, among the items to be seized, “All records . . . documents . . . computer hardware and software . . .” Though this list was detailed, it was too expansive. There was simply no boundary to what could be seized. In addition, the warrant did not specify the crimes that were the subject of the search (nor did the warrant incorporate the application) so there was no limitation in that manner. Though the application was detailed, the warrant was not. All evidence should have been suppressed. (No discussion of Leon).

_Doe v. Groody_, 361 F.3d 232 (3rd Cir. 2003)

The warrant particularly described the location to be searched and the people who were to be searched at that location. The attached (and incorporated affidavit) included additional people that the affiant believed should be searched. The affidavit could not broaden the scope of the narrowly drawn search warrant, and searching other people at the location was improper. (This is a civil rights case that was brought by other people at the premises who claimed that searching them violated their fourth amendment rights).

_United States v. Shugart_, 117 F.3d 838 (5th Cir. 1997)

Though the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied, the search warrant in this case insufficiently specified the items to be seized. The warrant was a boilerplate narcotics search warrant (focusing on items relating to the possession and distribution of drugs), but the agents were actually looking for narcotics manufacturing evidence.

_In re Grand Jury Investigation Concerning Solid State Devices, Inc._, 130 F.3d 853 (9th Cir. 1997)

The government established probable cause that certain practices of the target corporation were fraudulent. Indeed, there was information that the company "routinely" engaged in fraudulent practices. Nevertheless, the corporation itself was not pervaded by fraud, in the sense that the corporation had little legitimate business. Therefore, a warrant which resulted in the seizure of approximately 90% of the corporation's records over a five year period, including 2,000 file drawers, was overbroad and the target's motion for return of seized property should have been granted.

_United States v. McGrew_, 122 F.3d 847 (9th Cir. 1997)

The agents provided an affidavit in support of a search warrant which set forth probable cause to search the defendant's residence. The warrant, however, contained no limitation whatsoever on what could be seized: it simply authorized the agents to search the defendant's residence. The affidavit was not attached to the warrant (though it was incorporated by reference), at least one of the searching agents did not know the contents of the affidavit, and the affidavit was not served on the defendant at the time of the search. The government explained that it did not want to disclose the identity of the confidential informants. This was an unlawful "general" search and was not saved by _Leon_. The requirement of particularity serves two functions: the agents are informed of the limitation relating to what they can seize and the target is informed of what the agents are entitled to seize. Neither goal was achieved in this case.

_United States v. Falon_, 959 F.2d 1143 (1st Cir. 1992)
When a corporation is entirely consumed by fraud, an “all records” search is permissible. Similarly, when an individual runs his business, not in a corporate form, but in an entirely illegitimate manner, an “all records” search is permissible. However, when the target of such a search is the person’s home, an “all records” search is not appropriate. In such cases, the warrant should specify business-related documents in order to minimize the seizure of the defendant’s personal non-business related documents. The appropriate remedy is partial suppression – suppression of those items which should not have been seized.

United States v. Fuccillo, 808 F.2d 173 (1st Cir. 1987)

The search warrant in this case authorized the seizure of cartons of women’s clothing, the contents of those cartons, without identifying the contents of the cartons, and control slips identifying the stores intended to receive those cartons. The vice with this warrant was the failure to specify what types of clothing were subject to seizure – that is, what clothing was believed to have been stolen and thus within the parameters of the search warrant affidavit. The Court holds that the warrant was overbroad on its face and that the good faith exception did not apply because the obvious infirmity of the warrant.

United States v. George, 975 F.2d 72 (2d Cir. 1992)

A search warrant which authorized the seizure of various items and “any other evidence relating to the commission of a crime” was not sufficiently particular. An officer could not rely on this warrant in good faith. There was no limiting language in the warrant indicating what “crimes” were the focus of the search. Furthermore, a sufficiently particular affidavit does not cure an overbroad warrant: resort to an affidavit to remedy a warrant’s lack of particularity is only available when it is incorporated by reference in the warrant itself and attached to it.

United States v. Buck, 813 F.2d 588 (2d Cir. 1987)

The search warrant in this case authorized the search and seizure of any papers, things or property of any kind relating to the robbery and murder under investigation. The court holds that this type of warrant is insufficiently particular and is invalid under the Fourth Amendment. However, it is not so facially invalid as to render the police officer’s reliance on it unjustified. Therefore, the good faith exception saves the search in this case.

United States v. Beaumont, 972 F.2d 553 (5th Cir. 1992)

If a search warrant fails to particularize the items to be seized, but specifically incorporates the affidavit which provides the necessary specificity, the warrant is lawful. But if the warrant does not specifically incorporate the affidavit, then the affidavit does not cure the defective warrant. Nevertheless, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applies.

Rickert v. Sweeney, 813 F.2d 907 (8th Cir. 1987)

The search warrant in this case authorized an IRS agent to search and seize various business records belonging to tax payers and constituting evidence of violations of the general conspiracy statute and of the general tax evasion statute. This is insufficiently particularized to satisfy the Fourth Amendment.

United States v. Kow, 58 F.3d 423 (9th Cir. 1995)

A search warrant authorized the seizure of virtually every document at the target corporation’s office. The warrant did not limit the time period of relevant documents, did not provide any limiting language to the broad categories of items to be seized and did not even specify the nature of the fraud which was supposedly evidenced in the documents. The government would not be permitted to use evidence which was lawfully seized: the court would not sever the overbroad portions. Indeed, each of the categories of documents was overbroad. Finally, this was not a search warrant which could be rescued by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Even though two AUSA’s, a magistrate, and the agents believed that the warrant was valid, the court concludes that no reasonable agent could have relied on the warrant in good faith.

United States v. Van Damme, 48 F.3d 461 (9th Cir. 1995)

The police had probable cause to obtain a search warrant. However, the warrant instructed the officers to seize items set forth in attachment #1, but there was no attachment. The only attachment which existed accompanied the search warrant application. In this situation, the officers could not seize anything other than what was obviously contraband in plain view.

United States v. Clark, 31 F.3d 831 (9th Cir. 1994)

The search warrant authorized the seizure of narcotic controlled substances, drug paraphernalia, marijuana cultivation equipment, instructions, notes, cultivation magazines, currency, documents and records and fruits and instrumentalities of a violation of Title 21 U.S.C. §841(a)(1). This latter clause was too overbroad; it provided to the executing officers no guidance as to what was to be seized. This provision was not saved by Leon. All evidence seized pursuant to this clause of the warrant would be suppressed.

United States v. Weber, 915 F.2d 1282 (9th Cir. 1990)

The defendant’s house was searched pursuant to a search warrant that was directed at the presence of obscene material in the defendant’s home. The search warrant, however, allowed officers to search for a wide variety of magazines and advertising materials, none of which was backed up by probable cause. The only evidence against this defendant was the fact that a couple of ads addressed to him apparently depicted child pornography. The affiant’s statement about the “proclivities of pedophiles” did not support a wall-to-wall search of the house. The affidavit simply did not support a search for child pornography in general. The court rejected certain aspects of the warrant as “rambling boiler-plate recitations designed to meet all law enforcement needs.” Finally, the court concludes that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. The court amended the opinion at 923 F.2d 1338 (9th Cir. 1990).

United States v. Stubbs, 873 F.2d 210 (9th Cir. 1989)

The search warrant in this case was overbroad. There was no reference to criminal activity; it only described generic categories of documents without any effort to specifically describe the items which the officers could have seized under a probable cause standard.

United States v. Spilotro, 800 F.2d 959 (9th Cir. 1986)

The search warrant in this case authorized the search of a jewelry store and the seizure of all notebooks, notes, documents, address books, and other records; safety deposit boxes, keys, cash, gemstones and other items of jewelry and other assets, all of which were evidence of the violations of thirteen enumerated statutes. Because the law enforcement officers could have been more particular in regard to what they believed was evidence or contraband, the search warrant in this case was invalid. Furthermore, because the search warrant was not attached to the affidavit, it was not permissible to cure the defects in the warrant by referring to the affidavit. Finally, because the warrant was facially deficient, the police officers could not have relied upon it in good faith and therefore the evidence was suppressed. The court also discusses the government’s argument that even though portions of the search warrant were broad, the items which were seized pursuant to the search warrant paragraphs which were not overbroad could still be used as evidence. The court rejects this argument: The search warrant was overbroad through and through. No items were specifically identified in the search warrant; consequently nothing could be seized lawfully. The court also rejects the government’s argument that certain items were found in plain view and could be used in evidence under that rule. The court holds that because the warrant was overbroad, the police officers had no right to be in the jewelry store and consequently had no right to have a “plain view” of the items which were obviously illegal.

United States v. Washington, 797 F.2d 1461 (9th Cir. 1986)

Sections of the federal warrant in this case which authorized the seizure of documents showing an employer/employee relationship between persons named and unnamed and evidence of defendant’s association with anyone, did not meet the particularity requirement of the Fourth Amendment. Furthermore, the search warrant was so facially deficient that officers could not have acted in “objectively reasonable” reliance upon it.

United States v. Leary, 846 F.2d 592 (10th Cir. 1988)

A search warrant authorized agents to seize a broad range of records “relating to” violations of federal export laws. The affidavit only suggested a violation of the export laws relating to the export of a particular type of equipment to a particular foreign country. The warrant was thus overbroad and could not be saved by the “good faith” doctrine. The agents who executed the search warrant paid little heed to the few limits which were placed on the warrant.

United States v. Medlin, 842 F.2d 1194 (10th Cir. 1988)

During the course of a search conducted pursuant to a federal search warrant, a state deputy sheriff seized numerous stolen items which had no relationship whatsoever to the object of the search. The court holds that everything which was seized would be suppressed. The reason for the exclusion of all evidence was the executing officers’ “flagrant disregard” for the terms of the warrant.
Search and Seizure
(Plain View)

The police frisked the defendant after he was stopped for engaging in “evasive” behavior. The police officer conducted a _Terry_ frisk. While frisking the defendant, the officer felt an object which was clearly not a weapon, but which felt like it might be contraband. The Supreme Court held that an officer who is engaged in a legal _Terry_ frisk of a subject may seize an object which the officer realizes immediately to be contraband. This is the “plain touch” analogue to the “plain view” exception. That is, the officer need not limit his seizures to weapons if he is immediately aware that he is touching contraband. Applying the rule to this case, however, the Court concluded that the officer was not immediately aware that he was touching contraband. Rather, “the officer determined that the lump was contraband only after squeezing, sliding and otherwise manipulating the contents of the defendant’s pocket – a pocket which the officer already knew contained no weapon.” The seizure, therefore, was not authorized by the “plain touch” exception.

The Fourth Amendment does not prohibit the warrantless seizure of evidence in plain view even though the discovery of the evidence was not inadvertent. Although inadvertence is a characteristic of most legitimate plain view seizures, it is not a necessary condition. An officer obtained a search warrant to look for the proceeds of an armed robbery. The officer was also aware of weapons that were used during the course of the robbery, but the warrant did not authorize the officer to search for, or seize any weapons. The officer did however seize weapons while searching through the defendant’s house. He testified that while he was searching for the proceeds, he also was interested in finding other evidence connecting the defendant to the robbery. Thus, the seized evidence was not discovered “inadvertently.” Nevertheless, the evidence was admissible. The police were executing a lawful search warrant at the time that these items were discovered. It was immediately apparent to the officer that these items constituted incriminating evidence, and thus they were permitted to seize them. In short, the search was authorized by the warrant, the seizure was authorized by the Plain View Doctrine.

During the course of a search executed under the exigent circumstances exception, police officers lifted up a stereo in order to record the serial number. The police officers believed that the stereo equipment was stolen and needed to get the serial number to confirm this. At trial, the State argued that the stereo was in plain view and thus no search warrant was required even though the search went beyond that which was justified by the exigent circumstances. The Supreme Court reverses: Though the stereo may have been in plain view, lifting it up and looking at the serial number was not part of a plain view search.

_United States v. Lewis_, 864 F.3d 937 (8th Cir. 2017)

The defendant was an employee at a Tattoo shop. The police were looking for a suspect and entered the premises and went into a work area where the defendant was located. After entering, the police saw a gun in a holster and seized it. Almost immediately after seizing it, the defendant acknowledged that he was a convicted felon. The Eighth Circuit held that the seizure of the gun was not supported by either the plain view exception (because at the moment of the seizure there was no probable cause to believe that the gun was illegally possessed), and was not justified by officer safety, because there was no reason to be fearful of the gun on the shelf in a holster.

United States v. Carey, 836 F.3d 1092 (9th Cir. 2016)

The police had a lawful wiretap to listen to “T-14” which was believed to be Escamilla’s phone. After a few days, however, the police realized that someone else was using that phone and the calls – though drug-related – were not related to Escamilla’s drug conspiracy. The Ninth Circuit holds that the “plain hearing” exception to the warrant requirement applies. As in the case of a search, the police do not suffer the consequences of the exclusionary rule if incriminating calls are heard by police who are lawfully listening to a intercepted calls. But, also consistent with “plain view” jurisprudence, once the police realize that they are listening to calls that were not the basis for the probable cause showing (or the wiretap order), they must stop listening and seek a new wiretap order. See Maryland v. Garrison, 480 U.S. 79 (1987).

United States v. Gordon, 741 F.3d 64 (10th Cir. 2014)

The police properly entered a house after receiving a domestic violence call. Once in the house, the police also properly seized a shotgun seen in plain view in order to protect everybody present. Once the defendant was removed from the scene, however, the continued seizure of the shotgun was not permissible. During the time that the police continued this improper seizure, they learned that the defendant was a convicted felon. While holding that the seizure was a constitutional violation, the appellate court also concluded that the violation was de minimus and therefore excluding the evidence was not required.

Gentry v. Sevier, 597 F.3d 838 (7th Cir. 2010)

The defendant was walking with a wheel barrow through a neighborhood late at night. The police were called. When the police arrived, they summoned the defendant over to their car and told him to “keep his hands up.” This amounted to a seizure, which was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The officer then patted down the defendant, locating a garage opener. There was no basis for this frisk: there was no reason to believe the defendant was armed or dangerous and he was not subject to a legitimate arrest or detention. Moreover, there was no basis to keep the garage door opener (and thereafter walk down the street seeing if it opened any garage in the neighborhood), because it was not a weapon, or apparent to be contraband. Finally, the search of the wheelbarrow was illegal. Though some items on the top of the pile in the wheelbarrow were subject to plain view, other items below the surface could only be seen when the officer probed beneath the surface. The defendant’s trial counsel was ineffective in failing to move to suppress the fruits of the search.

United States v. Lemus, 596 F.3d 512 (9th Cir. 2010)

The majority opinion in this case approved an exigent circumstances (or security sweep) search that resulted in the plain view discovery of a gun. The full court refused to hear the case en banc. However, in a lengthy dissent to the denial of en banc review, Judge Kozinski decried the excessive reliance by the government on the plain view doctrine to justify seizures of evidence that never should have been in the plain view of the government because of the pretextual reliance on other search warrant exceptions. Judge Kozinski’s dissent includes the following passages: “Whatever may have been left of the Fourth Amendment . . . is now gone. The evisceration of this crucial constitutional protector of the sanctity and privacy of what Americans consider their castles is pretty much complete. Welcome to the fish bowl. . . . How has it come to this? There’s a simple answer: Plain view is killing the Fourth Amendment. Because our plain view case law is so favorable to the police, they have a strong incentive to maneuver into a position where they can find things in plain view, or close enough to lie about it.” It is worth noting that Judge Kozinski also condemned the plain view doctrine in his majority opinion in Comprehensive Drug Testing, infra, in connection with the searches of computers.

United States v. Comprehensive Drug Testing, Inc., 579 F.3d 989 (9th Cir. 2009) (en banc)

In this en banc decision, amended in September 2010, the Ninth Circuit originally set forth specific rules that govern the search of a computer where a warrant specifically authorizes the search of the computer for certain documents. In this case, the warrant authorized the search of the computer to obtain certain patient records. The law enforcement agents, however, searched the entire computer records, claiming that they could not ensure that the target records were not located in other patients’ files. Thus, various non-target records were viewed and then seized under the plain view doctrine. The Ninth Circuit held that this type of search beyond the scope of the warrant is unlawful. Among other rules, Judge Kozinski, in his concurring opinion, wrote that Magistrates should avoid allowing the government to rely on the plain view doctrine; segregation of records should be handled by a neutral third party; the search protocol should explain the steps that will be taken to avoid reviewing the contents of the computer that are not spelled out in the warrant.

United States v. Garcia, 496 F.3d 495 (6th Cir. 2007)

When executing a search warrant for drugs, the police may not seize receipts and other financial documents that are later analyzed and determined to be evidence of unexplained wealth. The documents were not “readily apparent” to be evidence of a crime, and thus did not fall within the plain view exception. The court also rejected the government’s claim that it could legitimately seize a map with certain locations circled, and a notebook/journal, that was later determined to record drug deals.

United States v. Cellitti, 387 F.3d 618 (7th Cir. 2004)

The police entered a house in which the defendant and his girlfriend lived based on exigent circumstances. Once inside, the police were given consent by the girlfriend to look for a gun. While looking for the gun, the police found a set of keys which they ultimately determined fit a car. In one holding, the court concluded that the police did not seize the key under the plain view doctrine, because there was no reason to believe that the key was evidence of a crime. The girlfriend later consented to a search of the car in which they found an assault rifle. The Seventh Circuit held that the defendant had a legitimate expectation of privacy in the car. Moreover, if the girlfriend did not validly consent to a search of the car, then the defendant had standing to contest the search. The girlfriend’s consent was not valid, because the girlfriend was improperly in custody when her consent to search the car was obtained.

United States v. McLevain, 310 F.3d 434 (6th Cir. 2002)
The police had a warrant that authorized the entry into the defendant’s house to search for a fugitive. While in the house, the agents saw a “twist tie,” a cut cigarette filter, and spoon with residue. The officers believed that these items were methamphetamine paraphernalia. The Sixth Circuit holds that the seizure of these items (and using them as support for another search warrant) was not authorized by the plain view doctrine, because the fact that the items were contraband, or evidence of a crime was not immediately apparent. The court noted that there was no nexus between the items that were seized and the search warrant that gained the officers access to the house; the items might be characterized as “odd” but were not clearly contraband; and the information known to the police at the time of the seizure could not support a determination that the items were evidence of criminal activity.

United States v. Rutkowski, 877 F.2d 139 (1st Cir. 1989)

Because the platinum strips which were discovered by the police behind a wall of insulation were not immediately known to the officers to be incriminating, their seizure was not authorized under the plain view doctrine.

United States v. Jenkins, 124 F.3d 768 (6th Cir. 1997)

The police improperly entered the curtilage of the defendants’ home (their backyard) and seized items of evidence that were introduced at trial. This was not a lawful plain view search, because the entry into the backyard was not lawful and, therefore, the government could not prove that the items of evidence were viewed by an officer lawfully located in a place from which the object could be seen.

United States v. Beal, 810 F.2d 574 (6th Cir. 1987)

During the course of a search of a house and a seizure of a dresser, the police officers seized ten guns. These items looked like pens but were actually guns. The only thing which made them illegal was that they did not have a serial number as required by federal law. This was not immediately apparent to the police officers who seized the items. Consequently, the plain view doctrine did not justify the seizure in this case.

United States v. Brown, 79 F.3d 1499 (7th Cir. 1996)

Where the police lack probable cause to believe that an object in plan view is contraband without conducting some further search of the object – i.e., if its incriminating character is not immediately apparent – the plain view doctrine cannot justify its seizure. Here, the police saw a metallic, chrome object in a bag, and thought, but did not know, that it was a gun. Only after the bag was opened was it apparent that it was a gun. This was not a proper plain view seizure.

United States v. Spilotro, 800 F.2d 959 (9th Cir. 1986)

The police officers during the course of executing a search warrant which was facially overbroad found certain evidence which was obviously seizable. The court holds that if the search warrant is overbroad, the police officers have no right to be where they are, and thus the plain view doctrine has no application.

Winters v. Board of County Commissioners of Osage, 4 F.3d 848 (10th Cir. 1993)

The police had reason to believe that a stolen ring was at a particular pawnshop. A state regulation permitted warrantless “examinations” of the place of business of pawnshops, but not the seizure of items. The police went to the pawnshop, and asked a clerk to give the ring to the officer to be examined. The officer then seized it because it fit the description. This was not a valid seizure under the regulation, because seizures are not permitted by the regulation. It was not a valid plain view seizure, because the officer did not have the right to be in possession of the ring, or even to have warrantless access to it, so the officer could not claim that the discovery of the item occurred at a time when he was lawfully where he was supposed to be. The pawnshop had a viable §1983 action because of this seizure.

United States v. Donnes, 947 F.2d 1430 (10th Cir. 1991)

The police found a lens case in close proximity to a syringe. The lens case was not known to contain drugs and thus the opening of the case could not be justified by the plain view doctrine. Unlike a gun case, the police had no basis for opening the container after inadvertently discovering it.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Pre-Search Seizure)

Though Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), permits the police to detain people who are at the scene that is the target of a search warrant, in this case the police followed individuals who left the scene prior to the search and detained them about a mile away, without any information that they were subject to a Terry stop. The Supreme Court held that this amounted to an unlawful detention that necessitated the suppression of any evidence derived from the stop of the individuals.

United States v. Pratt, 915 F.3d 246 (4th Cir. 2019)

The police seized a cell phone from the defendant when he was arrested but waited 31 days to get a search warrant to examine the contents. The Fourth Circuit held that this violated the Fourth Amendment. The initial seizure was appropriate, but the delay in seeking a warrant was unjustified by any governmental interest. The contents of the phone should have been suppressed. (The Fourth Circuit relied primarily on the decision in Mitchell, discussed below).

United States v. Shrum, 908 F.3d 1219 (10th Cir. 2018)

The defendant’s 30-year old wife died at home and he called 911. The police and medical personnel arrived shortly thereafter and the wife was taken to the hospital and pronounced dead. The defendant went to the police station and was questioned. The police “secured” the house and for several hours, the defendant’s access to the house was limited. During the time the house was “secured” the police entered and took several photographs, some of which revealed the presence of ammunition. The defendant was charged with possession of ammunition by a convicted felon. The Tenth Circuit held that the house was, in fact, seized; there was no probable cause, or even an articulable suspicion, to interfere with the defendant’s access to the house and the seizure was therefore unlawful; the unlawful seizure resulted in the discovery of evidence; the discovery of evidence was not attenuated from the illegal seizure. There is no such thing as a “crime scene” investigation exception to the Fourth Amendment. The district court should have suppressed the evidence (discovery of the ammunition).

United States v. Watson, 703 F.3d 684 (4th Cir. 2013)

The police had probable cause to believe that drugs were being distributed from a convenience store. The defendant lived on the second floor of the store. After watching another man engaged in what appeared to be drug dealing at the store, the police detained the defendant as he was seen leaving the premises and started the process of obtaining a search warrant. The detention lasted for four hours. During this time, the defendant made an incriminating statement and a gun was found in his room when the warrant was later executed. The Fourth Circuit, distinguishing Illinois v. McArthur, held that the detention was invalid and the evidence was suppressed. Unlike in McArthur, the police did not have probable cause to believe that the defendant was involved in the drug dealing.

United States v. Cha, 597 F.3d 995 (9th Cir. 2010)
The police seized the defendant’s house and held it for twenty-four hours (not allowing the defendant to enter), while a search warrant was obtained. This was too long and the evidence obtained from the search that was conducted thereafter should have been suppressed, even though it could not be said that the search or the discovery of the evidence was the “fruit” of the illegal seizure. See Illinois v. McArthur, 531 U.S. 326 (2001) and Segura v. United States, 468 U.S. 796 (1984). Though the evidence was not discovered as the fruit of the illegal seizure, the discovery of the evidence was the direct result of the constitutional violation. The court also rejected the government’s effort to extend the Herring good faith exception to the exclusionary rule to this situation.

United States v. Mitchell, 565 F.3d 1347 (11th Cir. 2009)

If the police seize an item such as a computer from a house, based on probable cause (without consent to search it and without a search warrant authorizing the search or seizure), they must seek a warrant promptly. In this case, the police went to the defendant’s house and asked if he had any child pornography on his computer. He initially responded, “yes, probably.” He did not give the officers consent to seize the computer. Nevertheless, based on probable cause the officer seized the hard drive. He kept the hard drive in his office for several weeks (during which time he was on training and was otherwise occupied). Thereafter, twenty-one days after the computer was seized, he obtained a search warrant. The Eleventh Circuit held that this delay was impermissible and suppressed the evidence obtained from the computer. The court noted that personal computers contain a substantial amount of private information and depriving the defendant of the computer that length of time without a warrant violated his Fourth Amendment right to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures. Among other arguments rejected by the Eleventh Circuit, the notion that the search would have taken more than three weeks even if the warrant had been obtained on the day of the seizure, did not support the delay. The court observed that a hard drive of a personal computer is the “digital equivalent of its owner’s home, capable of holding a universe of private information.” For that reason, a three-week delay in starting the search process was not reasonable.

United States v. Ward, 144 F.3d 1024 (7th Cir. 1998)

The defendant checked his suitcase, which contained a kilogram of cocaine, on a bus from L.A. to Indianapolis, but did not board the bus. He flew to Indianapolis and awaited the arrival of the bus. When the bus stopped in St. Louis, the police became suspicious of the bag and took it out of the luggage compartment and asked the passengers if anybody claimed it. Nobody did, and the police confirmed that none of the passengers were heading for Indianapolis. The bag was taken out of the bus and the bus departed. Later, a drug dog alerted to the bag and a warrant was obtained. The Seventh Circuit concludes in this case that the luggage was “seized” when it was taken off the bus; however, there was a reasonable suspicion justifying the seizure. Relying on United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983), the court held that detaining luggage is the same as detaining a traveler and must be supported by an articulable suspicion. See also United States v. Puglisi, 723 F.2d 779 (11th Cir. 1984). This rule applies even if, as in this case, the traveler was not accompanying his luggage, because the detention would have deprived the traveler of his luggage at the ultimate destination. See United States v. Van Leeuwen, 397 U.S. 249 (1970) (detaining mail is not unlawful if it is delivered the next day). Because there was an articulable suspicion, however, the dog alert and the execution of a search warrant was permissible.

United States v. Madrid, 152 F.3d 1034 (8th Cir. 1998)

After the defendant and his colleague were arrested making a drug sale, the colleague told the police that some of the drugs came from the defendant’s house and that more drugs were left there. The police went back to that location and “secured” the home which involved detaining four occupants, and searching the house, including requiring each of the occupants to empty their pockets. The agents then endeavored to get a search warrant, including in the application information obtained during the search. The Court refused to allow the evidence to be admitted under an inevitable discovery theory because of the blatant violation of the defendant’s rights prior to getting a search warrant. The court distinguished both Segura v. United States, 468 U.S. 796 (1984) and Murray v. United States, 487 U.S. 533 (1988). In Segura and Murray, the warrant did not contain any information learned during the illegal search. Moreover, “the offensiveness of the officers’ actions in this case is not limited to the seizure of premises, but extends to the detention of occupants and the continued, prolonged, illegal search by wandering officers.”
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Private Search)

United States v. Ackerman, 831 F.3d 1292 (10th Cir. 2016)

The National Center for Missing and exploited Children (NCMEC) is a private non-profit entity that provides information about missing children and maintains records about child pornography victims. Nevertheless, it receives government funding, receives directions from Congress, and has unique law enforcement powers not enjoyed by private citizens. The Tenth Circuit concludes, therefore, that for Fourth Amendment purposes, NCMEC is a state actor and must obtain a search warrant before conducting a search. In this case, NCMEC opened emails from the defendant and provided them to the government.

United States v. Sparks, 806 F.3d 1323 (11th Cir. 2015)

The defendant inadvertently left a cell phone at a Walmart and an employee reviewed the contents prior to bringing the phone to the police station: “[O]nce an individual’s expectation of privacy in particular information has been frustrated by a private individual, the Fourth Amendment does not prohibit law enforcement’s subsequent use of that information even if obtained without a warrant . . . As a result, a warrantless law-enforcement search conducted after a private search violates the Fourth Amendment only to the extent to which it is broader than the scope of the previously occurring private search.” The court insisted that the limitation must be strictly applied. Even if the private party scrolls through the contents of a cell phone “photo album” and sees that there are videos in the album, law enforcement may not then engage in a warrantless viewing of the videos unless the video was previously viewed by the private party. Id. at 1336.

United States v. Lichtenberger, 786 F.3d 478 (6th Cir. 2015)

The defendant’s girlfriend viewed child pornography on the defendant’s computer. The police were summoned and the girlfriend showed the officer the contents of the computer, but not just the portion that she had previously viewed. When the police were examining the computer with the girlfriend, at that point she was acting as an agent of the police. The search of the computer with the girlfriend was not valid under the “private search” doctrine, which only allows the police to view what the private searcher has already viewed prior to police involvement. The Sixth Circuit held that the police may only view what they know “to a virtual certainty” was viewed by the private searcher.

United States v. Mazzarella, 784 F.3d 532 (9th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was convicted of bank fraud. At a subsequent trial relating to other defendants, a key witness (employee of the defendant’s company), testified that she obtained documents from the defendant’s company at the request of the FBI and also related that she had been urged to do so with the lure of not being prosecuted. The disclosure of this possible Fourth Amendment violation and Brady information, necessitated that the district court conduct a full evidentiary hearing.

United States v. Booker, 728 F.3d 535 (6th Cir. 2013)

1589
The defendant was arrested on charges that he possessed marijuana. The police became suspicious that he was hiding drugs in his rectum and brought him to a hospital. There, a doctor administered drugs that paralyzed the defendant for a few minutes, during which time a rectal examination was conducted that yielded crack cocaine. The Sixth Circuit held that this search shocked the conscience, just as the search in Rochin v. California 342 U.S. 165 (1942) and Winston v. Lee, 470 U.S. 753 (1985) did, and held that the evidence should have been suppressed. The doctor was acting as an agent of the police (he did not obtain consent to perform the medical procedure and did not give the defendant the option of simply using the toilet).

United States v. D'Andrea, 648 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2011)

If the defendant’s computer was “hacked,” this does not qualify as a prior “private search” that deprives the defendant of a reasonable expectation of privacy in the contents of the computer. In this case, a tipster called law enforcement officers to inform them that a person had uploaded child pornography to a cell phone. It was not clear how the tipster was able to view the images, however. Though the defendant had apparently uploaded the images and had attempted to share the images with her “partner,” she had inadvertently sent the images to the tipster. The tipster somehow got a hold of the password that enabled her to view the images. The defendant and her partner, however, did not knowingly share the password with the tipster. The agents then investigated by accessing the cell phone website and also viewed the images. The First Circuit remanded the case to the trial court to determine how the tipster initially viewed the images. If the defendant did not “share” the information with the tipster, or “assume the risk” that the tipster would share the information that the defendant shared with her, this did not qualify as a private search that would authorize a subsequent law enforcement search under Jacobsen.

United States v. Oliver, 630 F.3d 397 (5th Cir. 2011)

If a private person opens a container belonging to the defendant and views the contents and then calls the police, who also view the contents, the “private search” doctrine provides that the search conducted by the police does not violate the Fourth Amendment, because the defendant no longer has a reasonable expectation of privacy in the container. In this case, the court holds that this doctrine applies, even if the police were not aware that the private party had previously searched the container. The expectation of privacy evaporates by virtue of the private search, not the police officer’s awareness of the private search.

United States v. Hardin, 539 F.3d 404 (6th Cir. 2008)

The police wanted to determine if a suspect was located in a particular apartment. They asked a maintenance man to go to the apartment and inform the occupants that he needed to enter to fix a plumbing problem. He did not obtain the occupants’ consent – he simply entered. He then left and told the police that the suspect was there. The Sixth Circuit held that this was not valid consent. First, there was, as a matter of fact, no consent given. Second, the use of a ruse, such as this, is not appropriate, because there was no need to use a ruse to avoid violence or danger. This is not a case in which the police already had probable cause to enter the house and used the ruse for safety purposes. Moreover, the apartment manager was acting as an agent of the police, so it triggered the exclusionary rule.
United States v. Williams, 354 F.3d 497 (6th Cir. 2003)

The landlady of the defendant’s residence was concerned that there might be a water leak at the premises because of the high water bill. The landlady went to the premises and walked around, but found no leak — though she did find some suspicious plants. She called the DEA and they came back with her to the apartment and then claimed to go inside with her a second time to look again for a water leak. Of course, they found no leak, but did find a substantial quantity of marijuana. The Sixth Circuit rejected the government’s argument that this was a “private search.” First, the court held that it would extend Jacobsen to a private residence. That is, even if a private search has resulted in the discovery of contraband, the police may not follow up by conducting a subsequent search which exceeded the search undertaken by the private searchers, and thus was not legitimated by the prior private search.

United States v. Runyan, 275 F.3d 449 (5th Cir. 2001)

The defendant’s estranged wife went to the defendant’s house to locate some of her personal items. While there, she found disks that contained pornography, as well as pornographic pictures and a vibrator. The wife took the computer and various disks and gave them to the police. The police then reviewed the disks in great detail. The Tenth Circuit analyzed the Supreme Court decisions in Walter v. United States, 447 U.S. 649 (1980) and United States v. Jacobsen, 466 U.S. 109 (1984) and concluded that the appropriate inquiry is whether the government learned something from the police search that it could not have learned from the private searcher’s testimony. Courts have distinguished cases in which the police examine containers (or the contents of containers) that the private searcher never examined and cases in which the police examine the evidence in greater detail or with greater thoroughness than the previous examination by the private party. Here, the Fifth Circuit holds (1) the police may not examine a closed container that was not opened by the private searchers unless the police are already substantially certain of what is inside that container based on the statements of the private searchers, their replication of the private search, and their expertise. Examining all of the contents of the disks and zip disks in this case amounted to an unlawful search, because the private searchers did not know the contents of those disks. (2) the police may search a container — even more thoroughly than a private searcher previously did — assuming the private searcher previously opened and examined the contents of the container. Compare United States v. Rouse, 148 F.3d 1040 (8th Cir. 1998) (holding that police violated fourth amendment when they discovered more items in traveler’s bag than previously seen by airline employee who initially opened the bag). The court finally remanded the case to the district court to make findings relevant to the government’s claim that the evidence should have been admitted under the independent source / inevitable discovery doctrine. See also United States v. Crist, 627 F.Supp.2d 575 (M.D. Pa. 2008) (prior examination of computer by person who took possession of defendant’s computer did not authorize police to utilize forensic tools to conduct more thorough search of same computer).

United States v. Rouse, 148 F.3d 1040 (8th Cir. 1998)

The defendant checked his luggage at the airport, but then left the airport without boarding the plane. Airline personnel at the arriving city retrieved the baggage and opened the suitcase, discovering blank social security cards and a number of identification cards. The airline employee called the police, who further searched the suitcases, discovering a laminating machine and material for laminating cards. Relying on United States v. Jacobsen, 466 U.S. 109 (1984), the court held that the police lawfully seized the cards, but the defendant retained an expectation of privacy in the bags and the further searching of his baggage by the police violated a reasonable expectation of privacy and the laminating machine and paraphernalia should have been suppressed.

United States v. Knoll, 16 F.3d 1313 (2d Cir. 1994)

A private citizen burglarized an attorney’s office, removing boxes of documents, in order to trade information for a lighter sentence in his case. The burglar brought certain documents to the AUSA, who expressed dissatisfaction. The burglar then went through the boxes again (without returning to the law office) and brought more incriminating documents to the AUSA. It was not disputed that the government was in no way involved in the actual burglary. Nevertheless, the AUSA’s tacit suggestion that a further search of the documents was necessary – assuming this was what happened – might have amounted to a search with sufficient government involvement to come within the Fourth Amendment. A remand to further inquire into the circumstances was necessary. A search is a search by a federal official if he had a hand in it and so long as he was in it before the object of the search was completely accomplished, he must be deemed to have participated in it. It is immaterial whether the government originated the idea for a search or joined it while it was in progress. The government may become a party to a search through nothing more than tacit approval.

United States v. Ross, 32 F.3d 1411 (9th Cir. 1994)

The government’s involvement in promulgating the FAA guidelines to combat hijacking is so pervasive “as to bring any search conducted pursuant to that program within the reach of the Fourth Amendment.” Thus, when an airline employee searches a passenger’s baggage at the ticket counter because of certain characteristics of the traveler (paid in cash, produced no identification) this is a search which must be scrutinized under Fourth Amendment standards.

United States v. Reed, 15 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 1994)

In determining whether a search was wholly private, or was sufficiently governmental to trigger the Fourth Amendment, the court should consider whether the government knew of and acquiesced in the intrusive conduct; and whether the party performing the search intended to assist law enforcement efforts or further his own ends. In this case, a motel owner called the police and explained that he thought that one of his guests was dealing drugs out of the room. He requested that officers come to the room while he entered the room. They complied. He entered the room and “snooped” through a briefcase and dresser drawers. This was a governmental search. The hotel owner would have been permitted to enter the room to ensure that there was no damage to property; but here, he was clearly looking for evidence and doing so to help the police. The fact that the private person is attempting to ensure that no criminal activity is occurring on the premises is not an “independent motivation” which would make this a private search. Finally, the fact that the police did not instigate, or encourage the search is not consequential. The officers in this case acted as “lookouts.”

United States v. Mulder, 808 F.2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1987)

A hotel security officer searched a bag which was left in a hotel room and seized tablets which were found in the bag. The tablets were turned over to the DEA which conducted tests to determine whether they were an illegal substance. Though a hotel security officer is not part of the government for purposes of the Fourth Amendment, the DEA is. The tests run on the drugs constituted an invalid search of the items and were illegal under the Fourth Amendment.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Probable Cause)

SEE ALSO:

SEARCH AND SEIZURE (NEXUS BETWEEN CRIME AND PLACE TO BE SEARCHED)
SEARCH AND SEIZURE (INFORMANTS)
SEARCH AND SEIZURE (STALENESS)
SEARCH AND SEIZURE (COLLECTIVE KNOWLEDGE DOCTRINE)

An issuing magistrate is simply to make a practical commonsense decision of whether, given all the circumstances set forth in the search warrant application affidavit, there is a fair probability that contraband or evidence of a crime will be found in a particular place.

Florida v. Harris, 133 S. Ct. 1050 (2013)

In this unanimous decision of the Supreme Court, the Justices held that a dog alert can amount to probable cause. A per se rule, which had been adopted by the Florida Supreme Court (and supposedly based on the Fourth Amendment) that required certain evidence to be introduced to support the legitimacy of the dog alert, was rejected by the Court. Whether a particular dog’s alert amounts to probable cause in any given case must be evaluated by the trial court on a case-by-case basis and is not subject to any rigid rules.

United States v. Edwards, 813 F.3d 953 (10th Cir. 2016)

The search warrant in this child pornography case alleged that the defendant had scores of images of a prepubescent minor posted on a publicly-available site that showed the girl in various suggestive poses. The government conceded that the images were classified as “erotica,” but were not obscene and did not show the girl in sexually explicit poses or positions. Nevertheless, the magistrate issued a search warrant to seize the defendant’s computer. The Tenth Circuit held that the search warrant application did not demonstrate probable cause. But the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied.

United States v. Ramirez-Rivera, 800 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015)

Based on information from an informant who had not previously been known to the police, the police went to the defendant’s house to search for a fugitive. Without a search warrant, the police entered the house and arrested the fugitive, as well as the defendant (on the basis that he was harboring the fugitive) and found guns. The defendant was then brought to the police station where he made a statement. The First Circuit held that entering the house without a warrant was illegal: there were no exigent circumstances; and there was no probable cause, because the informant’s information was not corroborated in any meaningful way, other than confirming the description of the house. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply, at least in part because of the egregiousness of the violation, but also because the police testified that the reason they did not get a warrant is because it required more confirming evidence (thus revealing that the police knew that they did not have probable cause and were intentionally proceeding with the intention of not getting a search warrant which could not be obtained based on the lack of sufficient information). The evidence found during the search, as well as the defendant’s statement should have been suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree.

United States v. Cordova, 792 F.3d 1220 (10th Cir. 2015)

The search warrant in this case was so devoid of probable cause – it was based on stale information, information that did not relate to the defendant, information about marijuana that was seized on the highway that was supposedly destined to another location at which the defendant formerly lived – that no reasonable officer could have believed that the warrant was valid. The warrant did not pass the Leon test.

United States v. Raymonda, 780 F.3d 105 (2d Cir. 2015)

The government was aware that the defendant had viewed thumbnails of child pornography for a few seconds. This did not provide a probable cause basis to obtain a search warrant to search his computer nine months later. The testimony at the suppression hearing established that the user may have accessed a website without looking at individual images and that the images would have remained in the temporary Internet cache, but been overwritten within a few days or a month. Thus the information that the site was accessed months earlier was stale. Leon applied, however, so the evidence was not subject to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Cordero-Rosario, 786 F.3d 64 (1st Cir. 2015)

The initial search warrant stated that the crime under investigation was “lewd actions” and that “in accordance with the interview of the child, there is currently pornography on the defendant’s computer. There was no information in the search warrant application about what the child said, how the alleged pornography was related to any offense, how the child knew about the presence of pornography on the computer, or why the affiant believed that pornography was evidence of a crime. The evidence should have been suppressed, because even the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply to this warrant. Based on the discovery of child pornography during the search of the computer, the police went back to the apartment and secured the wife’s consent to search additional computers. The First Circuit held that this was arguably the fruit of the poisonous tree (exploiting the first illegal search), but further fact-finding was necessary to develop the record relating to the subsequent consent searches.

United States v. Glover, 755 F.3d 811 (7th Cir. 2014)

The failure of the search warrant application to reveal any information about the informant rendered it devoid of probable cause. Though a close call, the exclusionary rule would not apply because of Leon. However, because of the absence of information about the informant’s credibility, a Franks hearing was necessary to determine whether the omission of this information would taint the search warrant. The informant, unbeknownst to the magistrate, had more than a dozen prior criminal convictions, including several while he was working as an informant. He was also a gang member and was receiving payments from the police department.

United States v. Gifford, 727 F.3d 92 (1st Cir. 2013)
The police obtained a search warrant for the defendant’s house to search for a marijuana grow operation. The basis for the search was (1) an informant’s tip; (2) information that the electricity usage at the defendant’s house exceeded the neighbor’s electricity usage; and (3) an officer visited the house and smelled burnt marijuana when the defendant opened the door. The First Circuit upheld the lower court’s decision granting the motion to suppress. Regarding the informant’s information, other than the statement that the informant was reliable, no information was provided in the warrant to support the claim that the informant was, in fact, reliable. There was also no information about the informant’s basis of knowledge. Regarding the electricity usage, the lower court found that the officer was reckless in failing to include in the warrant application information that the neighbor’s house was considerably smaller and the fact that the defendant had a horse boarding business on the premises; this was a Franks violation that altered the probable cause calculus. The smell of marijuana was not necessarily indicative of a grow operation.

United States v. Underwood, 725 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2013)

The Ninth Circuit concludes that a state search warrant for the defendant’s house lacked probable cause and also was so deficient, that the Leon good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. The warrant application simply recited the contents of a related federal search warrant affidavit (which was used to search other conspirators’ houses) and, with regard to the defendant, noted that he had been seen delivering crates to alleged co-conspirators (in a suspicious manner) three months earlier and a personal-use amount of marijuana was observed in his house. Additional conclusory opinions were of no value in establishing probable cause.

United States v. Funds in the Amount of $100,120.00, 730 F.3d 711 (7th Cir. 2013)

In this forfeiture case, among other factors, the government relied on a drug dog alert to the currency to establish that the funds that were seized by agents was connected to drug dealing. The government relied on studies that it claimed showed that what drug dogs smelled on currency was only recent contact with cocaine, because the dogs were detecting something that quickly evaporates. The defense introduced contrary evidence, and relied on the generally-known contamination theory, that is, that most currency has trace amounts of cocaine. The Seventh Circuit held that this dispute foreclosed granting summary judgment to the government, because the disputed facts regarding what drug dogs alert to required resolution by the trier of fact. The defense also mounted a successful attack on the dog’s certification, including demonstrating that during training sessions, the dog could not differentiate between pure cocaine and cutting agents that might be added to cocaine, and that these cutting agents might be present on money without cocaine. This case includes an excellent primer on methods of challenging drug dog alerts.

United States v. Needham, 718 F.3d 1190 (9th Cir. 2013)

Though the suppression of evidence was not required, because of the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule, the Ninth Circuit holds that evidence that the defendant has engaged in acts of child molestation does not suffice to establish probable cause to issue a search warrant to seize the defendant’s computers to search for evidence of child molestation. The officer’s expression of his opinion that “individuals who have sexual interest in children often possess child pornography” does not amount to probable cause.
United States v. Harrison, 689 F.3d 301 (3rd Cir. 2012)

The Third Circuit noted that if the police make a reasonable mistake of fact (such as whether an apartment is abandoned, as in this case), that does not negate probable cause. A mistake of law, on the other hand, is per se unreasonable.

United State v. Doyle, 650 F.3d 460 (4th Cir. 2011)

The search warrant in this case failed to allege that pictures possessed by the resident of a house were pornographic and failed to allege when – or where – the pictures were possessed. This warrant lacked probable cause and did not even survive a good faith Leon review. The probable cause basis of the warrant provided, the following: “Three minor children have come forward and stated that [Doyle] has sexually assaulted them at the Doyle residence. One victims [sic] disclosed to an Uncle that Doyle had shown the victim pictures of nude children.” This description failed to state that the “nude pictures” were pornographic (i.e., lewd depictions) and because there was no statement of when these events occurred, the information was stale (the court noted that the notion of staleness when it comes to computer evidence is rarely a basis to deny a search warrant, but in this case, there was no indication of when the pictures existed). In addition, the statement does not indicate where the pictures were shown to the child, so there was scant basis for believing that the evidence sought by the search warrant would be located at the residence, though the appellate court did not base its ultimate conclusion on this flaw in the warrant. With regard to the absence of probable cause, the court also noted that evidence of child molestation does not automatically authorize the search for child pornography.

Virgin Islands v. John, 654 F.3d 412 (3rd Cir. 2011)

The defendant was known to have committed child molestation. There was no information to support the claim that there would be child pornography on the defendant’s computer. Issuing a search warrant for the defendant’s computer was not proper and the exclusionary rule applied.

United States v. Clark, 638 F.3d 89 (2d Cir. 2011)

The search warrant authorized the police to search the premises located at a certain address which was described as a “multi-family” dwelling. The warrant did not specify which unit to search, nor did it reveal how many units were present in this “multi-family” dwelling. The warrant lacked probable cause to the extent that it authorized a search of the entire structure at that address. However, the Second Circuit concluded that Leon saved the search.

United States v. $186,416.00, 590 F.3d 942 (9th Cir. 2009)

The search that resulted in the seizure of the money in this case was not lawful. The search was conducted pursuant to a state search warrant that alleged a violation of state law. There was, however, no law against medical marijuana in California, so there was no state law violation. The money was then transferred to the federal government for forfeiture. The illegal search, however, was illegal regardless of the venue in which the forfeiture case was tried and the evidence, including the fruits of the illegal search, could not be used in the federal forfeiture case.
United States v. Roach, 582 F.3d 1192 (10th Cir. 2009)

The search warrant affidavit documented years of gang activity by numerous members of the gang. The incidents involving the defendant were numerous, but the last identified offense was years prior to the issuance of the warrant. The warrant was issued for the defendant’s girlfriend’s house, where he was believed to be living. The only link to the house was the assertion in the affidavit that the officers believed that he was living there. The Tenth Circuit held that the information was insufficient, as well as being stale, to support a search warrant for the house. But the search was saved by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Falso, 544 F.3d 110 (2d Cir. 2008)

The FBI determined that the defendant had a prior conviction from eighteen years ago for misdemeanor child sex abuse and may have accessed a child pornography web site. On the basis of this information, the agent obtained a search warrant to search the defendant’s computer for child pornography. The Second Circuit held that this information was not sufficient to authorize a search warrant. However, the court concluded that the evidence would not be suppressed in light of the officer’s good faith in executing a warrant signed by the judge.

United States v. Hodson, 543 F.3d 286 (6th Cir. 2008)

The fact that the defendant was indisputably a child molester did not provide probable cause to believe that there was child pornography on his computer. The officer, moreover, could not have executed the warrant in good faith, because the application contained virtually no information that would have supported the search for pornography.

United States v. West, 520 F.3d 604 (6th Cir. 2008)

Two search warrants were issued in this case. The first was devoid of probable cause, because it contained bare bones assertions about the defendant (all of which were based on hearsay statements that the affiant learned from other officers and individuals). The warrant also failed to link any criminal activity on the part of the defendant with the location that the police wanted to search. The warrant did not even satisfy the Leon good faith standard. The second warrant set forth facts that an informant told the affiant that the defendant confessed to a murder and the body could be found in a well at a certain location; the warrant sought authorization to search the defendant’s van. The affiant, however, failed to reveal that the informant was serving time in federal custody and that the police went to the location where the body was supposedly located and found nothing – not even a well.

United States v. Virden, 488 F.3d 1317 (11th Cir. 2007)

The police stopped the defendant’s car after watching it leave the location where a search was about to occur. Because a drug dog was not available at that location, the police put the defendant in a police car in handcuffs and brought the car to a location two miles away where the dog was located. The Eleventh Circuit held that this exceeded the bounds of a Terry stop and amounted to a seizure requiring probable cause. Because there was no probable cause, the search of the car was unlawful.

United States v. Kennedy, 427 F.3d 1136 (8th Cir. 2005)
The defendant’s girlfriend said that the defendant “deals” drugs and “keeps” drugs in his car. This did not establish that the defendant then had drugs in his car.

United States v. Luong, 470 F.3d 898 (9th Cir. 2006)

The linchpin of the basis for obtaining the search warrant was an unverified tip that someone arriving on a plane from overseas was a chemist who was involved in methamphetamine manufacturing. The affidavit did not even identify who the suspect was. There was insufficient probable cause to support the issuance of a search warrant and the affidavit was so lacking in probable cause that Leon did not apply. The Ninth Circuit also held that where a search warrant application is so lacking in probable cause, the court would not consider any supposed oral communications made by the affiant to the issuing magistrate.

United States v. Shaw, 464 F.3d 615 (6th Cir. 2006)

A woman reported to the police that her three-year old child reported that he had been sexually molested by a relative. Based only on that report, the police arrested the defendant (the relative). After his arrest, the relative confessed. The Sixth Circuit held that the second-hand report from the mother was not sufficient to support an arrest. There was no corroborating evidence (a medical examination produced no physical signs of trauma or sexual penetration). The confession was tainted by the unlawful arrest.

United States v. Gourde, 382 F.3d 1003 (9th Cir. 2004)

The FBI learned about a website that permitted members to download child pornography. Defendant Gourde was determined to have been a member of the web site for two months. The FBI obtained a search warrant, claiming that any member would have had access to the child pornography. The affiant offered various expert opinions about the M.O. of child pornographers on the internet. The Ninth Circuit held that there was no probable cause to search the defendant’s house and seize his computers based on this information. Moreover, Leon did not apply, because no officer could have relied in good faith on this warrant. There was no information that Gourde had actually downloaded any files from the website, though the FBI acknowledged that it had the capability of determining whether he did prior to the time the search was executed. See also United States v. Weber, 923 F.2d 1338 (9th Cir. 1990).

REVERSED BY EN BANC COURT: 440 F.3d 1065 (9th Cir. 2006) (en banc).

United States v. Zimmerman, 277 F.3d 426 (3rd Cir. 2002)

The police obtained a search warrant to search the defendant’s home to look for child and adult pornography. There was no information in the warrant application that indicated that any pornography would be found in his home, though there was information that one clip of adult pornography was seen in the home months earlier by one (or perhaps more than one) high school student. That information, however, was stale. The police relied for the most part on evidence that the defendant was believed to have molested numerous high school students (he was a high school teacher). The police also offered expert opinion in the warrant application that child molesters often keep child pornography in their houses. The Third Circuit held that the warrant was lacking in probable cause and, in fact, could not even have been executed in good faith, given the absence of any evidence that pornography was then located in the house. The use of a seven page, single spaced, affidavit which never even mentioned child pornography could not... reasonably have been relied upon to obtain a search warrant. Addressing the boilerplate “expert” opinion, the court wrote, “Rambling boilerplate recitations designed to meet all law enforcement needs do not produce probable cause . . . Experience and expertise, without more, is insufficient to establish probable cause.”

United States v. Ricciardelli, 998 F.2d 8 (1st Cir. 1993)

An anticipatory warrant is permissible. This type of warrant, which authorizes the agents to delay executing the warrant until a triggering event occurs – such as the delivery of contraband to the premises – must establish that the presence of the sought after item will be on the premises inevitably after the triggering event. Here, however, the search of the premises was authorized upon the delivery of the pornographic tape to the defendant, regardless of where this delivery occurred. This was an invalid anticipatory warrant and was not saved by the good faith exception.

United States v. Diaz, 841 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1988)

An affidavit in support of a search warrant suggested that the defendant engaged in fraudulent transactions with a Department of Agriculture inspector, that is, that the inspector was bribed with cash. The search warrant, on the other hand, authorized the seizure of all bank account records. The First Circuit holds that the search warrant was not supported by probable cause.

United States v. Hyppolite, 65 F.3d 1151 (4th Cir. 1995)

A defendant’s refusal to consent to a search cannot establish probable cause to search. See United States v. Alexander, 835 F.2d 1406, 1409 n.3 (11th Cir. 1988). In this case, the magistrate considered the form in which the defendant declined consent – in a loud and aggressive manner. The court holds that although there may be some cases where the form of a suspect’s assertion of rights may support a finding of probable cause, officers and magistrates cannot rely solely on the form in which a suspect asserts constitutional rights to establish probable cause for a search warrant. Nor should such factors be the prominent factors supporting a warrant. The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applied in this case.

Bigford v. Taylor, 834 F.2d 1213 (5th Cir. 1988)

A truck was missing its federal inspection safety sticker and the VIN number on the doorjamb had apparently been altered. Nevertheless, the deputy sheriff did not have probable cause to search and seize the truck.

United States v. Barrington, 806 F.2d 529 (5th Cir. 1986)

A conclusory affidavit does not establish probable cause for the issuance of a search warrant. The affidavit here stated only that the affiant had received information from a confidential informant who had provided information in the past leading to an arrest and conviction.

United States v. Weaver, 99 F.3d 1372 (6th Cir. 1996)

An informant went to the defendant’s house with $100 of government money to attempt to buy marijuana. The government agents did not provide surveillance, or in any other way corroborate the informant’s statement that he did, in fact, buy the marijuana at that location. This information did not support the issuance of a search warrant. Nowhere in the affidavit did the affiant disclose where the marijuana was kept or stored, the quantity of marijuana in the house, or any other particularized information that would have supported the belief that there was currently marijuana on the property. Also, the affidavit did not provide any information about the informant’s reliability, other than boilerplate language about his being reliable in the past. For example, the affidavit did not say that the informant’s past reliability related to drug cases. Finally, the corroboration of innocent details, such as the name on the utilities records for the residence, was meaningless. The court also held that when a police officer supplies a bare bones affidavit which is insufficient, and then executes the warrant himself, he cannot rely on the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule. Here, the officer did not attempt any meaningful corroboration of the informant’s information and conducted no other independent investigation, other than learning the identity of the occupant of the residence. The unlawful search, therefore, was not saved by Leon.

United States v. Czuprynski, 8 F.3d 1113 (6th Cir. 1993)

After the police were unsuccessful in convincing two judges to issue a search warrant, a magistrate (who the defendant had tried to have fired from his prior job) finally signed the warrant. The warrant was based entirely on the allegations of the defendant’s former law partner who claimed that the defendant/lawyer had marijuana at his home and office. No effort was made to support the allegations of the informant. It was clear that she was angry at having been fired by the defendant. The warrant in this case was not based on probable cause and the officers could not have relied on it in good faith. Reviewing the case en banc, the Sixth Circuit re-affirms its holding that the affidavit did not establish probable cause, but held that the officers were acting in good faith when they executed the warrant. 46 F.3d 560 (6th Cir. 1995)(en banc).

United States v. $7,850, 7 F.3d 1355 (8th Cir. 1993)

The defendant purchased a ticket with cash to fly from Minneapolis to Nebraska; he carried no identification or baggage; he was seen by the ticket agent to have a large wad of cash; he lied to an officer about whether he had been at the airport the day before (he had been seen there by another officer); a NADDIS report indicated that he had a heroin supplier in Nebraska. These facts did not amount to probable cause to seize the currency. (Because the district court did not consider whether there was an articulable suspicion justifying the seizure, that was not addressed by the appellate court).

United States v. Clark, 31 F.3d 831 (9th Cir. 1994)

The search warrant affidavit stated that the defendant’s home had unusually high electrical usage – but failed to compare it to other residential homes in the area. The affidavit also contained the allegations of an unknown informant that the defendant was associated with a known marijuana cultivator. This information was insufficient to establish probable cause to search the premises. Nevertheless, the good faith exception applied.

United States v. Brown, 951 F.2d 999 (9th Cir. 1991)

Though there was considerable evidence that members of a law enforcement narcotics team were corrupt and that members stole evidence, including money which was seized, this did not authorize the search of each member’s house. There was not enough specific information dealing with each member’s culpability to justify the search of every house. Also, the narcotics unit was not a “wholly illegitimate” organization, thus justifying the search of every member’s residence. Nevertheless, the officers consulted with an AUSA before obtaining the search warrant and acted in good faith, thus the evidence would not be suppressed.
United States v. Weber, 915 F.2d 1282 (9th Cir. 1990)

The defendant’s house was searched pursuant to a search warrant which was directed at the presence of obscene material in the defendant’s home. The search warrant, however, allowed officers to search for a wide variety of magazines and advertising materials, none of which was backed up by probable cause. The only evidence against this defendant was the fact that a couple of ads addressed to him apparently depicted child pornography. The affiant’s statement about the “proclivities of pedophiles” did not support a wall-to-wall search of the house. The affidavit simply did not support a search for child pornography in general. The court rejected certain aspects of the warrant as “rambling boiler-plate recitations designed to meet all law enforcement needs.” Finally, the court concludes that the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply. The court’s amended opinion, 923 F.2d 1338 (1990), abides by the initial decision suppressing the evidence.

United States v. Hove, 848 F.2d 137 (9th Cir. 1988)

In the affidavit in support of the search warrant, the police officers failed to link the suspect with the residence which was sought to be searched. This inadvertent failure to link the suspect to the premises rendered the affidavit insufficient and the officers could not have relied on it in good faith in searching the premises. This absence of good faith exists even though the officer in fact knew the link between the suspect and the residence.

United States v. Dimick, 990 F.2d 1164 (10th Cir. 1993)

The defendant was travelling from Los Angeles to St. Louis. He paid for his one-way ticket in cash, remained in his compartment the entire trip; tipped the train conductors with $20 bills; ordered his meals delivered to his compartment; lied about his name when questioned and claimed to have no luggage. Based on this information, the DEA entered his compartment and found a suitcase, which was then subjected to a dog sniff. The dog alerted and narcotics were found in the suitcase. The entry into the train compartment required probable cause which was lacking at that time. Absent probable cause, even with reasonable suspicion, which did exist, the officers could not enter the compartment. This case was overruled by the Tenth Circuit later, not on the issue of probable cause, but on the defendant’s expectation of privacy in a train compartment. United States v. Little, 18 F.3d 1499 (10th Cir. 1994).

United States v. Maxwell, 920 F.2d 1028 (D.C.Cir. 1990)

In order for an affidavit to be viewed as limiting the scope of a warrant, the warrant must not only attach the affidavit, but must also contain “suitable words of reference” evidencing the magistrate’s explicit intention to incorporate the affidavit. Only in this way will the warrant be sufficiently limited to allow it to pass the probable cause test. That is, the warrant may be overbroad if it is not limited by the accompanying affidavit.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Probationer / Parolee / Pretrial Release)

A California law that permits a warrantless search of a parolee at any time, with or without cause is constitutional. A parolee has substantially diminished rights to privacy, given his voluntary decision to serve his sentence outside the confines of a prison.

The Supreme Court held that the police may invoke a search warrant waiver clause in a probationer’s, or parolee’s sentence to conduct a warrantless search, even if the search is based simply on reasonable suspicion and is motivated by a concern with the investigation of other criminal activity, not just a possible parole, or probation violation. See also Griffin v. Wisconsin, 483 U.S. 868 (1987).

The Supreme Court holds that a search of a probationer’s house does not have to be predicated on a search warrant or probable cause. Rather, the Wisconsin regulation in this case which requires “reasonable grounds” to believe the presence of contraband and the approval of a probationer officer’s supervisor, is a valid exception to the Fourth Amendment’s search warrant requirement. Dispensing with the search warrant requirement is reasonable in order to avoid interfering with the probation system and the right of a probation officer rather than a magistrate to make decisions about the probationer’s conduct.

United States v. Job, 851 F.3d 889 (9th Cir. 2017)
Police officers must know about a probationer’s Fourth Amendment search wavier before they conduct a search in order for the waiver to serve as a justification for the search. In addition a waiver of the Fourth Amendment only applies if the defendant was on probation for a violent offense. This opinion was reissued at 871 F.3d 852 (9th Cir. 2017).

United States v. Lara, 815 F.3d 605 (9th Cir. 2016)
Even if a defendant signs a Fourth Amendment waiver as part of a plea, a probation officer may not randomly look through the contents of a probationer’s cell phone absent any articulable suspicion.

United States v. Hill, 776 F.3d 243 (4th Cir. 2015)
The defendant was on supervised release. Nothing in the conditions of his supervised release amounted to a waiver of his Fourth Amendment rights. He was required to allow a probation officer to visit him in his home, and was required to alert the probation officer if he moved. The defendant failed to notify his probation officer when he moved. The officer went to his new house with law enforcement officers and after arresting him for moving without notifying the probation department, the officers brought in a drug-detecting dog. This was an illegal search and the evidence should have been suppressed (unless, on remand, the government could make a showing that the independent source rule applied). Moreover, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule did not apply.
United States v. Grandberry, 730 F.3d 968 (9th Cir. 2013)

Though Samson determined that a parolee’s reduced expectation of privacy allows for warrantless searches of a parolee, a law enforcement officer may not conduct a warrantless search of premises without probable cause to believe that the parolee does, in fact, live at that location. The information known to the police in this case was insufficient to meet this burden.

United States v. King, 687 F.3d 1189 (9th Cir. 2012) (en banc)

The Ninth Circuit summarily declared (without further explanation) that the Fourth Amendment is not the same for probationers and for parolees. The court overruled several Ninth Circuit precedents and wrote, “These cases conflict with the Supreme Court’s holding that ‘parolees have fewer expectations of privacy than probationers.’ Samson v. California, 547 U.S. 843, 850 (2006).”

United States v. Freeman, 479 F.3d 743 (10th Cir. 2007)

The search of defendant’s house was not conducted by any parole officers and no parole officer instructed the police to conduct the search. This does not qualify as a “special needs” search according to Griffin v. Wisconsin and unlike the California law at issue in Knights and Samson, the Kansas law that applied in this case did not authorize any law enforcement officer to conduct a warrantless search; it only authorized probation and parole officers to conduct such searches.

United States v. Howard, 447 F.3d 1257 (9th Cir. 2006)

The defendant was a parolee whose condition of parole empowered the police to make warrantless searches of his residence. In order to invoke this provision, the police had to have probable cause to believe that the place being searched was, in fact, the defendant’s residence. The place that was searched in this case was not known to the police to be the residence of the defendant. The defendant was seen exiting the apartment and was stopped; thereafter the apartment was searched. The Ninth Circuit held that because the police had insufficient information to believe that the apartment was defendant’s residence, the warrantless search was improper.

United States v. Henry, 429 F.3d 603 (6th Cir. 2005)

A probation officer visited the defendant’s house and went in for a probationary (not an investigatory) purpose – that is, to ensure that the defendant actually lived there, as he had reported. The Sixth Circuit held that the entry into the house was not reasonable, because there was no reasonable suspicion to support the belief that the defendant did not live there, as he reported and therefore there was no reasonable basis to believe that he had violated a condition of his probation.

United States v. Scott, 450 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2006)

A defendant had been released on bail in state court, subject to the condition that he be subject to warrantless searches of his home, even without probable cause. The state police invoked this provision, searched his home and found a gun that was then used as the basis for a federal prosecution. The Ninth Circuit held that releasing a person on bond subject to his willingness to be searched without probable cause violated the Fourth Amendment. The same applies to a drug test that was taken as a result of being released on bail. Because there was no probable cause to test the defendant for drugs, the warrantless testing of his blood was also unconstitutional.

United States v. Crawford, 323 F.3d 700 (9th Cir. 2003)

Even when acting pursuant to a “fourth amendment waiver” that was executed pursuant to a defendant’s parole, the police require at least reasonable suspicion before they may enter a defendant’s house. On rehearing en banc, 372 F.3d 1048 (2004), the court assumed that this holding was true, without deciding whether it was, but held that the resulting confession was not subject to suppression.

United States v. Carnes, 309 F.3d 950 (6th Cir. 2002)

The Michigan defendant in this case was subject to a condition of parole that provided that parole officers could conduct a warrantless search based on reasonable cause to believe a violation of parole occurred. This only authorizes a warrantless search where the police are motivated by a concern with a violation of parole, not some other purpose. The parole condition was different than the condition that was the subject of United States v. Knights, 534 U.S. 112, 122 S.Ct. 587 (2001). In Knights, the police were authorized by the parole condition to search “without suspicion” while the defendant was on parole. As in limited other situations, in this area of the Fourth Amendment, the police officer’s motivation is relevant to the lawfulness of the search.

United States v. Baker, 221 F.3d 438 (3rd Cir. 2000)

A consent form signed by Pennsylvania parolees provides that they will consent to any search of their person, property or residence, without a warrant. State precedents suggested a condition that the parole officer must have reasonable suspicion to justify any search of the parolee’s person, property, or residence. The Third Circuit concludes that the Pennsylvania courts would, if called upon to decide this question, hold that there is a state law requirement that there be reasonable suspicion prior to any such search. Because there was no reasonable suspicion, the fruits of the search in this case had to be suppressed. Note that this decision predates United States v. Knights, 534 U.S. 112, 122 S.Ct. 587 (2001), which held that a search warrant waiver was permissible regardless of whether a search is related to the conditions of probation, or the investigation of a new offense by the probationer.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Return of Seized Property – Fed.R.Crim.P. 41(g))

United States v. Gladding, 775 F.3d 1149 (9th Cir 2015)
   The defendant was convicted of possessing child pornography on his computer. He filed a motion for the return of the non-contraband contents of his computer, including family photographs. The Ninth Circuit held that the defendant was entitled to have this property returned. Note that the forfeiture order in this case only resulted in the forfeiture of contraband files.

United States v. Cardona-Sandoval, 518 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2008)
   Following his conviction and sentence, the defendant sought the return of certain seized property, including his clothes and other items of non-contraband. The government simply responded with a general statement that the property was destroyed pursuant to departmental policy. The First Circuit held that this was an inadequate response. There must be some evidence of notice to the defendant of the impending destruction of the property and specific information about the property in question, rather than a general non-specific response.

Krimstock v. Kelly, 464 F.3d 246 (2d Cir. 2006)
   This civil rights case challenged the procedures (or lack thereof) of the state seizing an automobile for evidence and holding it for an unlimited amount of time. The Second Circuit (considering the case for the third time) concluded that the state must seek court approval to hold a vehicle, though this may be done ex parte.

United States v. Wright, 361 F.3d 288 (5th Cir. 2004)
   The statute of limitations for filing a Rule 41(g) motion for return of seized property (alleging, for example, insufficient notice prior to forfeiture) is six years from the date the defendant was on reasonable notice about the forfeiture.

United States v. Albinson, 356 F.3d 278 (3rd Cir. 2004)
   The government’s response to the defendant’s motion for return of seized property which simply said that the property was lost, destroyed or misplaced, or given to a third party, was insufficient to prompt the summary denial of the defendant’s motion. A hearing should have been held to make further inquiry.

United States v. Pantelidis, 335 F.3d 226 (3rd Cir. 2003)
   In the unusual posture of this case, the claimant had a right to appeal the trial court’s denial of his Rule 41(g) motion for return of seized property. The money that was seized constituted “substitute assets” under the forfeiture law and, therefore, was not actually part of a pending criminal case. Thus, the decision to deny the return of the money was independent of the criminal case and amounted to a final order for appellate jurisdiction purposes.

In re Grand Jury Investigation Concerning Solid State Devices, Inc., 130 F.3d 853 (9th Cir. 1997)
The government established probable cause that certain practices of the target corporation were fraudulent. Indeed, there was information that the company "routinely" engaged in fraudulent practices. Nevertheless, the corporation itself was not pervaded by fraud, in the sense that the corporation had little legitimate business. Therefore, a warrant which resulted in the seizure of approximately 90% of the corporation's records over a five year period, including 2,000 file drawers, was overbroad and the target's motion for return of seized property should have been granted.

_Soviero v. United States_, 967 F.2d 791 (2d Cir. 1992)

Following his conviction on certain counts, the defendant moved for the return of the software and hardware which had been seized when he was arrested. The government ignored the motion and the DEA destroyed the items. The Second Circuit holds that Rule 41(e) was the appropriate vehicle for seeking the return of the seized items and the government should not have destroyed the evidence, thereby depriving the defendant of the ability to prove that it was not contraband. If the government did this in bad faith, the defendant was entitled to damages.

_United States Postal Service v. C.E.C. Services_, 869 F.2d 184 (2d Cir. 1989)

The defendant had been under investigation by a grand jury at the time that certain property was seized pursuant to a search warrant. The District Court held that he was not entitled to return of the property. After the grand jury investigation was concluded the defendant was entitled to appeal the decision denying the return of the property. Because there was no longer a grand jury proceeding, there was no danger of interfering with the investigation.

_United States v. Roberts_, 852 F.2d 671 (2d Cir. 1988)

The good faith exception to the exclusionary rule applies to Rule 41(e) motions which have been instituted for the return of property seized pursuant to a warrant which the claimant contends was deficient.

_United States v. Garcia_, 65 F.3d 17 (4th Cir. 1995)

Rule 41(e) may be used to seek the return of seized property after trial has ended. The proper venue is the district in which the property was seized, not the district in which the case was tried. Venue in the district in which the case was tried only exists during the pendency of the criminal charges.

_White Fabricating Company v. United States_, 903 F.2d 404 (6th Cir. 1990)

The Sixth Circuit concludes that a district court may entertain a Rule 41(e) motion even before criminal charges have been filed.

_J.B. Manning Corp. v. United States_, 86 F.3d 926 (9th Cir. 1996)

Rule 41(e), which provides for the return of seized property, does not include a “good faith” _Leon_ exception. Prior to 1989, the Rule provided that any property returned could not be introduced in evidence (thus, the rule was equivalent to the exclusionary rule). Now, however, this provision is not included. Consequently, the court can order the government to return property, or copies of documents, without necessarily holding that the property is inadmissible. Therefore, the premise of _Leon_ is not implicated and there is no reason not to return property that was seized pursuant to a search warrant that is overly broad or otherwise not supported by probable cause.
United States v. Clagett, 3 F.3d 1355 (9th Cir. 1993)
Money was seized from a residence. After notice was served on the occupants of the house and published in USA Today, the government administratively forfeited the currency. Later, the defendant filed a Rule 41(e) motion, contending that service was not proper as to him and because there were no pending forfeiture proceedings, he could rely on Rule 41(e). The Ninth Circuit agreed that he should be entitled to show inadequate service and notice.

Purcell v. United States, 908 F.2d 434 (9th Cir. 1990)
A claimant is entitled to attorney’s fees under the Equal Access to Justice Act in connection with a Rule 41(e) motion for return of seized property. The fact that investigation is pending does not mean that a 41(e) motion is a criminal proceeding exempt from EAJA awards.

Floyd v. United States, 860 F.2d 999 (10th Cir. 1988)
The defendant filed a Rule 41(e) motion prior to the initiation of forfeiture proceedings. The court holds that Rule 41(e) represents an equitable remedy and that the claimant may not use such a remedy if he has an adequate remedy at law or is unable to demonstrate irreparable injury. Because no findings were made by the lower court on either of these issues, the case was remanded.

In re Smith, 888 F.2d 167 (D.C.Cir. 1989)
A claimant was entitled to the return of money which was seized from him pursuant to a consensual search. Although a grand jury proceeding was in progress, this alone was not a sufficient basis for keeping the money.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Road Blocks)

After a hit-and-run accident that occurred one week earlier, the police set up a roadblock to ask motorists if they knew anything about the accident. The Supreme Court held that this roadblock was permissible. Characterizing the “stop” as an informational checkpoint, the Court distinguished Indianapolis v. Edmond, 531 U.S. 32 (2000), because in that case, the vehicles were stopped for the purpose of investigating whether the occupants were engaged in criminal activity. In this case, in contrast, there was no intent to uncover crimes committed by the occupants of the stopped vehicles. The defendant in this case was convicted of DUI, because his state of inebriation was apparent when he was stopped.

Michigan Department of State Police v. Sitz, 496 U.S. 444 (1990)

The Michigan State Police Department established a highway sobriety check point with guidelines governing check point operations, site selection and publicity. Significantly, uniformed officers stopped every vehicle which went through the check point. In cases where an officer detects signs of intoxication, the motorist is directed to a location out of the traffic flow where another officer checks the driver’s license and registration and, if warranted, conducts further sobriety tests. This program satisfied the Fourth Amendment’s requirement that detentions be reasonable.

United States v. Soto-Zuniga, 837 F.3d 992 (9th Cir. 2016)

The trial court erred in denying the defendant’s discovery request that sought information about the immigration checkpoint where the defendant was stopped and arrested. The defendant claimed that the immigration checkpoint was used to engage in drug interdiction, rather than legitimate immigration investigation.

United States v. Bowman, 496 F.3d 685 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

There was insufficient evidence offered by the government that the roadblock was instituted for a legitimate motor vehicle related purpose. The testimony of one officer on the scene was not sufficient. The officer acknowledged that his “team” was involved in general crime prevention, focusing on guns and drugs.

United States v. Yousif, 308 F.3d 820 (8th Cir. 2002)

The police set up a fake “drug interdiction” road block, alerting drivers that it was located farther down the highway. Between the location of the notice and the supposed checkpoint was an exit with no services for motorists. The police then stopped the cars that exited. The checkpoint in this case occurred prior to the Supreme Court’s decision in Indianapolis v. Edmond, 531 U.S. 32 (2000). The Eighth Circuit concluded that the fact that the defendant exited the highway after seeing a drug checkpoint sign, even when viewed in combination with other factors, was not a sufficient basis for stopping the vehicle.

United States v. Huguenin, 154 F.3d 547 (6th Cir. 1998)
The police posted a sign that there was a DUI checkpoint 2 miles ahead. An exit was on the interstate just past this sign. The roadblock was actually set up at the exit – the officers believed that people who exited the interstate after seeing the signs were the people they wanted to intercept. But the real reason for the road block was to find drugs, not intoxicated drivers, as evidenced by the fact that there were no DUI detecting devices, but there was a drug dog and drug interdiction officers. The court concluded that the primary purpose for this roadblock was not to ensure the safety of the highways – that is, to intercept drunk drivers – but was to find people transporting drugs. This is not a lawful purpose for a roadblock and the evidence obtained after stopping the defendant’s vehicle should have been suppressed.

United States v. Maestas, 2 F.3d 1485 (10th Cir. 1993)

Even in the context of a lawful roadblock, the defendant may be able to establish that his arrest was pretextual. In order to establish an unlawful pretext arrest, the defendant must establish that the criteria set forth for conducting the roadblock were ignored or violated in some way. The defendant in this case, however, failed to meet this burden.

United States v. Morales-Zamora, 974 F.2d 149 (10th Cir. 1992)

While the roadblock purported to be a mere license and registration check, in fact, the police had a canine dog walk around and sniff at every stopped vehicle. This was an unlawful roadblock.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Security Sweep)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (EXIGENT CIRCUMSTANCES)

Police officers effecting a lawful arrest of a criminal suspect in his home may conduct a limited protective sweep of the residence if the police have a reasonable belief that other people who pose a danger to those at the arrest scene are located in other parts of the house.

United States v. Delgado-Perez, 867 F.3d 244 (1st Cir. 2017)
Law Enforcement executed an arrest warrant in Puerto Rico for a suspect wanted in New York. There was no reason to believe that any other person, or danger, existed elsewhere in the house where the arrest occurred. A protective security sweep was therefore unnecessary and not consistent with the Fourth Amendment. The fact that the defendant was arrested for a drug offense did not constitute a sufficient basis to conduct a sweep search throughout the house after he was arrested in the front yard.

United States v. Nelson, 868 F.3d 885 (10th Cir. 2017)
The police arrested the defendant in a friend’s home. There was no information supporting a belief that there were other people in the home or that there was any danger to the police. Searching the rest of the house under the “protective sweep” doctrine was not justified and the discovery of a gun in another room was a violation of the Fourth Amendment.

United States v. Lundin, 817 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2016)
Acting on the basis of a BOLO, but without an arrest warrant, the police went to the defendant’s home at 4:00 a.m. and started knocking on the door. They heard a crashing noise near the rear of the home and ran around back and stopped the defendant who was in the backyard. They then looked inside the house and found two handguns. The Ninth Circuit ordered that the evidence must be suppressed: (1) the government could not rely on the exigent circumstances exception, because the police were not allowed to be where they were located when the exigent circumstances arose (i.e., they heard the crashing noise); (2) while the police may walk up to the front door of a house and engage in a “knock-and-talk,” that exception to the rule that bars police from entering the curtilage of the home does not apply at 4:00 a.m. when nobody would expect visitors to appear and knock on the door; (3) in addition, walking up to the front door to make a warrantless arrest is not a permissible purpose and Jardines provides that the police may not enter the curtilage of the home for investigative purposes; (4) the security sweep of the house was not justified, because the defendant was already handcuffed and any further security measures in the house were not necessary; (5) the inevitable discovery doctrine did not apply, because the officers were not in the process of obtaining a search warrant when the illegal searches occurred.

United States v. White, 748 F.3d 507 (3rd Cir. 2014)
The police responded to a domestic disturbance call involving a father and daughter. When the police arrived, the father/defendant came outside, was handcuffed and placed in the patrol car. The daughter then came out and when asked, said that nobody else was in the house. The police entered the house and located two guns. This entry was not a legitimate security sweep. There were no exigent circumstances or reason to believe that anybody in the house posed a danger to the police; nor were there apparently any exigent circumstances that justified a warrantless entry into the house, though a remand on this issue was appropriate to further develop the record.

United States v. Hassock, 631 F.3d 79 (2d Cir. 2011)

The police went to an apartment and after knocking on the door, a woman finally answered the door. The police announced that they were looking for Hassock and she mumbled something and eventually said that the police could “look around.” The police did not determine who she was, or what authority she had to permit entry into the apartment. The Second Circuit held that this was invalid consent to enter. The Court also spent considerable time discussing whether the police could engage in a Buie protective sweep and reviewed the law concerning the scope and premise for a protective sweep, noting that a protective sweep in some Circuits is limited to instances when either a search warrant is being executed or an arrest is occurring, whereas other Circuits permit a protective search in situations where a consent to search is the predicate for the entry. But that issue was not resolved in this case, because the Court concluded that the entry was unlawful.

United States v. Archibald, 589 F.3d 289 (6th Cir. 2009)

Several officers went to the defendant’s residence to serve an arrest warrant. They knocked on front door. An officer could hear someone moving around inside. A male voice from inside asked, “Who is it?” The officers identified themselves. Nobody opened the door but the police could hear move movement inside. The officers could not determine how many people were inside, or if there was more than one person. The officers testified, however, that they “always assume” that there are more people inside. Eventually, the defendant opened the front door and he was pulled out and arrested. Two officers immediately entered the house and located a gun which was the basis for obtaining a search warrant and the prosecution of the defendant for possession of the weapon. The Sixth Circuit held that the security sweep was not justified by the information known to the police, and held that the search warrant was therefore based on illegally obtained evidence.

United States v. Walker, 474 F.3d 1249 (10th Cir. 2007)

The police went to the defendant’s house after receiving a report of a fight. When they arrived, the defendant screamed out that he had a gun. The police entered the house and handcuffed him and took him out. They then searched the house and found guns which led to the defendant’s prosecution for being a felon in possession of a firearm. The Tenth Circuit holds that a security sweep could not be the justification for the search, because at the time of the search, the defendant had not been arrested and a Buie search is only permissible after someone is arrested. The case was remanded to the district court for the purpose of determining whether exigent circumstances might have justified the warrantless search of the house.

1612
United States v. Waldner, 425 F.3d 514 (8th Cir. 2005)

The police came to the defendant’s house to serve a protective order. They knocked on the door and eventually the defendant answered. He was instructed by the police that he was required to vacate the premises immediately. The officer accompanied him back into the house to gather a few things. While accompanying the defendant in the basement collecting some clothes, the officers entered an office. In the office, the officers saw a gun with a silencer. Because the officers had no reason to believe that there was anybody else in the house, or any weapons that posed a danger to them, there was no basis for searching the office as part of a protective sweep. The purpose of a protective sweep is to ensure the safety of the officers, not to search for guns and contraband. It should be noted, moreover, that Waldner was not under arrest, he was simply being served a protective order.

United States v. Gandia, 424 F.3d 255 (2d Cir. 2005)

The defendant consented to the police entering his kitchen to interview him. Prior to commencing the interview, the police conducted a security sweep of the house. This was improper. The consent did not authorize the police to enter other rooms of the house. A security sweep is not permissible on the basis of a limited consent search.

United States v. Morgan Vargas, 376 F.3d 112 (2d Cir. 2004)

The police went to the defendant’s hotel room and he let them in. The agents exhibited no particular fear for their safety – they did not even frisk the defendant. However, noticing an open door to the bathroom, the police went in, despite the defendant’s protest. This was not a legitimate “protective sweep” search envisioned by Maryland v. Buie. The police offered no evidence that they had an articulable suspicion that the bathroom was occupied by any other person who posed a danger to them.

United States v. Carter, 360 F.3d 1235 (10th Cir. 2004)

The police had no basis for conducting a security sweep of the defendant’s garage. There was no information that other people were at the house, or capable of hiding or destroying evidence. A remand was necessary to determine if the defendant’s consent to search the garage was tainted by the previous unlawful security sweep that had been conducted.

United States v. Paradis, 351 F.3d 21 (1st Cir. 2003)

After the defendant was handcuffed and removed from the apartment in which he was found with his girlfriend, the police performed what they claimed was a protective sweep. However, the apartment had already been searched and the defendant found, so there was no reasonable basis for believing that any other person was in the apartment.

United States v. Curzi, 867 F.2d 36 (1st Cir. 1989)

The officers saw the subject of an arrest warrant leave and re-enter a house. They waited two hours, then ordered all occupants of the house to exit. No effort was made to obtain a search warrant during this two hour period. After the occupants exited, the defendant was arrested and the officers entered the house to conduct a protective sweep. No exigent circumstances justified the search of the house at that time in light of the agents’ failure to obtain a search warrant during the two hours that the house was kept under surveillance. The holding in this case was governed by the decision in Steagald v. United States, 451 U.S. 204 (1981). That is, an arrest warrant for a visitor of a house is not sufficient basis to search the house.

United States v. Blue, 78 F.3d 56 (2d Cir. 1996)

Though the police had a basis to detain the defendant, in his apartment, during the course of arresting another individual, a sweep search that included looking between the mattress and the box springs was not authorized and evidence found there should have been suppressed.

United States v. Colbert, 76 F.3d 773 (6th Cir. 1996)

The police were staking out an apartment and arrested the defendant when he exited the apartment and was about to enter his car. Even when a suspect is arrested outside his home, the police may conduct a sweep search of the home if there is an articulable suspicion that the officers were in danger from someone inside the apartment. But in this case, there was no basis for believing there was anybody left in the apartment, to say nothing of anybody posing a danger to the defendant. The court acknowledged that police are engaged in extremely dangerous work and it might be wise to simply allow the police to do whatever they thought was necessary in any given situation, but the Fourth Amendment does not give the police that kind of freedom, and “as long as [the Fourth Amendment] is in existence, police must carry out their often dangerous duties according to certain prescribed procedures, one of which has been transgressed [in this case].”

United States v. Akrawi, 920 F.2d 418 (6th Cir. 1990)

Agents went to the defendant’s house to execute an arrest warrant. The defendant answered the door and allowed the agents into the house. Only the defendant’s mother was seen in the house. After the arrest, the agents remained in the house for forty-five minutes and conducted a protective sweep of the second floor. This was not justified under the circumstances and the evidence found upstairs should have been suppressed.

United States v. Noushfar, 78 F.3d 1442 (9th Cir. 1996)

The agents arrested the defendants in their apartment, but then conducted a thirty-minute sweep search, including an examination of receipts in a box of documents. This exceeded a permissible sweep search.

United States v. Hogan, 38 F.3d 1148 (10th Cir. 1994)

An arrest warrant authorized the police to arrest the defendant. He was summoned out of his house. He was arrested outside his house, outside the fence. The police then searched the house for two hours and also seized the defendant’s camper, which was later searched with a search warrant. A protective sweep “is not a full search, but rather a quick, cursory inspection of the premises, permitted when police officers reasonably believe, based on specific and articulable facts, that the area to be swept harbors an individual posing danger to those on the arrest scene.” The search of the premises in this case was not authorized by the protective sweep exception to the search warrant requirement. However, nothing was learned during the improper protective sweep which tainted the search warrant for the camper which was later obtained.

United States v. Rodgers, 924 F.2d 219 (11th Cir. 1991)

After arresting the defendant in his front yard, police officers went back to the front door to close it. One officer noticed two handguns on a couch in the front room. He seized the guns, but conducted no other search. This was not a valid security sweep search. Nevertheless, the search was valid under the exigent circumstances exception to the warrant requirement. To be a valid security sweep, the officer must quickly search the premises, particularly in those places where a person might be hiding. Here, the officer did not search the premises at all; he simply entered the trailer and seized the guns. In short, the officer did not enter the premises, “with a reasonable belief based on specific and articulable facts that the area swept harbored an individual posing a danger to the officer or to others.”

Under Maryland v. Buie, two types of searches for people are permissible in connection with the arrest of a suspect: (1) a search of areas adjacent to the scene of the arrest, regardless of any likelihood of finding evidence; and (2) a search of other areas where there is a reasonable suspicion of finding someone who poses a threat to the officers. In this case, the officers, while looking in adjacent areas, discovered a gun clip. This did not authorize the officers to look behind a window shade, or under a mattress, because in neither location were the officers likely to discover any other person who posed a threat to the officers. The gun found behind the window shade, therefore, should have been suppressed.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Seizures)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (What Constitutes a Search)

Bailey v. United States, --- S. Ct. – (2013)

Though Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), permits the police to detain people who are at the scene that is the target of a search warrant, in this case the police followed individuals who left the scene prior to the search and detained them about a mile away, without any information that they were subject to a Terry stop. The Supreme Court held that this amounted to an unlawful detention that necessitated the suppression of any evidence derived from the stop of the individuals.

United States v. Hill, 805 F.3d 935 (10th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was on a train and had stored a large bag in a compartment at the end of the car in which he was a passenger. A DEA agent who was on drug interdiction duty entered the luggage storage area, retrieved a suspicious-looking bag and carried it through the passenger area, asking everybody who owned it. The Tenth Circuit held that this was an illegal seizure that necessitated suppressing the evidence that was eventually found in the bag. Removing the bag from the location in which it was stored was an interference of the defendant’s possessory interest and the right to control access to the bag. “[B]y taking control of the Coogi bag for his own purpose, i.e., the determination of the bag’s owner, [the agent] deprived Hill of his ability to access the bag for his own purposes, on his own time, and at the place where unchecked baggage is properly stowed.” The answer might be different if Hill had actually checked his baggage; in this case, however, he was simply storing his “carry-on” bag in the passenger car of the train where he could have accessed it whenever he wanted to.

United States v. Gordon, 741 F.3d 64 (10th Cir. 2014)

The police properly entered a house after receiving a domestic violence call. Once in the house, the police also properly seized a shotgun seen in plain view in order to protect everybody present. Once the defendant was removed from the scene, however, the continued seizure of the shotgun was not permissible. During the time that the police continued this improper seizure, they learned that the defendant was a convicted felon. While holding that the seizure was a constitutional violation, the appellate court also concluded that the violation was de minimus and therefore excluding the evidence was not required.

United States v. Alvarez-Manzo, 570 F.3d 1070 (8th Cir. 2009)

The police seized a suitcase from underneath an interstate bus during a layover at a bus depot. They brought the suitcase into the bus and asked the passengers to whom it belonged. The defendant eventually said that it was his. He agreed to exit the bus and went with an officer into the bus station. Ultimately, he was arrested based on what was seen in his wallet and a search warrant was obtained to search the bag. The police did not act with the consent or at the direction of any employee of the bus company when they initially took the bag out cabbage compartment and brought it into the bus. This amounted to a seizure and because there was no warrant or probable cause, evidence discovered as a result of the seizure – which was both the contents of the wallet and the suitcase – was properly suppressed.

United States v. Virden, 488 F.3d 1317 (11th Cir. 2007)

The police stopped the defendant’s car after watching it leave the location where a search was about to occur. Because a drug dog was not available at that location, the police put the defendant in a police car in handcuffs and brought the car to a location two miles away where the dog was located. The Eleventh Circuit held that this exceeded the bounds of a Terry stop and amounted to a seizure requiring probable cause. Because there was no probable cause, the search of the car was unlawful.

United States v. Jefferson, 566 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 2009)

If the police divert an express mail package in order to investigate it for containing contraband, the defendant cannot complain of a Fourth Amendment violation until the government has seized the package beyond the time that the delivery company has contractually agreed to deliver the package. If the police discover (through lawful means) contraband in the package prior to the contractually agreed-upon delivery time, there is no Fourth Amendment violation.

United States v. Neely, 345 F.3d 366 (5th Cir. 2003)

The defendant was a suspect in a bank robbery. After the robbery, he went to the hospital with a gunshot wound. The police went to the hospital and retrieved his clothing, which had been cut off of him and placed in a bag in a storage room. The Fifth Circuit held that he had a property interest in the clothes and the police could not “seize” the clothes, even if he did not have a privacy interest in the place that was searched.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Single Purpose Container Exception)

United States v. Gust, 405 F.3d 797 (9th Cir. 2005)

The “single-purpose container” exception to the search warrant requirement traces its origin to Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753 (1979), which noted that certain containers may be searched without a warrant, because their contents are so apparent, for example, a gun case. In a later decision, Robbins v. California, 453 U.S. 420 (1981), the Court observed that this principle was closely related to the plain view doctrine. Robbins was later overruled in United States v. Ross, 456 U.S. 798 (1982). In this case, the Ninth Circuit held that the question of whether a container satisfies this standard should be viewed from the lay person’s point of view, not the viewpoint of a trained law enforcement officer, because the issue focuses on the defendant’s expectation of privacy. The court concluded that the container in this case could not be readily identified as a gun case and, therefore, the warrantless search was unlawful.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Staleness)

United States v. Musgraves, 831 F.3d 454 (7th Cir. 2016)

Though upholding the probable cause foundation for the search warrant on other grounds, the Seventh Circuit held that information about a controlled buy at a location seven months earlier was too stale to authorize a search warrant for that location.

United States v. Cordova, 792 F.3d 1220 (10th Cir. 2015)

The search warrant in this case was so devoid of probable cause – it was based on stale information, information that did not relate to the defendant, information about marijuana that was seized on the highway that was supposedly destined to another location at which the defendant formerly lived – that no reasonable officer could have believed that the warrant was valid. The warrant did not pass the Leon test.

United States v. Roach, 582 F.3d 1192 (10th Cir. 2009)

The search warrant affidavit documented years of gang activity by numerous members of the gang. The incidents involving the defendant were numerous, but the last identified offense was years prior to the issuance of the warrant. The warrant was issued for the defendant’s girlfriend’s house, where he was believed to be living. The only link to the house was the assertion in the affidavit that the officers believed that he was living there. The Tenth Circuit held that the information was insufficient, as well as being stale, to support a search warrant for the house. But the search was saved by the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Prideaux-Wentz, 543 F.3d 954 (7th Cir. 2008)

The information known to the police was not sufficiently recent to authorize a search warrant. The police received information via a “cyber tip” that the defendant was obtaining child pornography. The information, however, related to events that occurred two years earlier. Though the courts have held that child pornography is generally kept by the recipients, a two year gap is too long for probable cause to exist that the evidence is still at that location. Nevertheless, Leon applies and the court held that the evidence would not be suppressed.

United States v. Hython, 443 F.3d 480 (6th Cir. 2006)

The search warrant application revealed that a controlled purchase of cocaine occurred at the target location, but nowhere in the warrant did the affiant reveal when this controlled purchase occurred. Therefore, the information in the warrant application was stale and there was no probable cause to search the premises. Moreover, the Leon good faith exception did not apply. In reaching the Leon conclusion, the Sixth Circuit noted that whether an officer could objectively rely on the warrant as being valid, the court held that the inquiry is limited to the four corners of the affidavit. Thus, what the affiant actually knew (but did not recite in the affidavit) cannot be considered in the good faith analysis.

United States v. Laughrin, 438 F.3d 1245 (10th Cir. 2006)

Knowledge of a person’s prior criminal involvement is alone insufficient to give rise to the requisite reasonable suspicion supporting a traffic stop. In this case, the officer testified that he had stopped the defendant repeatedly in the past for driving without a license, or on a suspended license. On that basis, when the officer saw the defendant driving, he pulled him over. This was an unlawful stop. The officer’s encounter with the defendant was more than twenty-two weeks previously and this was too long a time to presume that the defendant’s license was still suspended. The information known to the officer, therefore, was too stale to support a stop of the defendant’s vehicle.

United States v. Kennedy, 427 F.3d 1136 (8th Cir. 2005)

The defendant’s girlfriend said that the defendant “deals” drugs and “keeps” drugs in his car. This did not establish probable cause that the defendant then had drugs in his car.

United States v. Zimmerman, 277 F.3d 426 (3rd Cir. 2002)

The police obtained a search warrant to search the defendant’s home to look for child and adult pornography. There was no information in the warrant application that indicated that any pornography would be found in his home, though there was information that one clip of adult pornography was seen in the home months earlier by one (or perhaps more than one) high school student. That information, however, was stale.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Standing)

SEE ALSO: Search and Seizure (Expectation of Privacy)

When the police stop a vehicle that has a driver and passenger, the passenger is also “detained” for fourth amendment purposes. Therefore, if there was no basis for the stop, the passenger may contest the admissibility of any fruits of that stop (for which he has standing), such as a statement he made, or evidence seized from his person or personal belongings. He may also challenge the fruits of his illegal detention, which may include the search of the car in which he was a passenger.

The Supreme Court held that visitors to an apartment whose sole purpose in visiting was to package drugs did not have standing to contest a warrantless search of the apartment. Three Justices dissented, and two concurring Justices (Kennedy and Souter) stated that they believed that any social visitor to a house or apartment would have standing. Thus, five Justices would confer standing on a social visitor, even if not an overnight visitor.

The Ninth Circuit held that a co-conspirator retained an expectation of privacy in a vehicle which he enlisted another person to drive across the border with contraband. This “co-conspirator” standing rule was rejected by the United States Supreme Court. Only if the defendant’s own rights were violated may he complain; the privacy rights of co-conspirators are not pertinent. “Participants in a criminal conspiracy may have such expectations or interests, but the conspiracy itself neither adds nor detracts from them.”

An overnight guest in a residence has a reasonable expectation of privacy in the residence.

The defendant was stopped in a rental car. The car was rented by his girlfriend, who gave him permission to drive the rental vehicle, but he was not listed on the rental papers as an authorized driver. Nevertheless, the United States Supreme Court held that the mere fact that a driver in lawful possession or control of a rental car is not listed on the rental agreement will not defeat his or her otherwise reasonable expectation of privacy.

United States v. Terry, 909 F.3d 716 (4th Cir. 2018)

The police unlawfully placed a GPS device on the defendant’s car without first obtaining a warrant. They subsequently used the data from the device to determine that the defendant was speeding and on that basis, the car was pulled over and ultimately, drugs were found in the car. The initial illegal “search” (placing the GPS device on the car without a warrant) was not too attenuated from the subsequent discovery of drugs and was, instead, the fruit of they poisonous tree and the evidence should have been suppressed. On the question of standing, the court held that the defendant had standing, as the driver of the car, when the GPS device was placed on the vehicle and though he was a passenger during the subsequent stop (and thus did not have standing to challenge the drugs found in the car), the search was the fruit of the poisonous tree and the lack of standing does not change that determination.

_United States v. Walton_, 763 F.3d 655 (7th Cir. 2014)

The fact that the defendant had left his home jurisdiction without permission from his parole officer and that he violated the rental car agreement by driving without a valid driver’s license did not mean that he did not have standing to challenge a search of the rental car he was driving.

_United States v. Noble_, 762 F.3d 509 (6th Cir. 2014)

The police were watching the Interstate for a vehicle that was suspected to be involved in a methamphetamine distribution operation. When the vehicle was spotted, an officer pulled behind it. The vehicle crossed a lane line without a proper signal. The officer activated his lights. The officer determined that the tint on the window was too dark. The driver and the passenger were excessively nervous. The driver consented to a search of the vehicle, at which point the passenger was asked to exit the vehicle and he was frisked. Because there was no basis to believe that he was armed or dangerous, there was no legitimate basis to frisk the defendant and the evidence derived from this frisk should have been suppressed. The officers then obtained a search warrant to search a hotel room where a co-conspirator was located and more evidence was located. The hotel occupant contested the search on the basis that the frisk was illegal and that evidence was used to obtain the search warrant. Though the hotel occupant did not have standing to challenge the frisk of the occupant of the vehicle, because the government never raised the standing issue, the issue was waived. The Sixth Circuit reviews the law in other Circuits and holds that the failure to raise the standing issue waives the government’s right to contest that issue on appeal.

_United States v. Starks_, 769 F.3d 83 (1st Cir. 2014)

The driver of a rental car has standing to contest the stop of the vehicle, even if he is not on the rental agreement as an authorized driver and has no driver’s license. The driver has no less right than he would have as a passenger, and a passenger has standing to contest an unlawful stop pursuant to _Brendlin v. California_. In this case, the person who rented the car permitted the defendant to drive, even though the rental agreement only allowed the renter or a domestic partner to drive the car.

_United States v. Edwards_, 632 F.3d 633 (10th Cir. 2001)

The defendant was arrested on the sidewalk near a parking lot. The court concluded that there was probable cause to support the arrest (a belief that the defendant had participated in a bank robbery). The police then searched a rental car, which had been rented by his girlfriend which was in the parking lot. The Tenth Circuit held that the defendant did not have standing to contest the search of the car in general, because he was not on the rental agreement, but he did have standing to challenge the search of the closed suitcases which he owned that were in the trunk of the vehicle. The court also held that the search was not a valid probable cause search of the vehicle, because there was no probable cause to believe that the car contained any evidence. The search was not a valid search incident to arrest, because the defendant was over 100 feet away from the car when he was arrested and he was handcuffed in the back of the patrol car (note, this case was decided pre-\textit{Gant}). This was not an inventory search, because the police conceded that they were searching for evidence and had not decided to impound the car until the evidence was found.

\textit{United States v. Washington}, 573 F.3d 279 (6\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 2009)

The defendant had an expectation of privacy in the apartment in which he was staying. The apartment was his uncle’s. Though the apartment was being used for illegal purposes (drug dealing) this does not deprive the defendant of the right to assert standing to challenge an illegal entry and search of the apartment. Additionally, the fact that the uncle was occasionally behind in his rent (and violated the terms of the lease by engaging in illegal conduct in the unit) did not affect the standing issue. Even if the landlord had the ability to evict the tenants, until he does so, the tenant, and his guest, have a reasonable expectation of privacy in the apartment.

\textit{United States v. Hamilton}, 538 F.3d 162 (2d Cir. 2008)

The defendant purchased a house and put it in his girlfriend’s name and she lived there. He came and went as he pleased. He actually went there two or three times per week for years. The defendant did not have keys to the house. The district court held that the defendant did not have standing to contest the search of the house. The Second Circuit reversed: “There is no authority for the proposition that one need live in the premises, or exercise control over them, in order to enjoy a privacy interest in those premises.”

\textit{United States v. Finley}, 477 F.3d 250 (5\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 2007)

The defendant had standing to contest the search of his cell phone, even though the phone had been provided to him by his business.

\textit{United States v. Olivares-Rangel}, 458 F.3d 1104 (10\textsuperscript{th} Cir. 2006)

If a defendant is illegally seized or arrested and as the result of that illegal arrest, the defendant makes a statement, the defendant’s identity is learned, and his illegal status is ascertained, the court \textit{may} suppress all the evidence. The suppression of the defendant’s statement is governed by \textit{Brown v. Illinois}, 422 U.S. 590 (1975). The suppression of the identity evidence (as well as the defendant’s “A-file”) is more complicated. The government argued that \textit{INS v. Lopez-Mendoza}, 468 U.S. 1032 (1984), holds that the identity of the defendant may never be suppressed. The Tenth Circuit rejected this argument. The defendant, himself, may not be suppressed (i.e., he may be brought to court), but evidence derived from the illegal detention may be suppressed, including fingerprint evidence in certain circumstances (see \textit{Davis v. Mississippi}, 394 U.S. 721 (1969); \textit{Hayes v. Florida}, 470 U.S. 811 (1985)) and independently created and maintained government records. The fact that the defendant does not have an expectation of privacy in the government records is not relevant. The standing issue focuses on the defendant’s rights regarding the illegal arrest. The defendant need not have an expectation of privacy in the \textit{fruits} that are the result of the unlawful arrest. In other words, the defendant is not required to prove an expectation of privacy in \textit{both} the primary violation \textit{and} the fruits. If his expectation of privacy was violated, the fruits of that violation may be suppressed, regardless of whether the fruits are discovered in a place for which the defendant does not have an expectation of privacy.

United States v. Mosley, 454 F.3d 249 (3rd Cir. 2006)

If the police stop a car without an articulable suspicion, the discovery of contraband in the car must be suppressed, even in a prosecution of a passenger. Though Rakas v. Illinois indicates that the passenger has no expectation of privacy in the car, the passenger’s motion to suppress is predicated on his unlawful detention and the fruit of that unlawful detention, rather than on the expectation of privacy in the automobile. The court’s opinion runs twenty pages and comprehensively reviews the law of “fruit”.

United States v. Thomas, 447 F.3d 1191 (9th Cir. 2006)

The Ninth Circuit held that an unauthorized driver of a rental car has standing to contest the search of the car if the authorized driver gave permission to the unauthorized driver to drive.

United States v. Waller, 426 F.3d 838 (6th Cir. 2005)

The defendant was evicted from one apartment where he was living with friends and asked another friend if he could store some of his belongings in his apartment. The friend agreed. Shortly thereafter, the police obtained an arrest warrant for the defendant and arrested him outside the friend’s apartment. He acknowledged coming out of that apartment. The police obtained the friend’s consent to search the apartment. The police searched throughout the apartment and found guns in what turned out to be the defendant’s suitcase. He was prosecuted for possession of the guns. The Sixth Circuit held that the evidence should have been suppressed. The defendant had standing to challenge the search of his suitcases and the apartment owner did not have actual, or apparent authority to search the suitcases. The officers did not reasonably believe that the apartment owner had authority to grant consent to search the defendant’s personal belongings that were stored there.

United States v. Thomas, 372 F.3d 1173 (10th Cir. 2004)

A social guest – even one who does not spend the night – has standing to challenge a search of an apartment.

United States v. Bautista, 362 F.3d 584 (9th Cir. 2004)

The defendant checked into a hotel room with what the hotel later learned was a stolen credit card. The management called the police and asked them to investigate, though the hotel had not yet made the decision to evict the defendant. The police went to the door, announced who they were and demanded, “Open the door” and then used a pass key to open it. Inside was the defendant’s wife, who backed up from the door (which she was opening at the same time the pass key was used to unlock it) and she said, “Come in.” They then obtained her consent to search the room and discovered counterfeit paraphernalia. The Ninth Circuit held that the evidence had to be suppressed: First, the defendant had standing, because the hotel had not yet made the determination to evict the defendant and had not terminated his right of occupancy and the police had not yet made the decision to evict him. Both the police and the hotel were still investigating the information relating to the alleged stolen credit card. With regard to the issue of consent, the police officers’ command, “Police, open the door!” negated any suggestion of consent. “The government may not show consent to enter from the defendant’s failure to object to the entry.”
Note that this decision was limited in a subsequent Ninth Circuit decision, United States v. Cunag, 386 F.3d 888 (9th Cir. 2004).

United States v. Gomez, 276 F.3d 694 (5th Cir. 2001)

The police went to a house that had been identified by a tip as a stash house. The police talked to the defendant, who answered the front door. He declined to give consent to search the house but said that the agent could search the garage. The police then searched a truck in the driveway that the defendant had said belonged to his cousin. The question is whether the defendant had standing to contest the legality of the search of the truck. The Fifth Circuit concluded that a homeowner has a reasonable expectation of privacy in a vehicle owned and operated by a third party but parked on the homeowner’s driveway. The court stressed that his expectation of privacy was based, in part, on the fact that the truck was part of the unlawful enterprise (storing drugs) in which he took part. The court canvassed the law regarding a homeowner’s standing to contest “containers” owned by visitors, even if the homeowner did not know the contents. Many of the decisions uphold a homeowner’s expectation of privacy in that situation.

United States v. Best, 135 F.3d 1223 (8th Cir. 1998)

A driver who is not on the rental agreement, but who has the permission of the person who rented the car to drive the vehicle, has standing to contest a search of the vehicle.

United States v. Cooper, 133 F.3d 1394 (11th Cir. 1998)

The driver of a rental car which is overdue has standing to contest a search of the vehicle.

United States v. Blaze, 143 F.3d 585 (10th Cir. 1998)

The defendant was the only person listed on the rental car agreement permitted to drive the car. When the police stopped the car, however, the defendant was not in the car and another person was driving it. He had no standing to contest the search of the car. However, in the car was located a briefcase which belonged to him. The briefcase was locked and was in the locked trunk. Having entrusted the locked briefcase to his associates, the defendant did not abandon his expectation of privacy and he had standing to contest the warrantless search. (Having won the standing issue, the defendant then lost the issue of whether the evidence would inevitably have been discovered).

United States v. Baker, 221 F.3d 438 (3rd Cir. 2000)

A passenger in a car that he neither owns nor leases typically does not have standing to challenge a search of the car. A person who steals a car has no standing to challenge a search of the car. However, a person who borrows a car has a reasonable expectation of privacy and may challenge a search of the car. Moreover, any discrepancy between the defendant’s statement about who owns the car and the title is not enough to deprive him of an expectation of privacy in the vehicle, assuming it is not shown that the vehicle is stolen.

United States v. Vega, 221 F.3d 789 (5th Cir. 2000)
The police entered a house that was leased to the defendant after it was placed under surveillance. The government argued that the defendant lacked standing to contest the warrantless entry because one of defendant’s colleagues fled, leaving the side door open and, later, when the defendant was questioned, he denied living at the house. The court rejected both these theories. The fact that a door is left open does not defeat the defendant’s reasonable expectation of privacy in the premises. And the defendant’s denial that he lived there, in the face of interrogation, did not deprive him of standing to contest the warrantless entry into the house. Finally, the fact that the defendant used the premises for illegal purposes did not forfeit his right to contest the search.

United States v. Kimball, 25 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1994)

When a police officer effects a stop of a vehicle, all of the occupants have had their freedom of movement restrained, and thus all of the occupants have been seized. The passengers, as well as the driver, may feel that they are not free to leave once they have been stopped by the police. Therefore, if the stop is illegal, fruits of that stop, including evidence found in the car, must be suppressed in a trial involving the passengers of the car. In this case, the stop was lawful.

United States v. Cardona-Sandoval, 6 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 1993)

The crewmembers of a ship laden with drugs had standing to contest a search of the internal structure of the boat. The contraband was secreted in a hollowed-out part of a structural beam. The court found standing based on the cramped nature of the boat, the right of crewmembers to exclude non-crew members from the vessel, and the crewmembers’ duty to maintain the security of the boat.

United States v. Fields, 113 F.3d 313 (2d Cir. 1997)

The police searched an apartment and discovered cocaine. The two defendants who were arrested challenged the legality of the search. One defendant paid the tenant for the privilege of using the apartment and had a key. He had standing. The other defendant was a visitor who had stayed overnight on occasion, but was not shown to be an overnight visitor on this occasion. Nevertheless, he had standing, as well. The decision in Minnesota v. Olson, 495 U.S. 91 (1990), is not limited to overnight guests.

United States v. Osoria, 949 F.2d 38 (2d Cir. 1991)

Defendant was an overnight guest in the apartment of an acquaintance. Though he had not originally intended to stay overnight, when the acquaintance failed to return home (having been arrested), the defendant went to sleep in a spare bed. The police engaged in a warrantless search of the apartment. The defendant had standing to contest this search. See Minnesota v. Olson, 495 U.S. 91 (1990).

United States v. Jenkins, 92 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 1996)

The owner of a tractor-trailer has standing to contest a search of the trailer, even if he is not in possession of the trailer at the time of the search.

United States v. Sangineto-Miranda, 859 F.2d 1501 (6th Cir. 1988)

Although a casual visitor at an apartment did not have standing to challenge the warrantless search of the apartment, a person who had been afforded unrestricted access to the apartment, “just as any member of the lessee’s family,” does have standing.
A bailee may have an expectation of privacy in portions of a rented automobile for purposes of standing to object to the search of the car.

The defendant was in a van that was stopped by a trooper. He argued that the search of his person was a violation of the Fourth Amendment. The government and the lower court held that he did not have standing, because he did not own the vehicle that was stopped. This misses the point. The defendant had standing to contest the search of himself, as well as his seizure when the vehicle was stopped.

The defendant was stopped in a car for speeding. The driver said he had borrowed a car from a friend named McClavio. The police ultimately searched in the doors of the vehicle and found marijuana. The next day, McClavio reported the truck stolen. The Seventh Circuit holds that the driver had standing to contest the search of the vehicle. Because the car was not reported stolen until the next day, and may very well have been reported stolen in order to distance McClavio from the occupants of the car, the government failed to sustain its burden of disproving standing by a preponderance of the evidence. In short, the government failed to prove the vehicle was, in fact, stolen.

A defendant checked a suitcase full of stolen property at a public baggage claim counter in the name of a proposed buyer. He intended to deliver the claim check to the buyer. He had standing to object to the warrantless entry into the suitcase. Because the defendant had not turned over possession of the goods to the buyer, he still had an expectation of privacy in the suitcase.

An invited overnight guest had an expectation of privacy in the residence and thus had standing to contest the search of the home. He had permission to be in the residence at the time of the searches and had an interest in the items seized due to his involvement in the cocaine processing operation located there.

While an occupant of a car does not have standing to challenge a search of the vehicle, if the passenger is detained unlawfully and the search of the vehicle is the fruit of this unlawful detention, the evidence may be suppressed.

The defendant’s ship was boarded by law enforcement agents. Pursuant to 46 U.S.C. App. §1903(d) the government argued that only the flag nation of the ship has standing to challenge a search of a vessel. The trial court agreed and barred the defendants from filing a suppression motion. The Eleventh Circuit disagreed: Although there is ambiguity in the statute, the Court held that Congress would have specifically barred defendants from challenging the government’s non-compliance with the terms of §1903(a) if that were the congressional intent.

Defendants were convicted of possession of cocaine while on board a vessel of United States registry. The trial court held that crewmembers did not have standing to seek suppression of evidence seized from the boat. The Court of Appeals reverses: While neither captain nor crew... has a legitimate expectation of privacy in an area which is subject to the common access of those legitimately aboard the vessel, crew men do have standing to challenge the search of specific areas such as sleeping quarters and private spaces such as foot lockers and duffel bags. Here, the police officers had to destroy part of the area in which the defendant did have standing in order to get access to the area of the boat where the drugs were found. The Court holds that this gives them standing to challenge the search.

United States v. Miller, 821 F.2d 546 (11th Cir. 1987)

The driver of a car borrowed from a friend has standing to challenge the search of the car.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(STRIp SEARCHES)

Whenever a detainee is going to be placed in general population, the jail may conduct a strip search. It makes no difference what crime the detainee has been charged with, or whether there is particularized suspicion to support a search.

United States v. Fowlkes, 804 F.3d 954 (9th Cir. 2015)
During a routine body cavity search of the defendant as he was brought to the jail, the police saw a baggie sticking out of his rectum. Extracting the baggie required a search warrant.

United States v. Edwards, 666 F.3d 877 (4th Cir. 2011)
The police arrested the defendant and then unbuckled his pants, pulled out his underwear and when they saw a baggie tied around his penis, they used a knife to remove it. The Fourth Circuit held that this was an unreasonable strip search that violated the defendant’s rights under the Fourth Amendment.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Student Searches)

Phaneuf v. Fraikin, 448 F.3d 591 (2d Cir. 2006)

The Second Circuit reviews the law governing the legality of student searches (and strip searches) and concludes, based on the information known to school officials, that there was insufficient evidence to support a strip search of the plaintiff. See New Jersey v. T.L.O., 469 U.S. 325 (1985).
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Terry Stop – Improper Frisk)

The police frisked the defendant after he was stopped for engaging in “evasive” behavior. The police officer conducted a _Terry_ frisk. While frisking the defendant, the officer felt an object which was clearly not a weapon, but which felt like it might be contraband. The Supreme Court held that an officer who is engaging in a legal _Terry_ frisk of a subject may seize an object which the officer realizes immediately to be contraband. This is the “plain touch” analogue to the “plain view” exception. That is, the officer need not limit his seizures to weapons if he is immediately aware that he is touching contraband. Applying the rule to this case, however, the Court concluded that the officer was not immediately aware that he was touching contraband. Rather, “the officer determined that the lump was contraband only after squeezing, sliding and otherwise manipulating the contents of the defendant’s pocket – a pocket which the officer already knew contained no weapon.” The seizure, therefore, was not authorized by the “plain touch” exception.

If the police stop a vehicle lawfully and there is a passenger in the vehicle, if the police have a reason to believe the passenger is armed and dangerous, he may be frisked. This is true, even if the passenger is not believed to have committed any crime.

_United States v. Johnson_, 885 F.3d 1313 (11th Cir. 2018)

The police had an articulable suspicion to detain the defendant based on a call reporting a burglary in an apartment complex and the defendant fit the description of the perpetrator. After detaining the defendant, the office frisked him and felt what he thought was a bullet. The officer reached into his pocket and retrieved the bullet and a holster. The Eleventh Circuit held that this was an unlawful search. While the frisk was justified, feeling a bullet did not justify reaching in the pocket and retrieving it.

_United States v. Lewis_, 864 F.3d 937 (8th Cir. 2017)

The defendant was an employee at a Tattoo shop. The police were looking for a suspect and entered the premises and went into a work area where the defendant was located. After entering, the police saw a gun in a holster and seized it. Almost immediately after the police seized it, the defendant acknowledged that he was a convicted felon. The Eighth Circuit held that the seizure of the gun was not supported by either the plain view exception (because at the moment of the seizure there was no probable cause to believe that the gun was illegally possessed), and was not justified by officer safety, because there was no reason to be fearful of the gun on the shelf in a holster.

_United States v. Craddock_, 841 F.3d 756 (8th Cir. 2016)

The police were suspicious that the defendant, who was walking near a car that was known to be stolen, was involved in the theft of the vehicle. The officer handcuffed him and frisked him, taking a key fob from his pocket, which opened the stolen vehicle door. The Eighth
Circuit held that this was an unlawful frisk, but the key fob was not believed to be a dangerous weapon and was not subject to the plain feel doctrine, because the officer did not have probable cause to believe that it was incriminating evidence. The key fob’s incriminating character was not immediately apparent upon plain feel.

United States v. Monsivais, 848 F.3d 353 (5th Cir. 2017)

The police encountered the defendant on the side of the Interstate, apparently walking away from a disabled truck. The defendant acted nervous, gave an inconsistent answer about his destination and initially walked away from the police when they activated their blue lights. None of these factors justified frisking the defendant, which amounted to a seizure.

United States v. Robinson, 814 F.3d 201 (4th Cir. 2016)

In states, such as West Virginia, where possession of a concealed firearm is legal, a tip to the police that a man was seen loading a gun in a parking lot of a convenience store, does not provide a basis for detaining the individual or frisking him. The possession of a weapon is not illegal and there was no reason for the police to believe that the defendant’s possession of the weapon made him “dangerous.” At the time the police conducted the frisk, the defendant was not known to be a convicted felon. THE EN BANC COURT REVERSED. 846 F.3d 694 (2017).

United States v. Leo, 792 F.3d 742 (7th Cir. 2015)

A Terry frisk is limited to the defendant’s outer clothing or easily accessible belongings in which a weapon might be used to endanger an officer. In this case, the officers detained the defendant and then took his backpack, unzipped it and located a gun inside. This was not a proper frisk. The defendant was already in handcuffs and the officers had already frisked him.

United States v. Watson, 787 F.3d 101 (2d Cir. 2015)

The police were looking for Butler, who was wanted for committing a robbery. The police were given a photographic of Butler. They stopped Watson, believing him to be Butler. Watson produced identification showing that he was not Butler. Nevertheless, the police frisked him, finding drugs and a gun. The trial court found that the detention of Watson was not reasonable, because the officer’s mistaken belief that Watson was Butler was not reasonable. The Second Circuit affirmed.

United States v. Noble, 762 F.3d 509 (6th Cir. 2014)

The police were watching the Interstate for a vehicle that was suspected to be involved in a methamphetamine distribution operation. When the vehicle was spotted, an officer pulled behind it. The vehicle crossed a lane line without a proper signal. The officer activated his lights. The officer determined that the tint on the window was too dark. The driver and the passenger (the defendant) were excessively nervous. The driver consented to a search of the vehicle, at which point the passenger/defendant was asked to exit the vehicle and he was frisked. Because there was no basis to believe that he was armed or dangerous, there was no legitimate basis to frisk the defendant and the evidence derived from this frisk should have been suppressed. The facts that the driver and passenger were nervous and that the vehicle was suspected of being involved in a drug trafficking operation are not sufficient to support a reasonable belief that the passenger was armed or dangerous, even coupled with the officer’s experience that drug dealers are often armed. The court ridicules the notion that any passenger in a car can be frisked if the driver or the vehicle is suspected of being involved in drugs: this would presumably include “a fourth grader, a ninety-five-year-old gentleman with Parkinson’s disease, or a judge this court.” The law requires individualized suspicion of the person who is to be frisked, not a general belief that someone in the vehicle might possibly be armed.

United States v. Williams, 731 F.3d 678 (7th Cir. 2013)

Though there was a basis for a Terry stop, there was no basis for a frisk, because the absence of sufficient information that the defendant was armed or dangerous.

United States v. I.E.V., 705 F.3d 430 (9th Cir. 2012)

At a border checkpoint, a drug-detecting dog alerted to a vehicle. The occupants were asked to get out and were frisked. The Ninth Circuit held that a dog alert, with no additional evidence that the occupants were armed or dangerous in any way, was not a sufficient basis to authorize a frisk of the occupants.

United States v. Powell, 666 F.3d 180 (4th Cir. 2011)

The defendant was a passenger in a car. The driver was stopped and he had a suspended license. The police asked the defendant/passenger for his license to see if he would be allowed to drive the car. A record check was performed on the defendant’s license and it revealed a prior armed robbery conviction and also a suspended license. The police then frisked the defendant, discovering evidence used in a drug/firearm prosecution. The Fourth Circuit held that the frisk was not lawful, because there was no reasonable basis for believing that the defendant was armed, or dangerous, and therefore no reason to frisk him.

United States v. Camacho, 661 F.3d 718 (1st Cir. 2011)

The police went to the scene of a street brawl and saw two people walking on the sidewalk. Suspicious that they had been involved in the brawl, the police pulled their car in front of the defendant, stopping him and then frisked the defendant and felt a gun. The defendant pushed the officer’s hand away, after which the defendant was arrested. The First Circuit concluded that the initial encounter was a seizure; there was no lawful basis for the seizure (i.e., there was no articulable suspicion); the frisk was not proper; the discovery of the weapon was not the result of a valid search incident to arrest.

United States v. Massenburg, 654 F.3d 480 (4th Cir. 2011)

The police had no basis for frisking the defendant and the evidence obtained from the frisk should have been suppressed. The police drove to the scene where there was a reported shooting. Four men were seen a few blocks away. No evidence linked them to the shooting. They were responsive when the police approached them. They answered the officers’ questions and said that they, too, had heard gunshots. When the police asked for consent to frisk them, two consented, but the defendant declined. This did not provide a basis to conduct a non-consensual frisk. The court also rejected the government’s invitation to rely on the “collective knowledge” doctrine, based on testimony that another officer, who did not actually conduct the frisk, had seen a bulge in the defendant’s pocket. The Fourth Circuit held that the collective knowledge doctrine did not apply in this case, because the searching officer had no reason to believe that any other officer had sufficient information to support the search.

United States v. Jones, 606 F.3d 964 (8th Cir. 2010)

The police saw the defendant walking in a church parking lot, wearing a “hoodie” and clutching his right front pocket. The police approached him and frisked him. There was no basis for this detention or frisk and the discovery of the gun should have been suppressed.

Gentry v. Sevier, 597 F.3d 838 (7th Cir. 2010)

The defendant was walking with a wheelbarrow through a neighborhood late at night. The police were called. When the police arrived, they summoned the defendant over to their car and told him to “keep his hands up.” This amounted to a seizure, which was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The officer then patted down the defendant, locating a garage opener. There was no basis for this frisk: there was no reason to believe the defendant was armed or dangerous and he was not subject to a legitimate arrest or detention. Moreover, there was no basis to keep the garage door opener (and thereafter walk down the street seeing if it opened any garage in the neighborhood), because it was not a weapon, or apparent to be contraband. Finally, the search of the wheelbarrow was illegal. Though some items on the top of the pile in the wheelbarrow were subject to plain view, other items below the surface could only be seen when the officer probed beneath the surface. The defendant’s trial counsel was ineffective in failing to move to suppress the fruits of the search.

United States v. Zavala, 541 F.3d 562 (5th Cir. 2008)

The police may not flip open and examine a motorist’s cell phone during a Terry stop. A Terry stop permits a brief frisk to ensure officer safety and not an investigation into the contents of a cell phone, including looking for the subscriber number.

United States v. Askew, 529 F.3d 1119 (D.C.Cir. 2008) en banc

The police brought a defendant back to the scene of a robbery and unzipped his jacket so the witness could view his clothing under the jacket. Over the course of a forty-five page opinion which represents an encyclopedic review of Terry jurisprudence, the D.C. Circuit, en banc, held that this amounted to a search for Fourth Amendment purposes. The Court suggested that in some circumstances, unzipping a defendant’s jacket may be permissible in this situation, but that there was insufficient information known to the police in this case to justify this procedure. The Court relied principally on Minnesota v. Dickerson, 508 U.S. 366 (1993), in holding that a protective “search” or frisk, is limited to what is necessary to achieve the goal of officer safety, not crime investigation.

United States v. Davis, 530 F.3d 1069 (9th Cir. 2008)

The defendant was lawfully frisked when he arrived at the location of premises that were being searched, because the police had a reason to believe that he might be armed. Nevertheless, when the frisk was conducted, a “tin” was located and the officer “manipulated” the tin, even though there was no basis for believing that the tin contained a weapon. This amounted to an improper frisk. The hashish oil that was found should have been suppressed. Harmless error.
United States v. Hughes, 517 F.3d 1013 (8th Cir. 2008)
The police received a tip that there were two suspicious people trespassing at a specific location. The police went to the scene, but the two men were across the street, waiting at a bus stop. The police approached them and frisked them, finding ammunition. Because the two men were doing nothing improper when the police arrived (and at most were previously trespassing), stopping them and frisking them was not permissible.

United States v. Wilson, 506 F.3d 488 (6th Cir. 2007)
Though the defendant, a passenger in a car, exhibited extreme nervousness when pulled over, this did not justify a frisk and the drugs found in his pocket were properly suppressed by the trial judge.

United States v. Holmes, 505 F.3d 1288 (D.C. Cir. 2007)
The defendant was seen in an alley by the police at 3:40 in the morning and when the officers approached him, he fled, scaling several fences in the process. The officers followed him and when they caught him, he was frisked and a set of car keys were discovered and taken from him. The officers then used the car keys’ remote door opener to find the car. The defendant then gave consent to search the car and a gun was found in the car. The D.C. Circuit held that taking the keys from the defendant after the frisk violated his Fourth Amendment rights. There was no probable cause to seize the keys and the fruit of that unlawful seizure was the discovery, and ultimately the search, of the vehicle in which the gun was found. The government’s argument that the taint of the illegal seizure was purged by the subsequent consent to search was rejected. The attenuation doctrine did not save the search in this case.

United States v. Garcia, 496 F.3d 495 (6th Cir. 2007)
The police lawfully stopped the defendant’s car and properly conducted a frisk. However, it was not proper to seize a pager that was located during the frisk. The pager was not obviously contraband. Harmless error.

United States v. Flatter, 456 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 2006)
The defendant, a postal worker, was suspected of stealing mail. Prior to interviewing him, and fearing that the interview might become confrontational, the investigators frisked the defendant and found incriminating evidence. There was no basis for frisking the defendant, however, because there was no basis for believing that he had a weapon. The frisk was unlawful and the evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. McKoy, 428 F.3d 38 (1st Cir. 2005)
After the police pulled the defendant over in a high crime area, the police noticed that he acted nervous and twice headed for the center console. Based on these observations, the police frisked the defendant. The First Circuit held that this frisk was improper. The defendant’s conduct was consistent with a motorist being nervous in connection with a traffic stop and reaching for his license and registration.

United States v. Glenn, 152 F.3d 1047 (8th Cir. 1998)
Defendant was pulled over for a traffic violation. The police determined that he did not have a driver’s license on his person. The defendant was directed to get in the back of the patrol car. Before being placed in the patrol car, however, he was frisked, yielding a gun. There was no basis for frisking the defendant. Law enforcement officers are not permitted to pat down all traffic offenders simply by choosing to place them in the back seat of patrol cars during traffic stops. However, the police inevitably would have learned that the defendant had no license at all. This would have supported an arrest and a search incident to arrest.

United States v. Schiavo, 29 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 1994)

The police stopped the defendant’s vehicle, believing that he had recently obtained drug “sting” money which an informant had paid for some cocaine to the defendant’s underling. When the defendant was stopped, the officer saw a bulge in the defendant’s pocket, but could not determine what it was, even after the pat-down. A Dickerson plain-feel seizure was not authorized. Because the nature of the bulge was not immediately apparent to the officer, he could not seize the bag.

United States v. Jaramillo, 25 F.3d 1146 (2d Cir. 1994)

The police raided a bar and immediately spotted two patrons with weapons. The defendant then exited a bathroom and was frisked. A gun was found. This frisk was not proper. There was no known connection between the defendant and the other patrons and no basis for believing that he was in the possession of any weapon. Moreover, this is not a case in which the officers entered upon private premises at which the officers had the right to conduct a search or make a security check. This case is controlled by Ybarra v. Illinois, 444 U.S. 85 (1979). In a public place, people can only be frisked if there is an articulable suspicion that they are acting suspiciously, or that they possess a weapon.

United States v. Thomas, 863 F.2d 622 (9th Cir. 1988)

A police officer pulled over the defendant on the basis that he apparently matched the description of a counterfeiting suspect. After the officer blocked the defendant’s car, the defendant exited the car and approached the officer. It was immediately apparent that the defendant did not meet the description. Nevertheless, the officer frisked and continued to question the defendant. The continuing detention was unlawful once it was determined that the defendant did not meet the suspect’s description. There was no basis for the police officer to fear for his safety.

United States v. Bonds, 829 F.2d 1072 (11th Cir. 1987)

The Eleventh Circuit defines the conditions which must exist to authorize a Terry stop and a frisk. The two standards are not necessarily the same. In order to authorize a frisk, there must be specific facts supporting a reasonable belief by the frisking officer that he is in danger. This is different than the standard used to determine whether an investigatory stop is permitted. In this case, the Court upholds both the stop and the frisk of the defendants.

The police stopped a man on the basis of a lookout which they received. The suspect did not, however, match the description of the lookout. He was frisked and a gun was found. The question in this case is whether the frisk of one of that suspect’s companions could be justified on the basis of the “automatic companion frisk” rule. The court holds that the frisk was not lawful in this case. If the police lacked an articulable suspicion to search the first suspect, they could not use information from that unlawful frisk to justify the search of the companion. Otherwise, the police could approach a crowd and start searching everybody. As soon as a weapon was found on one person (even if not the first person searched), further frisks would be deemed lawful.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Terry Stop – Invalid Basis for Seizure)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (HIGHWAY STOPS)

The Supreme Court reversed the Ninth Circuit which had categorically held that various innocent factors could not be considered by the police in assessing whether there was an articulable suspicion supporting a stop of a vehicle on the road. In this case, the officer’s suspicions were aroused by the location of the vehicle (in the desert of rural Arizona); the vehicle slowed when it approached the officer; children in the minivan waved at the officer in a manner that struck the officer as unusual; and the driver did not acknowledge the officer’s presence. The Ninth Circuit had held that these factors could not even be considered by the court in determining whether there was a basis for stopping the vehicle. The Supreme Court unanimously held that under the totality of the circumstances test, all facts may be considered by the court in reviewing the officer’s basis for stopping a vehicle. The Court also noted that the officer was entitled to make an assessment of the situation in light of his specialized training and familiarity with the customs of the area’s inhabitants.

Navarette v. California, 134 S. Ct. 1683 (2014)
A 911 caller who did not identify herself, told the dispatcher that a specific vehicle had just run her off the road. The police went to the highway and saw the described vehicle, followed it for a few minutes (observing no traffic infractions) and then stopped the vehicle. Drugs were located in the car. The Supreme Court held that the traffic stop was permissible under the Fourth Amendment. Because the caller correctly identified the vehicle – a fact verified the police who later observed the vehicle traveling in the direction described by the caller; and because the caller would know that his or her cell phone could be traced, there was sufficient indicia of reliability to authorize the stop. Four Justices dissented.

If a defendant is pulled over for an investigatory stop illegally (there was no articulable suspicion or probable cause to support the stop) and the police determine that there is an outstanding arrest warrant for the defendant, a search incident to arrest is proper and the exclusionary rule does not bar the use of evidence discovered during the search incident to arrest. The illegal stop is too attenuated from the discovery of the evidence that was the product of the legal search incident to arrest.

Alabama v. White, 496 U.S. 325 (1990)
The police received an anonymous tip that the defendant would exit a particular apartment, at a particular time in a particular vehicle and that she would be going to a particular motel, and that she would be in possession of cocaine. The police went to the location of the apartment, and the suspect did in fact exit the apartment at the appropriate time and enter the vehicle. She was followed heading in the direction of the hotel which the anonymous tipster had identified. She was stopped by the police. The Supreme Court holds that this is a valid Terry stop: Though the tip itself was completely lacking in the necessary indicia of reliability, it was corroborated by the conduct of the suspect, thus providing an articulable suspicion justifying the Terry stop of the defendant.

Though Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), permits the police to detain people who are at the scene that is the target of a search warrant, in this case the police followed individuals who left the scene prior to the search and detained them about a mile away, without any information that they were subject to a Terry stop. The Supreme Court held that this amounted to an unlawful detention that necessitated the suppression of any evidence derived from the stop of the individuals.

United States v. Watson, 900 F.3d 892 (7th Cir. 2018)

An anonymous caller called 911 and reported (1) the caller was 14-years old; (2) the caller was calling from a phone borrowed from somebody nearby; (3) the caller said that “some boys” were playing with guns at a specific location. The police went to the scene and blocked the defendant’s car in a parking lot and then searched the defendant and a gun was found. The Seventh Circuit held that the Terry stop was not permissible. Unlike in Navarette, the caller was not using her own phone, and simply reporting possession of a gun is not sufficient to establish that anybody was actually committing a crime. The police acted properly in going to the scene; they exceeded what they could do by immediately seizing the defendant based on the information provided in the 911 call.

United States v. Job, 851 F.3d 889 (9th Cir. 2017)

The police went to a suspect’s house to either arrest him, or conduct a search. When they arrived, another person, the defendant, was exiting the garage. The defendant was not known to the police and though he appeared nervous and was wearing baggy pants, there was no articulable suspicion to support a detention, or a frisk of the defendant. Nor was there any justification for searching the defendant’s car, which was parked in the driveway.

United States v. Monsivais, 848 F.3d 353 (5th Cir. 2017)

The police encountered the defendant on the side of the Interstate, apparently walking away from a disabled truck. The defendant acted nervous, gave an inconsistent answer about his destination and initially walked away from the police when they activated their blue lights. None of these factors justified frisking the defendant, which amounted to a seizure.

United States v. Robinson, 814 F.3d 201 (4th Cir. 2016)

In states, such as West Virginia, where possession of a concealed firearm is legal, a tip to the police that a man was seen loading a gun in a parking lot of a convenience store, does not provide a basis for detaining the individual or frisking him. The possession of a weapon is not illegal and there was no reason for the police to believe that the defendant’s possession of the weapon made him “dangerous.” At the time the police conducted the frisk, the defendant was not known to be a convicted felon. THE EN BANC COURT REVERSED. 846 F.3d 694 (2017).
United States v. Paniagua-Garcia, 813 F.3d 1013 (7th Cir. 2016)

The police saw the defendant “fiddling” with a cell phone. It is a violation of state law to “text-while-driving” but it is not a violation to talk on the phone or use GPS. The Seventh Circuit holds that the officer’s observation did not amount to an articulable suspicion that the defendant was violating the texting-while-driving prohibition.

United States v. Castle, 825 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

The police regularly patrolled a certain neighborhood in an unmarked pick-up truck and testified at a hearing that people in the neighborhood came to know the truck, and thus knew the occupants were police officer. The defendant was seen by the officers as they approached in their pickup and he acted in a suspicious manner. The trial court held that because “people in the neighborhood” knew the pickup was occupied by the police, the police had an articulable suspicion that the defendant was engaged in criminal conduct based on his response to the presence of the pickup. The DC Circuit reversed. The notion that “people in the neighborhood” knew the vehicle was not sufficient to establish that the defendant had this knowledge. The fact that the police recognized the defendant as someone who was involved in drug dealing in the past is also not sufficient to authorize a detention. This is nothing more than “rounding up the usual suspects” which is not a basis to detain a person, absent specific facts and circumstances known to the police at the time of the detention that the defendant is engaged in current criminal activity. In addition, the court held that approaching the defendant in an alleyway, touching him and telling him to “hold on a sec” was sufficient to amount to a seizure.

United States v. Slocumb, 804 F.3d 677 (4th Cir. 2015)

The police were preparing to execute a search warrant at a location. Across the street in a parking lot of a salvage yard was the officers’ staging area. When they arrived, the defendant and his girlfriend were in the parking lot in two different cars, along with an infant. The defendant was moving a car seat from one car to the other. An officer asked him questions, to which he gave mumbled responses. The area was known to be a high crime area. The officer directed the defendant to remain there while the search was executed. Eventually, the defendant provided a false name to the officers, but the detention was illegal prior to that time. The facts known to the police when the defendant was initially detained – it was high crime area, the business was closed, and the defendant gave mumbled – were not sufficient to justify a detention.

United States v. Wilbourn, 799 F.3d 900 (7th Cir. 2015)

Law enforcement was aware of extensive evidence linking the defendant to drug dealing, including recent activities (earlier in the day). The government failed to present any evidence, however, that law enforcement’s knowledge of the defendant’s activities was ever communicated to the two officers who stopped the car in which the defendant was a passenger. While there was sufficient information known to law enforcement generally, because there was no evidence that the police who stopped the vehicle had any articulable suspicion, the evidence derived from the stop should have been suppressed.

United States v. Lowe, 791 F.3d 424 (3rd Cir. 2015)
The police were sent to a location in a high crime area, based on a call that a man had a gun in his waistband. Earlier, there had been a report of shot fired near that location. Several police officers arrived in four marked police cars and immediately ordered the defendant to take his hands out of his pockets. He did not do so, and the officers, at least one of whom had his gun drawn, repeated the demand. The appellate court concluded that the defendant submitted to the show of authority by remaining in place, even though he did not immediately remove his hands from his pockets. The first request constituted a seizure under Terry, and because there was no lawful basis for this seizure – there was not an articulable suspicion that the defendant was engaged, or had engaged, in any criminal conduct – the subsequent frisk was illegal and the gun that was found as a result of the frisk should have been suppressed. The validity of the seizure must be measured at the time of the defendant’s submission to the officer’s commands.

United States v. Hill, 752 F.3d 1029 (5th Cir. 2014)

The police were patrolling in a high crime area of the city when they observed the defendant’s vehicle backed into a parking space in an apartment complex. The defendant was in the driver’s seat and his girlfriend was in the passenger seat. When the police pulled up next to him the girlfriend exited the vehicle and “briskly” walked away. The police directed the defendant to roll down the window (it did not work, so he opened the door). He was asked for his driver’s license (which he did not have), and was then ordered out of the car and was frisked. A gun was found in his pocket. The Fifth Circuit held that the police detained the defendant at the point that he was ordered to exit the car. At that point, even though the defendant acknowledged that he did not have a driver’s license, there was no basis for detaining the defendant. The fact that these events occurred in a “high crime area” provides no support for detaining the defendant was observed committing no crime, or doing anything suspicious. In fact, the police testified that the entire county was a high crime area (not the apartment complex in particular).

United States v. Freeman, 735 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2013)

In Florida v. J.L., 529 U.S. 266 (2000), the Supreme Court held that an anonymous tip was not sufficient to support a Terry stop. In this case, the Second Circuit held that an anonymous tip from a person calling on a cell phone (and whose phone number and the call, were recorded) was also insufficient to support a Terry stop. In addition, when the defendant refused to stop when the police approached him, the fact that he refused to stop and continued to walk away, did not provide an independent basis for seizing him. In short, if there is no basis to stop a person, the fact that the person walks away when the officers attempt to stop him does not justify a stop.

United States v. Valerio, 718 F.3d 1321 (11th Cir. 2013)

One week after observing the defendant engaged in activity that was sufficiently suspicious that it would have justified a brief detention, the police detained the defendant. During the intervening week, he had been seen engaged in suspicious activity. During the detention a week later, the defendant made an incriminating statement. The Eleventh Circuit held that a Terry stop may not be made after the need for immediate action has ended. The premise of Terry is that the events of the moment require an immediate investigation and detention.
United States v. Dapolito, 713 F.3d 141 (1st Cir. 2013)

At approximately 2:00 a.m., the police saw the defendant standing in the alcove of a building in downtown Portland, Maine. When questioned, he gave rambling sometimes incoherent answers to questions. When the police called dispatch to determine whether there were any warrants, the response was negative. There was insufficient information to believe that he was engaged in any criminal activity or that he was wanted in any jurisdiction. The district court found that the area was not a high crime area and there was no evidence of recent burglaries that would support a detention of this defendant. The encounter, which lasted twenty minutes, and ultimately involved several officers, rose to the level of a detention when he was repeatedly asked to produce identification and to consent to a search, which he refused. The resulting frisk was the product of this illegal detention.

United States v. Black, 707 F.3d 531 (4th Cir. 2013)

The police encountered several men sitting together at a gas station. One man showed the police that he had the gun. There were no other facts known to the police that would support a detention of any of the men. Detaining them and continuing to question them was an unlawful Terry stop and when one of the men got up to leave and was physically restrained by the police, the ensuing search of his person was improper and the evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. De La Cruz, 703 F.3d 1193 (10th Cir. 2013)

ICE agents were looking for Rivera. They stopped a car, believing that Rivera was the driver. Almost immediately, however, they realized that De La Cruz was the driver and not Rivera. However, a passenger in the car jumped out of the car and fled and was determined to be illegally in the country. The agents returned to De La Cruz and continued to detain him and asked for identification. The Tenth Circuit held that continuing to detain De La Cruz, after realizing that he was not Rivera, was not lawful because there was no articulable suspicion to justify his detention. Moreover, the flight of the passenger did not create articulable suspicion to detain De La Cruz, because this did not occur anywhere near the border, so there was no basis to believe that the driver, De La Cruz, was assisting the passenger in entering, or remaining in, the country illegally.

United States v. Bohman, 683 F.3d 861 (7th Cir. 2012)

The police had reason to believe, but not probable cause, that a cabin was the location of a meth lab. A car exiting the cabin was stopped and eventually, this led to a search of the cabin. The Seventh Circuit held that stopping the vehicle, solely because it left the location where there was suspicion that a meth lab was operating was not proper. At the time of the stop, there was no information known about that car, or its occupants.

United States v. Lewis, 672 F.3d 232 (3rd Cir. 2012)

The police received information from a reliable informant that firearms were in a white Toyota that had a license plate that included the numbers “181.” The informant did not relay his basis of knowledge, or whether the firearms were illegally possessed. The police stopped the vehicle. A gun was found on the defendant. Later, the officers determined that the vehicle had illegally tinted windows. The Third Circuit held that the traffic stop could not be supported by the illegal tint, because even though that might have been a valid basis for stopping the vehicle, the officers were not aware of that offense when the vehicle was stopped. The informant’s information was also insufficient to support the stop. It is not illegal to possess a firearm, consequently, the mere fact that a firearm is in a vehicle is not a legitimate basis to stop the vehicle.

United States v. Gaines, 668 F.3d 170 (4th Cir. 2012)

Three police officers testified that as the car in which the defendant was a passenger drove past them, they observed a small crack in the windshield. The car was stopped and the defendant was ordered out of the car and frisked and the officer felt a gun. The defendant assaulted the police officer and fled, after which he was stopped and a gun was found in his possession. The district court found that the officers were untruthful when they said that the observed a crack in the windshield and that the stop, therefore, was illegal. The government conceded the illegality of the stop, but claimed that the assault of the officer was an intervening event that authorized the search (incident to arrest). The Fourth Circuit rejected this argument: the gun was found during the course of the illegal stop (and the frisk) which was before the defendant engaged in the intervening assault.

United States v. Camacho, 661 F.3d 718 (1st Cir. 2011)

The police went to the scene of a street brawl and saw two people walking on the sidewalk. Suspicious that they had been involved in the brawl, the police pulled their car in front of the defendant, stopping him and then frisked the defendant and felt a gun. The defendant pushed the officer’s hand away, after which the defendant was arrested. The First Circuit concluded that the initial encounter was a seizure; there was no lawful basis for the seizure (i.e., there was no articulable suspicion); the frisk was not proper; the discovery of the weapon was not the result of a valid search incident to arrest.

United States v. Beauchamp, 659 F.3d 560 (6th Cir. 2011)

The defendant was walking on the sidewalk in a “high crime area” when the police approached. The defendant was ordered to approach the officer, which he did. The defendant appeared to be nervous. The officer then frisked the defendant to look for weapons. The officer then asked for consent to conduct a search of the defendant’s person and the defendant agreed. The officer found drugs inside the defendant’s boxers. The Sixth Circuit held that this was an seizure, it was not based on an articulable suspicion and the consent was tainted by the illegal detention.

United States v. Foster, 634 F.3d 243 (4th Cir. 2011)

The Fourth Circuit condemns the government’s use of post hoc explanations to justify a police officer’s detention of a defendant. Relying on such observations as “sudden hand movement in the car” and “suddenly appearing from crouched position” are not valid bases for stopping a defendant and then claiming that these were factors that justified the stop. The Court suppressed the evidence found during a search that followed a stop based on these circumstances.

United States v. Johnson, 620 F.3d 685 (6th Cir. 2010)
The police received a call that there were suspicious people at an apartment complex. The police went to the scene and saw the defendant, carrying a bag, walking calmly from the yard of the complex to a car. The police ordered him to stop; he kept walking. The police ordered him to stop again; he kept walking until he arrived at the car, opened the passenger door, threw the bag in and then stood still at the open door. The Sixth Circuit held that when he finally stopped, he had been seized. The fact that this was a “high crime area” and that this occurred late at night were not sufficient facts to support the seizure. The fact that the defendant refused to stop when ordered to do so was also not a basis to stop him. First, of course, because there was no basis to order him to stop, it would be peculiar to hold that his failure to comply with an unconstitutional order to stop created a constitutional basis to require him to stop. Second, merely walking away in a non-suspicious manner is not the equivalent of “flight.” Because there was no articulable suspicion to justify the seizure, the resulting frisk and search was unconstitutional and evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Williams, 615 F.3d 657 (6th Cir. 2010)

The defendant was standing in a housing project with others when a police officer approached and said he was “again trespassing on [housing authority] property.” During the following interaction, the defendant acknowledged in response to questions that there might be a warrant out for his arrest and he also acknowledged carrying a gun. The Sixth Circuit held that the encounter was a seizure for Fourth Amendment purposes. There were two officers, they approached the defendant an immediately accused him of a crime, and there was no basis that would lead the defendant to believe that he could simply walk away from the officers. There was insufficient information known to the police to support the seizure; the defendant’s statement was the fruit of that detention; the evidence would be suppressed, even though there was an outstanding arrest warrant.

United States v. Jones, 606 F.3d 964 (8th Cir. 2010)

The police saw the defendant walking in a church parking lot, wearing a “hoodie” and clutching his right front pocket. The police approached him and frisked him. There was no basis for this detention or frisk and the discovery of the gun should have been suppressed.

United States v. See, 574 F.3d 309 (6th Cir. 2009)

The police pulled into a parking lot and saw the defendant’s vehicle backed into a parking space. The police parked their car directly in front of the defendant’s car so it could not leave. This was a seizure and absent any articulable suspicion to support this seizure, the evidence derived as a result of the seizure should have been suppressed. The facts that this was a “high crime area” and it was late at night and it was a dim part of the parking lot were not sufficient to support the detention.

United States v. Keith, 559 F.3d 499 (6th Cir. 2009)

The police were watching a known drug transaction area. The defendant was seen in a car and a suspicious other person came up to the car and talked to him briefly. The car then drove around the side of the building and the other suspicious person was also seen walking behind the building. The police then stopped the defendant in his car. The court held that this information was not sufficient to support a Terry stop of the vehicle.
United States v. Hughes, 517 F.3d 1013 (8th Cir. 2008)
The police received a tip that there were two suspicious people trespassing at a specific location. The police went to the scene, but the two men were across the street, waiting at a bus stop. The police approached them and frisked them, finding ammunition. Because the two men were doing nothing improper when the police arrived (and at most were previously trespassing), stopping them and frisking them was not permissible.

United States v. Tyler, 512 F.3d 405 (7th Cir. 2008)
The police observed the defendant walking on the sidewalk with an open bottle of beer. Believing that this amounted to a violation of state or municipal law, the officers stopped him, asked for his identification and eventually dislodged a crown royal bag from under his belt and discovered drugs. Carrying a bottle of beer is not a crime. Therefore, stopping the defendant was unlawful and everything that flowed from this encounter should have been suppressed. In addition, the encounter did involve a seizure, because the police told him he was violating the law, they took his identification and ran a warrant check while holding his identification papers.

United States v. Reaves, 512 F.3d 123 (4th Cir. 2008)
An anonymous caller’s accurate contemporaneous description of a suspect’s activities is not alone sufficient to establish the reliability of the tipster. Unlike the tipster in Alabama v. White, 496 U.S. 325 (1990), who predicted future behavior, the tipster in this case simply recited what she was currently observing (i.e., the location of the suspect that she claimed was involved in a firearm and drug transaction).

United States v. Grigg, 498 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2007)
The police may not stop a car based on information that the driver has committed a misdemeanor in the past that poses no continuing threat to public safety. While the police may stop a car where the driver is believed to have committed a DUI offense, or a breach of the peace that may be ongoing, in this case, the defendant allegedly committed a “noise violation” in the past. This did not support a vehicle stop. In deciding whether a past misdemeanor supports a stop, the police must assess the threat posed by the defendant to the safety of the community.

United States v. Espinoza, 490 F.3d 41 (1st Cir. 2007)
An ICE agent saw a large van with tinted windows driving near Boston on the Interstate and became suspicious that the van was smuggling illegal aliens. The agent determined that the car was registered to a man whose name he recognized from another investigation. The van had Texas plates. The car stopped near a restaurant and left its engine running. The officer approached the car, asked the driver for identification and ordered the drive to turn off the engine. The First Circuit held that the information known to the agent did not support an investigatory detention. The Court also held that directing the driver to turn off the engine, in this case, amounted to a detention. The First Circuit affirmed the order suppressing all evidence obtained by the detention.

United States v. Martinez, 486 F.3d 855 (5th Cir. 2007)
The police received a tip that the defendant was a witness to a multiple homicide and might be in possession of the weapons. The defendant and his girlfriend were watched leaving their apartment and were stopped in their vehicle. The girlfriend was asked for consent to search the apartment and guns were found in the apartment, though they had nothing to do with a homicide. The Fifth Circuit concluded that there was insufficient information to support the stop of the defendant’s vehicle and all evidence derived from that stop should have been suppressed. See also United States v. Roch, 5 F.3d 894 (5th Cir. 1993). The court also held that the girlfriend’s consent was the product of the illegal stop and therefore the discovery of the guns was the fruit of the illegal detention.

United States v. Wright, 485 F.3d 45 (1ST Cir. 2007)

Four unmarked police cars pulled into an area of Boston that was known for its high crime rate. The defendant saw the cars and started running, clutching his pocket. The First Circuit concluded that there was not reasonable suspicion supporting the Terry stop. One flaw in the lower court’s reasoning was that the district court concluded that the defendant was, indeed, fleeing, based on the fact that he had a gun. But the question is what the police observed – their knowledge of a basis to stop the defendant – not what was in the defendant’s mind. The same flaw infected the observation of the “clutching”: the district court concluded that he was apparently clutching a gun, but that was only apparent once it was known that there was, in fact, a gun in his pocket. The officers’ observation did not establish with the same clarity, the existence of a gun.

United States v. Cohen, 481 F.3d 896 (6th Cir. 2007)

A person called 911, but hung up prior to conveying any message. The police went to the address and saw the defendant’s car near the house. The police stopped his car and after a certain amount of investigation, determined that there was a warrant for his arrest in another state. A search of his car revealed a gun. The Sixth Circuit held that there was not a sufficient basis to stop the defendant.

United States v. Manzo-Jurado, 457 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 2006)

Border patrol agents observed several Hispanic males at a football game in Montana near the Canadian border. They decided to investigate their immigrant status and approached them when they were in their car in the parking lot. One agent drew a firearm and another agent reached in the truck and turned off the engine. The facts known to the agents – the suspects were near the border, they spoke Spanish, they appeared to be a work crew – were not sufficient to create an articulable suspicion that they were illegal. Moreover, the defendant’s conduct when he initially observed the agents was not suspicious (i.e., he did not avoid contact when he was walking in the parking lot). The court wrote, “If we were to accept such conduct as suspicious, it would be ‘difficult to imagine what [he] could have done that might not have appeared suspicious to a Border Patrol agent.’”

United States v. Brown, 448 F.3d 239 (3rd Cir. 2006)

The police received a report that a woman had just been robbed by two African American men, both in their late teens, one about 5’8” and the other about 6’. Shortly thereafter, the police stopped the defendant and his companion coming out of a coffee shop. The two men were 27 and 31 and both had full beards. The two men were ordered to stand against the patrol car and were patted down. The defendant tried to break away at that point. The Third Circuit concludes that prior to the defendant’s attempt to break away, he had already been “seized” for Fourth Amendment purposes and the police did not have an articulable suspicion supporting the stop and the frisk (and the discovery of a gun) was therefore illegal.

United States v. Mosley, 454 F.3d 249 (3rd Cir. 2006)

If the police stop a car without an articulable suspicion, the discovery of contraband in the car must be suppressed, even in a prosecution of a passenger. Though Rakas v. Illinois indicates that the passenger has no expectation of privacy in the car, the passenger’s motion to suppress is predicated on his unlawful detention and the fruit of that unlawful detention, rather than on the expectation of privacy in the automobile.

United States v. Monteiro, 447 F.3d 39 (1st Cir. 2006)

The police received information from a gang member who stated that “his relative” had told him that a car with a certain license plate was involved in a shooting. The police ran the tag and identified the owner. About a week later, the police saw the car and stopped it. Inside the car was the defendant, a passenger in the car. A gun was found in the car. The First Circuit, affirming the decision of the district court, held that the police did not have sufficient information to support the detention of the car in which the defendant was a passenger. The information from the gang member’s relative was essentially an anonymous tip that was entitled to little consideration in light of the absence of corroboration.

United States v. Lopez, 443 F.3d 1280 (10th Cir. 2006)

The police approached the defendant and his colleague who were standing next to their car. There was no articulable suspicion that prompted the police to approach the two individuals. Approaching them, of course, was nothing more than a consensual encounter. However, the officer then requested that the two individuals give him any identification documents that they had (i.e., ID card, or driver’s license). The officer took the ID’s back to his car and determined that one of the two had an outstanding warrant. The Tenth Circuit held that the evidence discovered during an ensuing search should have been suppressed. There was no basis for detaining the two individuals and taking the ID’s amounted to a detention.

United States v. Laughrin, 438 F.3d 1245 (10th Cir. 2006)

Knowledge of a person’s prior criminal involvement is alone insufficient to give rise to the requisite reasonable suspicion supporting a traffic stop. In this case, the officer testified that he had stopped the defendant repeatedly in the past for driving without a license, or on a suspended license. On that basis, when the officer saw the defendant driving, he pulled him over. This was an unlawful stop. The officer’s encounter with the defendant was more than twenty-two weeks previously and this was too long a time to presume that the defendant’s license was still suspended. The information known to the officer, therefore, was too stale to support a stop of the defendant’s vehicle.

United States v. Johnson, 427 F.3d 1053 (7th Cir. 2005)
The police received an anonymous tip that the defendant was a cocaine dealer and that he lived at a particular location. The police went to the defendant’s house and when the defendant’s girlfriend came out, she was asked by the police to knock on the door. She did so and the defendant came to the door. The police talked to him briefly, after which he turned around and started walking away, back down the hall. The police pulled out a gun, pointed it at the ground, and cautioned that “this was a matter of officer safety.” The defendant stopped in his tracks and returned to the door. He then consented to a search. The Seventh Circuit held, (1) this did amount to a detention; (2) there was no articulable suspicion supporting the detention; (3) the consent to search was a fruit of the unlawful detention.

United States v. Jaquez, 421 F.3d 338 (5th Cir. 2005)

The police received a report of gun shots at a location and that a red car was involved. Fifteen minutes later, an officer pulled over the defendant who was driving a red car in the general vicinity of the reported gun shots. The Fifth Circuit held that there was insufficient information to support the stop of the defendant’s car and the subsequent consent search was invalid.

United States v. Hudson, 405 F.3d 425 (6th Cir. 2005)

The police had an arrest warrant for the defendant, but in the past year, had not been able to find him. An anonymous tip alerted the police that the defendant’s girlfriend worked at a particular location and that the defendant would be a passenger in her car when she arrived at work at 3:00 p.m. There was some question whether the tipster really did state that the defendant would be in the car at that particular time. The police confirmed that the girl did work at that location and were aware that the defendant was the girl’s boyfriend. The Sixth Circuit determined that there was insufficient information known to the police to seize the occupants of the car prior to determining that the defendant was an occupant. The decision comprehensively reviews Terry jurisprudence in this type of situation, i.e., anonymous tips of a fugitive’s location. Of course, the absence of an articulable suspicion did not result in doomed the prosecution. Instead, the only consequence was the suppression of evidence discovered as a result of the detention – cocaine found in the defendant’s pocket when he was frisked.

There was insufficient information known to the police to support a Terry stop of the defendant. The police received a tip that a man was outside an apartment with a gun. The police went to the scene and encountered the defendant who appeared to be under the influence of alcohol. The smell of alcohol, according to state law, is not sufficient evidence to arrest a person for public intoxication. When a disturbance erupted nearby, the police directed the defendant to put his hands on the police car, at which point they observed a gun in his back pocket. The police had no basis to direct the defendant to “assume the position.” See Florida v. J.L., 529 U.S. 266 (2000).

United States v. Patterson, 340 F.3d 368 (6th Cir. 2003)

The police received a tip that there were drug transactions occurring at a particular street corner – known to the police as a drug hot-spot. The police went there and when they got out of their cars, several people started walking away. This set of circumstances did not provide an articulable suspicion sufficient to support the stop and frisking of the defendant.

United States v. Uribe-Velasco, 930 F.2d 1029 (2d Cir. 1991)

The police had a suspect under surveillance. He was frequently seen at an apartment building which was also occupied by the defendant. When the police decided to arrest the suspect, they went to the apartment building. When the defendant exited, they approached him (perhaps thinking he was the suspect) and drew their weapons. They asked for, and were given consent, to search his apartment. This was not a proper Terry stop – there was no articulable suspicion justifying the stop of the defendant and his consent was therefore tainted. A remand was necessary, however, to make findings about the exact nature of the encounter between the defendant and the police.

United States v. Roberson, 90 F.3d 75 (3rd Cir. 1996)

An anonymous caller alerted the police to the fact that a heavy-set black male wearing certain clothing was selling drugs at a certain location. The police went to that location and saw the defendant, who met that description and was observed (at a drug “hot spot”) walking over to a parked car and speaking with the occupants. This was not sufficient information to justify a Terry detention of the defendant.

United States v. Sprinkle, 106 F.3d 613 (4th Cir. 1997)

The police were in a high crime area and saw a man known to be involved in narcotics sitting in a car. The defendant was then seen getting into the car and the two men appeared to be huddling over something over the console of the car. The police made a Terry stop and were about to frisk the defendant when he ran. Ultimately, the defendant shot at the police officer. The Terry stop was not based on an articulable suspicion of criminal conduct, but the defendant’s response – shooting at the police officer – was not “evidence” that would be suppressed.

United States v. Wilson, 953 F.2d 116 (4th Cir. 1991)

The defendant was encountered by task force agents at the airport. They asked if they could search him. He allowed them to search his carry-on bag and his person, but when they asked to search his coat which he had over his arm, he refused. They persisted. He refused. He walked away and the officers walked with him. At this point, the defendant was “detained” in so far as he would have been aware that he was not “free to leave” in the sense of being free to “break off the encounter.” The information known to the police did not give them an “articulable suspicion.” Apart from “looking suspicious,” coming from a source city, providing only a check-cashing card for identification, and misrepresenting his itinerary, the only information known to the police was that there was a visible bulge in the coat pocket. A bulge in a coat pocket – not hidden from view – is not suspicious at all. The only suspicious factor was the lie about where the defendant was coming from. However, it is not clear why this would provide suspicion that the defendant was a courier. That is, why would someone coming from New York carrying drugs lie and state that he was actually coming from Boston? This does not support the inference that he was carrying drugs. The motion to suppress should have been granted.

United States v. Caicedo, 85 F.3d 1184 (6th Cir. 1996)

The defendant arrived at the bus station in Cincinnati and a narcotics officer testified that he looked nervous. The officer followed the defendant until he got into the car of another person. The officer approached the car and asked the two if he could talk to them. The defendant (the passenger), got out of the car and – though the evidence was unclear, the appellate court concluded – the officer then frisked him and then asked for consent to search his backpack. The appellate court held that the evidence should have been suppressed. If the frisk occurred before the request for consent, then the defendant was at that time “seized” and there was no basis for this seizure. The ensuing consent, therefore, was invalid and the search of the backpack violated his Fourth Amendment rights.

United States v. Mesa, 62 F.3d 159 (6th Cir. 1995)

The defendant and a passenger in her car were stopped for speeding. The defendant was placed in the back of the patrol car which would not open from the inside. The officer issued the citation, but rather than letting the defendant out, he then questioned the two about their destination. He believed that they acted nervously, and gave slightly inconsistent reasons for traveling. He requested consent to search the car and though a drug dog did not alert the search continued. Eventually, the police discovered cocaine in the back. This was an unlawful search. Once the traffic citation was issued, the police should have immediately released the defendant. This was an unlawful detention after the citation was issued. The Sixth Circuit has suggested, in a later opinion, that the Mesa decision is no longer good law, following the decision in Ohio v. Robinette, 519 U.S. 33 (1996). See United States v. Burton, 334 F.3d 514 (6th Cir. 2003).

United States v. Clardy, 819 F.2d 670 (6th Cir. 1987)

The defendant was arrested at the Atlanta Airport as he was about to enter a taxicab. He met one characteristic of the drug courier profile, having arrived from a source city. He was accompanied by an individual who met a number of additional characteristics of the profile. The Court holds that this investigatory stop was not lawful.

United States v. Green, 111 F.3d 515 (7th Cir. 1997)

The police were looking for a fugitive. They saw a car parked in front of the fugitive’s house and decided to stop the vehicle and see if the fugitive was in the car and whether the occupants knew where the fugitive was. Stopping the vehicle was not supported by an articulable suspicion that the occupants were engaged in any criminal conduct. However, after the car was stopped, the police learned that the passenger was also wanted. He was arrested and drugs were found during a search of him. Prosecuting the passenger was not barred.

United States v. Packer, 15 F.3d 654 (7th Cir. 1994)

The police received information that there was a suspicious car parked at a particular location. The police went to the scene and found that the car had been parked there for about one hour and the windows were fogged up. This did not amount to an articulable suspicion justifying a Terry stop and the police were not authorized to direct the occupants to exit the car.

United States v. Chaidez, 919 F.2d 1193 (7th Cir. 1990)

The Seventh Circuit adopts a sliding scale approach to analyzing seizures which do not amount to an arrest. The defendant in this case was stopped, the police drew their weapons, Miranda warnings were given, and a request to consent to a search of the house was made. The Court holds that “the necessary degree of confidence increases with the degree of intrusion.” If the intrusion lies somewhere between Terry and arrest, that is, neither a “brief investigatory” stop nor a traditional arrest, more must be shown than simply reasonable suspicion. In this case, the police did have sufficient information to justify their conduct.
United States v. Green, 52 F.3d 194 (8th Cir. 1995)

The police approached the defendant as she arrived at an airport because she was single, traveling alone, carrying a duffel bag, but no purse, and was taking “counter-surveillance” measures. She agreed to talk with the police, but appeared nervous. She had difficulty producing identification or her plane ticket. The police then asked for permission to search the duffel bag which she declined to give. The police would not let her leave, stating that a drug dog was being summoned. At this point, the defendant was in custody. Moreover, there was not sufficient information known to the police at that point to justify the stop.

United States v. Sherrill, 27 F.3d 344 (8th Cir. 1994)

The police had a search warrant for the defendant’s residence. The police observed the defendant leave the house, then stopped him, handcuffed him and asked him to “help them execute the search.” This detention was not justified by Michigan v. Summers, 452 U.S. 692 (1981), because the stop occurred at a location remote from the location of the search. However, suppression of evidence was not necessary, because there was probable cause to arrest the defendant.

United States v. O’Neil, 17 F.3d 239 (8th Cir. 1994)

The defendant and his brother arrived at a bus station in Minnesota from a source city, Chicago. The defendant and his brother walked immediately and briskly to the exit and were carrying athletic type bags. The brother had both of the bus tickets; the defendant, when confronted by drug agents, began sweating profusely. This information did not justify the officer’s seizure of the athletic bag. Becoming nervous when confronted by the police is not an unusual reaction. Though there was insufficient information to seize the bag, the defendant immediately revealed that there was cocaine in the bag, therefore, there was probable cause to obtain a search warrant.

United States v. Millan, 912 F.2d 1014 (8th Cir. 1990)

The police stopped a traveler based on the fact that he arrived from San Francisco, was among the first to leave the airplane, he had only carry-on luggage, dressed casually, wore a gold necklace, and had long hair. He had purchased his ticket with cash the day before but was travelling under his own name. The Eighth Circuit holds that this information was not sufficient to justify a seizure. Furthermore, the fact that agents noticed “bulges” in his jacket pockets did not justify the seizure.

United States v. Jefferson, 906 F.2d 346 (8th Cir. 1990)

Without any articulable suspicion, a trooper parked behind the defendant’s rented car, retained the defendant’s identification and rental agreement and then asked the driver to join him in the patrol car. Because there was no articulable suspicion justifying this detention, the subsequently discovered drugs should have been suppressed. The fact that the trooper kept the defendant’s personal documents changed the encounter from a consensual one, to a detention during which the defendant reasonably would not have felt free to leave.

United States v. Crawford, 891 F.2d 680 (8th Cir. 1989)

The defendant was seen leaving the apartment complex of a known drug dealer. The police officers were waiting outside for the arrival of a search warrant. When the police followed the defendant’s vehicle, he made a number of turns to avoid being tailgated. This does not constitute sufficient grounds to stop the defendant.
United States v. Garcia-Camacho, 53 F.3d 244 (9th Cir. 1995)

The border patrol agent’s stop of the defendants’ car nearly 300 miles north of the Mexican border was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The agent testified that the suspicion was based on the fact that the passenger initially did not make eye contact with the agent as the driver passed the agent, who was on the side of the road, but the passenger later looked back with a surprised look. Also, the truck appeared to have a heavy load, as if it were carrying illegal aliens. The agent also noted that the defendants were Hispanic males, the driver was traveling faster than the flow of traffic (though he broke no traffic laws) and the truck did not immediately pull over when the agent started to pursue it. These factors, even cumulatively, did not amount to an articulable suspicion.

United States v. Rodriguez, 976 F.2d 592 (9th Cir. 1992)

The defendant, a Hispanic, drove on the Interstate past where two agents were sitting in their marked cars. The defendant did not acknowledge the agents’ presence and appeared nervous as he drove past. The officers testified that the car appeared to go over bumps “sluggishly” (thus indicating that it was weighted down with something). The court rejected these bases for stopping the vehicle: “In short, the agents in this case saw a Hispanic man cautiously and attentively driving a 16 year old Ford with a worn suspension, who glanced in his rear view mirror while being followed by agents in a marked Border Patrol car. This profile could certainly fit hundreds of thousands of law abiding daily users of the highways of Southern California.” The court concluded, “We are not prepared to approve the wholesale seizure of miscellaneous persons, citizens or non-citizens, who are seen driving any place near the Mexican border – driving with caution and circumspection – in the absence of well-founded suspicion based on particular, individualized, and objectively observable factors which indicate that the person is engaged in criminal activity.”

United States v. Hernandez-Alvarado, 891 F.2d 1414 (9th Cir. 1989)

The following factors did not create a reasonable suspicion justifying the detention of the defendants: The existence of a two-way antenna, the defendant’s residence in a neighborhood known for narcotics activity, indications that the car had been purchased from a dealership associated with drug trafficking, and the large trunk on the car.

United States v. Robert, L., 874 F.2d 701 (9th Cir. 1989)

An investigatory detention cannot be based solely on the defendant’s youthfulness and the size of the trunk of the car he was driving.

United States v. Davis, 94 F.3d 1465 (10th Cir. 1996)

The defendant was known by the police to be a gang member and previously involved in various illegal activities. He was observed in a neighborhood where there had been reports on previous nights of gun fire. There was also a “juice joint” nearby which was known to be a place where liquor was unlawfully sold. When the police observed the defendant, he was ordered to take his hands out of his pockets and stand against a car. This was an illegal detention, because there was no articulable suspicion supporting the detention. Evidence obtained as a result of this detention (the discovery of a gun which he threw into the car) should have been suppressed.

United States v. Alarcon-Gonzalez, 73 F.3d 289 (10th Cir. 1996)

The law enforcement agents (INS) approached the defendant and his colleague, who were roofing a house and saw the colleague pull out what appeared to be a gun from his vehicle. The agents yelled at the colleague, “Freeze.” Immediately thereafter, however, the agents realized... that it was a roofing gun that they saw. Nevertheless, the agents initiated questioning of the defendant. This was an unlawful detention. Once the reason for detaining the defendant was removed (the observation of what appeared to be a gun), any questioning was improper.

United States v. Jones, 44 F.3d 860 (10th Cir. 1995)

In this case, where the defendant was stopped on the highway and questioned, one of the reasons that the officer testified that he had an articulable suspicion that the car was carrying contraband was that the driver did not appear nervous, suggesting that she had prior experience with being stopped. The Tenth Circuit agreed that this was a factor which the officer could consider in assessing whether there was an articulable suspicion justifying further investigation.

United States v. Jones, 998 F.2d 883 (10th Cir. 1993)

The police received a tip from an informant with whom they had had no prior experience. The tip was that two men with a gun were seen knocking on an apartment door. The police stopped the men driving a Mercedes (as described by the informant) and there were two children in the car. There was an inadequate basis for conducting this stop and the plain view discovery of cocaine in the car was the fruit of the unlawful stop. Moreover, the police did not have a reasonable suspicion, at the time of the stop, that the car they were stopping was the same car which was seen leaving the scene of the disturbance.

United States v. Hall, 978 F.2d 616 (10th Cir. 1992)

Based on a tip, the police met the defendant when her train arrived at the station. She was asked for consent to search her luggage which she refused. She had purchased a one-way ticket from Flagstaff to Harrisburg, Pa. She appeared nervous when questioned. On this basis, the officers seized the luggage, but allowed the defendant to leave. This was unlawful. In order to seize the luggage, the police must have the same level of information – reasonable suspicion – as is required to seize the person. United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983). The facts in this case did not amount to reasonable suspicion.

United States v. Millan-Diaz, 975 F.2d 720 (10th Cir. 1992)

The border patrol agent claimed to have stopped defendant’s vehicle because of his suspicion that the defendant was smuggling illegal aliens across the border. After approaching defendant’s vehicle, however, he determined that the defendant was the only occupant of the car. Because the “suspicion” evaporated upon approaching the vehicle, the subsequent detention was not based on an articulable suspicion, and both the search of the car and the discovery of marijuana in the car were tainted by the illegal stop.

United States v. Monsivais, 907 F.2d 987 (10th Cir. 1990)

Border patrol agents lacked a reasonable suspicion to justify the stop of a heavily loaded pickup truck bearing a camper shell and out-of-state license plates. The government failed to show that the stretch of highway upon which the pickup truck had been stopped was a frequently used route to by-pass border patrol agents.

United States v. Tapia, 912 F.2d 1367 (11th Cir. 1990)

The defendant was stopped on Interstate 59 travelling towards Birmingham, Alabama. The officer claimed to have had a reasonable suspicion based on the fact that the vehicle had out-of-state plates, the driver was Mexican, and appeared to be nervous or shaking during the initial confrontation with the trooper. The officer also stated that the vehicle appeared to have few pieces of luggage. This does not constitute “reasonable suspicion” and did not justify the detention of the driver and the subsequent consent form signed by the defendant was invalid.

United States v. Bonds, 829 F.2d 1072 (11th Cir. 1987)

The Eleventh Circuit defines the conditions which must exist to authorize a Terry stop and a frisk. The two standards are not necessarily the same. In order to authorize a frisk, there must be specific facts supporting a reasonable belief by the frisking officer that he is in danger.
This is different than the standard used to determine whether an investigatory stop is permitted.
In this case, the Court upholds both the stop and the frisk of the defendants.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Terry Stop – Prolonged Duration, or Improper Nature, of Seizure)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (HIGHWAY STOPS)

Note: If the question focuses on whether the Terry stop rose to the level of an arrest, see Search and Seizure (Arrest – What Constitutes an Arrest)

Illinois v. Caballes, 125 S.Ct. 834 (2005)
The defendant was stopped for a routine speeding violation. While the car was stopped and the trooper was preparing a warning ticket, another officer walked a drug dog around the car. The dog alerted; the car was searched based on probable cause; and drugs were found. The Supreme Court held that this was permissible. A dog alert is not a “search” and in this case, the time it took to walk the dog around the car did not prolong the stop. Thus, there was no Terry violation and no need for a warrant or an articulable suspicion to authorize the use of the dog.

The Supreme Court held that the police may require a person to identify himself if he is the subject of a lawful Terry stop; and if he fails to do so, he may be charged and convicted of a “refusal to identify” state offense. In this case, the police suspected that the defendant had been involved in a fight and they approached him and asked him to identify himself. He refused. The Court emphasized that requiring the suspect to identify himself was reasonably related to the basis for the initial detention and thus was a permissible extension of the Terry stop.

Maryland v. Wilson, 519 U.S. 408 (1997)
The police may direct a passenger to exit a vehicle where the car has been stopped for a legitimate reason.

Ohio v. Robinette, 519 U.S. 33 (1996)
If a lawful traffic stop has been made and the basis for the traffic stop has been accomplished, the police may then request consent to search the vehicle without announcing to the driver that he is free to leave.

If the police stop a vehicle lawfully and there is a passenger in the vehicle, if the police have a reason to believe the passenger is armed and dangerous, he may be frisked. This is true, even if the passenger is not believed to have committed any crime.

United States v. Bey, 911 F.3d 139 (3rd Cir. 2018)
The police stopped a vehicle and two occupants fled. The police chased one of the fleeing suspects who was wearing a red jacket, had little facial hair and was a light-skinned black male. The police stopped Bey, the defendant in this case, believing that he was one of the fleeing suspects. Bey was wearing a red jacket, but otherwise did not resemble the suspect (he was considerably older, had a full beard and was dark-skinned). The Third Circuit held that it was reasonable to initially detain Bey, but once it was apparent he was not the person they were looking for, there was no reasonable basis – and articulable suspicion – supporting the detention any longer and the resulting search which revealed a gun was improper and the evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Dapolito, 713 F.3d 141 (1st Cir. 2013)

At approximately 2:00 a.m., the police saw the defendant standing in the alcove of a building in downtown Portland, Maine. When questioned, he gave rambling sometimes incoherent answers to questions. When the police called dispatch to determine whether there were any warrants, the response was negative. There was insufficient information to believe that he was engaged in any criminal activity or that he was wanted in any jurisdiction. The encounter, which lasted twenty minutes, and ultimately involved several officers, rose to the level of a detention when he was repeatedly asked to produce identification and to consent to a search, which he refused. The resulting frisk was the product of this illegal detention.

United States v. Digiovanni, 650 F.3d 498 (4th Cir. 2011)

The defendant was pulled over based on a traffic violation. Yet, the police spent the first fifteen minutes of the stop talking about drugs and the defendant’s itinerary and did nothing to pursue the typical traffic violation procedures. The Fourth Circuit held that even though the entire stop, prior to the discovery of drugs, lasted only fifteen minutes, a Terry stop must not only be limited in terms of duration, but also in scope. In short, the police must act reasonably and this includes a component of acting diligently to pursue the legitimate basis of the stop. The detention in this case was not proper. The officer’s claim that he had a reasonable suspicion based on various facts – there were two shirts hanging in the back of the car; there was a hygiene bag in the back seat; the car was clean; the defendant’s hands were trembling while he was being questioned – were rejected as providing any basis for the prolonged stop.

United States v. Zavala, 541 F.3d 562 (5th Cir. 2008)

The police may not flip open and examine a motorist’s cell phone during a Terry stop. A Terry stop permits a brief frisk to ensure officer safety and not an investigation into the contents of a cell phone, including looking for the subscriber number. In a separate holding, the court held that a Terry stop that lasted 90 minutes was too long and was converted into a de facto arrest, for which there was no probable cause.

United States v. Askew, 529 F.3d 1119 (D.C. Cir. 2008) en banc

The police brought a defendant back to the scene of a robbery and unzipped his jacket so the witness could view his clothing under the jacket. Over the course of a forty-five page opinion which represents an encyclopedic review of Terry jurisprudence, the D.C. Circuit, en banc, held that this amounted to a search for Fourth Amendment purposes. The Court suggested that in some circumstances, unzipping a defendant’s jacket may be permissible, but that there was insufficient information known to the police in this case to justify this procedure. The Court relied principally on Minnesota v. Dickerson, 508 U.S. 366 (1993), in holding that a protective “search” or frisk, is limited to what is necessary to achieve the goal of officer safety, not crime investigation.

United States v. Urrieta, 520 F.3d 569 (6th Cir. 2008)
After pulling the defendant over for improper registration and weaving, the trooper determined that the defendant had a Mexican driver’s license which the trooper incorrectly believed did not authorize the defendant to drive in Tennessee. The trooper wrote a ticket for the registration violation, but prolonged the traffic stop based on his erroneous belief that the license was insufficient (and because of his suspicion that the defendant was smuggling drugs). Eventually (twenty-four minutes after the stop commenced), the trooper asked for consent to search the car, which the defendant provided. The Sixth Circuit held that the stop lasted too long, based on the trooper’s erroneous understanding of the law and the consent was tainted by the prolonged detention. The court also rejected the government’s suggestion that the trooper had a reasonable basis for believing that the defendant was smuggling drugs. The “characteristics” upon which the government relied were not sufficient to amount to a reasonable articulable suspicion. Finally, the court held that even if there was reasonable suspicion to believe that the defendant was in the country without proper documents, the trooper lacked the authority to investigate this matter.

United States v. Virden, 488 F.3d 1317 (11th Cir. 2007)

The police stopped the defendant’s car after watching it leave the location where a search was about to occur. Because a drug dog was not available at that location, the police put the defendant in a police car in handcuffs and brought the car to a location two miles away where the dog was located. The Eleventh Circuit held that this exceeded the bounds of a Terry stop and amounted to a seizure requiring probable cause. Because there was no probable cause, the search of the car was unlawful.

United States v. Jenison, 462 F.3d 399 (5th Cir. 2006)

The police pulled the defendant over for speeding and the officer’s suspicion was aroused by varying stories told by the defendant and his passenger about what they were doing and where they worked. Some of the questioning occurred after the warning was issued. The police asked for permission to search the car, which was granted. Prior to starting the search, the police started to frisk the defendant, but he resisted, which prompted the officer to draw his weapon and order the defendant to raise his arms. The defendant was searched and a small gun was found. The Fifth Circuit held that the detention lasted longer than was justified by the information known to the police and that the consent to search was invalid, thereby also invalidating the decision to frisk the defendant.

United States v. Lopez, 443 F.3d 1280 (10th Cir. 2006)

The police approached the defendant and his colleague who were standing next to their car. There was no articulable suspicion that prompted the police to approach the two individuals. Approaching them, of course, was nothing more than a consensual encounter. However, the officer then requested that the two individuals give him any identification documents that they had (i.e., ID card, or driver’s license). The officer took the ID’s back to his car and determined that one of the two had an outstanding warrant. The Tenth Circuit held that the evidence discovered during an ensuing search should have been suppressed. There was no basis for detaining the two individuals and taking the ID’s amounted to a detention. While the police may request a person’s identification without detaining him, once the officer takes the ID with him to another location (i.e., back to his car), this amounts to a detention.
United States v. Edgerton, 438 F.3d 1043 (10th Cir. 2006)

A trooper pulled the defendant’s car over because the tag was not visible. Upon approaching the car, the trooper saw that the temporary tag was in the rear window. This complied with state law requirements. Nevertheless, the trooper asked for the driver’s license and registration and after reviewing it, asked for consent to search the car, which was given. Drugs were then found in the trunk. The Tenth Circuit reversed: once the trooper determined, while walking up to the car that the tag was proper, he should have explained to the defendant the reason for the initial stop and then allowed her to continue on her way without requiring her to produce her license and registration. See also United States v. McSwain, 29 F.3d 558 (10th Cir. 1994).

United States v. Davis, 430 F.3d 345 (6th Cir. 2005)

When a drug dog failed to alert to the defendant’s car, which had been stopped on the highway, the police summoned a second drug dog. This unlawfully prolonged the duration of the stop (initially prompted by a speeding charge).

United States v. Washington, 387 F.3d 1060 (9th Cir. 2004)

The police went to the defendant’s residential hotel room and knocked, with the expectation of gaining the defendant’s consent to search the premises. But the defendant stepped outside the door when the police knocked and closed the door behind him. The police (six of them) repeatedly asked for permission to go in the apartment and reminded the defendant that he could be arrested on an unrelated matter. Eventually, the officers made their way inside and ultimately convinced the defendant to consent to a search. The Ninth Circuit found these Fourth Amendment violations: First the officers exceeded a Terry stop in the hallway; then they violated the defendant’s rights by not allowing the door to remain closed; then they violated his rights by entering the apartment without his consent; and finally, they violated his rights by moving his jacket to find a small amount of methamphetamine. His subsequent consent to search was tainted by all of these previous violations.

United States v. Richardson, 385 F.3d 625 (6th Cir. 2004)

After issuing the driver a warning ticket, the police asked him to “stay where he was” and then approached one of the passengers (the owner of the car) for consent to search. This direction to the driver amounted to a detention – a detention that had no basis in an articulable suspicion – and amounted to an unlawful stop that tainted any subsequent search, even a consensual search. The detention of the driver amounted to a detention of all the car’s occupants.

United States v. Portillo-Aguirre, 311 F.3d 647 (5th Cir. 2002)

After the Border Patrol Agent completed his work of ascertaining bus passengers’ immigration status, he would routinely ask about drugs. The court held that a Border Patrol Agent is free to engage in questions about drugs, as long as the questions do not extend the time it takes to conduct the legitimate immigration status check. Once the immigration inquiry is finished, however, any further questioning amounts to a detention without articulable suspicion.
See also United States v. Dortch, 199 F.3d 193 (5th Cir. 1999). Note that Dortch has been limited in its reach. United States v. Pack, 622 F.3d 383 (5th Cir. 2010).

United States v. Acosta-Colon, 157 F.3d 9 (1st Cir. 1998)

Though the agents had an articulable suspicion justifying the detention of the defendants at the airport after a drug dog alerted to what the agents believed was the luggage of the suspects’ companions, the thirty-minute detention, during which time the defendants were handcuffed and missed their flight went too far and amounted to an arrest which required probable cause.

United States v. Babwah, 972 F.2d 383 (5th Cir. 1992)

The police had an articulable suspicion justifying the stop of defendant’s vehicle. However, after the stop and a consent search, there was no basis for continuing the detention. Nevertheless, the police ordered the defendant to return to a house where a large amount of cash was found. This latter aspect of the “stop” amounted to an arrest which was not supported by probable cause.

United States v. Cagle, 849 F.2d 924 (5th Cir. 1988)

Border patrol agents seized a passenger’s suitcase and prevented it from being loaded on the passenger’s airline flight. This constitutes a full-scale arrest and not just a detention because the passenger’s itinerary was clearly frustrated. The officers failed to use the most diligent, least intrusive investigatory techniques.

United States v. Mesa, 62 F.3d 159 (6th Cir. 1995)

The defendant and a passenger in her car were stopped for speeding. The defendant was placed in the back of the patrol car which would not open from the inside. The officer issued the citation, but rather than letting the defendant out, he then questioned the two about their destination. He believed that they acted nervously, and gave slightly inconsistent reasons for traveling. He requested consent to search the car and though a drug dog did not alert the search continued. Eventually, the police discovered cocaine in the back. This was an unlawful search. Once the traffic citation was issued, the police should have immediately released the defendant. This was an unlawful detention after the citation was issued. The Sixth Circuit has suggested, in a later opinion, that the Mesa decision is no longer good law, following the decision in Ohio v. Robinette, 519 U.S. 33 (1996). See United States v. Burton, 334 F.3d 514 (6th Cir. 2003).

United States v. Obasa, 15 F.3d 603 (6th Cir. 1994)

Law enforcement agents approached a passenger who exited a flight from New York to Cincinnati. It was clear that the passenger was with another passenger, as well, who was the defendant in this case. After questioning the initial passenger, the police had an articulable suspicion that the pair was engaged in credit card fraud, but there was no probable cause to make an arrest, however. When the police looked for the defendant, he had disappeared. He was located in a taxi on the Interstate, leaving the airport. He was stopped, put in a patrol car and brought back to the airport. The Sixth Circuit concludes that the confrontation on the highway amounted to an arrest and, because not based on probable cause, was in violation of the defendant’s Fourth Amendment rights. This is so, even though the defendant had fled the airport and, when initially approached by the police, denied that he had even been at the airport.
United States v. Richardson, 949 F.2d 851 (6th Cir. 1991)

The police approached the defendant who was standing outside a storage unit which the police believed contained contraband. They asked for his consent to search the unit; the defendant refused. He was placed in the back of the patrol car and told to wait there while the officers questioned defendant’s colleague. This amounted to an arrest of the defendant and his subsequent consent to search the storage unit was tainted by this unlawful arrest. In light of the statements of the officers and the circumstances, this was more than a mere Terry stop.

United States v. Ricardo, D.*, 912 F.2d 337 (9th Cir. 1990)

The Ninth Circuit concludes that the detention of the juvenile during field questioning amounted to a de facto arrest. The juvenile was patted down, gripped by the arm, told he was not to run, and directed to the back of one of two patrol cars present at the scene. This conduct transformed the investigatory stop into an arrest.

United States v. Thomas, 863 F.2d 622 (9th Cir. 1988)

A police officer pulled over the defendant on the basis that he apparently matched the description of a counterfeiting suspect. After the officer blocked the defendant’s car, the defendant exited the car and approached the officer. It was immediately apparent that the defendant did not meet the description. Nevertheless, the officer frisked and continued to question the defendant. The continuing detention was unlawful once it was determined that the defendant did not meet the suspect’s description. There was no basis for the police officer to fear for his safety.

United States v. Robertson, 833 F.2d 777 (9th Cir. 1987)

An officer’s detention of a defendant at gunpoint was an arrest, not a Terry stop. The defendant was confronted by seven to ten police officers at the time of this “encounter.” At no time did the officers check the defendant for weapons, indicating that they knew or suspected that she was not armed, and thus this was not a stop and frisk.

United States v. Edwards, 103 F.3d 90 (10th Cir. 1996)

The police were about to execute a search warrant at a house when they observed the defendant, known to be a felon who was in drug rehabilitation, leave the house. His vehicle was pulled over and a brief search revealed nothing. The police then detained him for 45 minutes on the side of the road while the house was searched. Though the initial detention was lawful, the length of the detention exceeded what is permissible for a Terry stop. However, the court concluded that no evidence was obtained as a fruit of this unlawful stop so there was nothing to suppress.

United States v. McSwain, 29 F.3d 558 (10th Cir. 1994)

A trooper stopped the defendant’s vehicle because it was unclear whether his temporary tag had expired. Upon approaching the vehicle, it was immediately apparent to the trooper that the tag had not expired. Nevertheless, the trooper questioned the defendant about his itinerary and requested to see his license and registration. The trooper then asked his dispatcher to run a computer check on the defendant, which revealed a record for drug and gun violations. The trooper returned to the defendant and asked for permission to search the vehicle, which the defendant gave. This was an invalid consent, based on a stop which exceeded the scope of a permissible Terry stop. By the time the trooper asked for the defendant’s identification and registration, he had already dispelled all basis for the stop – the temporary tag’s expiration date.
United States v. Sandoval, 29 F.3d 537 (10th Cir. 1994)

The defendant was stopped for speeding. He produced his license and registration, which was checked and came back normal. After returning the paperwork to the defendant, the defendant asked if “that is it?” to which the officer responded, “No, wait a minute.” The officer decided to ask the defendant some additional questions about his criminal background (he learned during the license check about an arrest for a narcotics violation several years earlier). This questioning amounted to an additional detention, which was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The fact that the defendant had an earlier arrest – and no conviction – for a drug offense, does not justify a Terry stop of any duration. Even though the defendant then gave consent to search the car, this consent occurred after the detention had become unlawful and it was, therefore, not a free and voluntary consent. The evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Melendez-Garcia, 28 F.3d 1046 (10th Cir. 1994)

Though the information known to the police provided them with an articulable suspicion, it did not amount to probable cause. When the officers stopped the defendants in the car, however, the officers had weapons drawn, ordered the defendant to throw the keys out of the window and exit the car with hands visible. The defendants were then handcuffed, separated and placed in seatbelts in separate patrol cars. This exercise of force exceeded that which is permissible under Terry. The officers offered no explanation why this amount of force was needed: there was no evidence that the defendants were armed, dangerous, or otherwise deserving of this degree of intrusiveness. A remand was necessary to determine whether a consent to search represented an exploitation of this illegal arrest.

United States v. Fernandez, 18 F.3d 874 (10th Cir. 1994)

The defendant was stopped on the interstate, because the trooper considere the tinted windows to be in violation of state law and for improper lane travel. The trooper examined the driver’s license and issued a citation. However, rather than allowing the defendant to proceed, the trooper held the identification and questioned the driver and then asked for consent to search the car. The search yielded 121 kilograms of cocaine. The Tenth Circuit concluded that there were insufficient facts to support the detention of the defendant beyond the time necessary to examine the license and issue the citation (i.e., nervousness and “unusual behavior”). The subsequent consent to search the vehicle was tainted by the unlawful detention. Among other factors considered in determining whether the consent was free and voluntary was the trooper’s failure to advise the defendant that he had the right to refuse.

United States v. King, 990 F.2d 1552 (10th Cir. 1993)

The police approached defendant’s car which was blowing its horn in a traffic jam and noticed a loaded gun on the front seat. Having a loaded gun is legal in New Mexico. The police drew their weapons and ordered the occupants of the vehicle to exit the car. One occupant discarded cocaine in the process and cash was found in the car. While the police might have been justified in attempting to separate the occupants from the gun, the conduct of the police in this case amounted to an arrest. Because there was no probable cause, the fruits of this arrest should have been suppressed. The actions of the police also did not qualify under the Cady v. Dombrowski community caretaking function.

United States v. Millan-Diaz, 975 F.2d 720 (10th Cir. 1992)

The border patrol agent claimed to have stopped defendant’s vehicle because of his suspicion that the defendant was smuggling illegal aliens across the border. After approaching defendant’s vehicle, however, he determined that the defendant was the only occupant of the car. Because the “suspicion” evaporated upon approaching the vehicle, the subsequent detention was not based on an articulable suspicion, and both the search of the car and the discovery of marijuana in the car were tainted by the illegal stop.

United States v. Codd, 956 F.2d 1109 (11th Cir. 1992)

Believing that the defendant had participated in her husband’s escape from a federal prison camp, the police detained her at the Houston airport for 2-1/2 hours. This exceeded the scope of a lawful Terry stop and the search of her purse during this time was unlawful. The district court properly suppressed the evidence.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Terry Stop -- What Constitutes a Seizure)

When the police stop a vehicle that has a driver and passenger, the passenger is also “detained” for fourth amendment purposes. Therefore, if there was no basis for the stop, the passenger may contest the admissibility of any fruits of that stop (for which he has standing), such as a statement he made, or evidence seized from his person or personal belongings.

The police may board buses and ask passengers if they would consent to a search of their bags. The question is not whether the passenger would feel free to leave; the question is whether the passenger would feel free to decline the invitation. Compare, INS v. Delgado, 466 U.S. 210 (1984). The court must make a case-by-case determination of whether there was, in fact, a seizure.

United States v. Monsivais, 848 F.3d 353 (5th Cir. 2017)
The police encountered the defendant on the side of the Interstate, apparently walking away from a disabled truck. The defendant acted nervous, gave an inconsistent answer about his destination and initially walked away from the police when they activated their blue lights. None of these factors justified frisking the defendant, which amounted to a seizure.

United States v. Hernandez, 847 F.3d 1257 (10th Cir. 2017)
The police were patrolling in a high crime area and saw the defendant who they thought was suspicious. They pulled along side him and started asking questions; he answered the questions while continuing to walk. At one point the police asked him to stop so they could continue to talk to him. During the ensuing conversation, the defendant provided his name and a false birthdate and the police determined that he had an outstanding warrant. The Tenth Circuit held that requesting the defendant to stop so they could continue to ask him questions was a seizure that was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The appellate court affirmed the district court’s decision that focused on the fact that this occurred at night, there were no other people present and the police never told the defendant that he was free to decline the request to stop. The court suppressed the evidence found during the search that followed his arrest. (Note the result might be different under Utah v. Strieff, based on the attenuation doctrine; but the court held that the government waived this argument by not raising it earlier).

United States v. Castle, 825 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2016)
The police regularly patrolled a certain neighborhood in an unmarked pick-up truck and testified at a hearing that people in the neighborhood came to know the truck, and thus knew the occupants were police officer. The defendant was seen by the officers as they approached in their pickup and he acted in a suspicious manner. The trial court held that because “people in the neighborhood” knew the pickup was occupied by the police, the police had an articulable suspicion that the defendant was engaged in criminal conduct based on his response to the presence of the pickup. The DC Circuit reversed. The notion that “people in the neighborhood” knew the vehicle was not sufficient to establish that the defendant had this knowledge. The fact that the police recognized the defendant as someone who was involved in drug dealing in the past is also not sufficient to authorize a detention. This is nothing more than “rounding up the usual suspects” which is not a basis to detain a person, absent specific facts and circumstances known to the police at the time of the detention that the defendant is engaged in current criminal activity. In addition, the court held that approaching the defendant in an alleyway, touching him and telling him to “hold on a sec” was sufficient to amount to a seizure.

1663

United States v. Smith, 794 F.3d 681 (7th Cir. 2015)

Police officers, riding bicycles, blocked the defendant’s path in an alleyway and asked an accusatory question: this was a seizure, not a consensual encounter. The officer did not exchange any introductory comments, or ask the defendant his name, or engage in any other pleasantries prior to posing the accusatory question. One officer had his hand on his gun as they walked towards him.

United States v. Lowe, 791 F.3d 424 (3rd Cir. 2015)

The police were sent to a location in a high crime area, based on a call that a man had a gun in his waistband. Earlier, there had been a report of shot fired near that location. Several police officers arrived in four marked police cars and immediately ordered the defendant to take his hands out of his pockets. He did not do so, and the officers, at least one of whom had his gun drawn, repeated the demand. The appellate court concluded that the defendant submitted to the show of authority by remaining in place, even though he did not immediately remove his hands from his pockets. The first request constituted a seizure under Terry, and because there was no lawful basis for this seizure – there was not an articulable suspicion that the defendant was engaged, or had engaged, in any criminal conduct – the subsequent frisk was illegal and the gun that was found as a result of the frisk should have been suppressed. The validity of the seizure must be measured at the time of the defendant’s submission to the officer’s commands.

United States v. Brodie, 742 F.3d 1058 (D.C. Cir. 2014)

The police were waiting outside a house that they planned to search pursuant to a search warrant. While awaiting their colleagues, the defendant was observed leaving the house (the police were not targeting that individual; the target was already in custody). The police approached the defendant and directed him to place his hands on the car (which he did). Shortly thereafter, he fled, discarding drugs and guns while on the run. The D.C. Circuit held (1) the defendant was detained; (2) there was no basis for the detention because, pursuant to Bailey v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 1031 (2013), the police may not detain an individual in connection with the execution of a search warrant unless the detention is at the time when, and at the place where, the search is being executed; (3) the detention was not attenuated from the defendant’s flight; and (4) the evidence that the police obtained was the fruit of the unlawful detention.

United States v. Hill, 752 F.3d 1029 (5th Cir. 2014)

The police were patrolling in a high crime area of the city when they observed the defendant’s vehicle backed into a parking space in an apartment complex. The defendant was in the driver’s seat and his girlfriend was in the passenger seat. When the police pulled up next to him the girlfriend exited the vehicle and “briskly” walked away. The police directed the defendant to roll down the window (it did not work, so he opened the door). He was asked for his driver’s license (which he did not have), and was then ordered out of the car and was frisked. A gun was found in his pocket. The Fifth Circuit held that the police detained the defendant at the point that he was ordered to exit the car. At that point, even though the defendant acknowledged that he did not have a driver’s license, there was no basis for detaining the defendant. The fact that these events occurred in a “high crime area” provides no support for detaining the defendant was observed committing no crime, or doing anything suspicious. In fact, the police testified that the entire county was a high crime area (not the apartment complex in particular).

United States v. Freeman, 735 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2013)
Without a reasonable suspicion, the police approached the defendant and touched his arms. He walked away. The officer then grabbed the defendant around his waist and stopped him. This was a seizure and was not permissible. The fact that the defendant walked away from the officer when the officer first approached him did not provide a basis for seizing him.

United States v. Jones, 678 F.3d 293 (4th Cir. 2012)
The police followed the car the defendant was driving into a parking lot and blocked it in. The only basis for this stop was that the car had out-of-state plates and this was a high-crime area. This was not a sufficient basis to stop the car and the officer’s conduct – blocking in the car – was a seizure. The subsequent discovery of a gun was the fruit of this improper seizure.

United States v. Camacho, 661 F.3d 718 (1st Cir. 2011)
The police went to the scene of a street brawl and saw two people walking on the sidewalk. Suspicious that they had been involved in the brawl, the police pulled their car in front of the defendant, stopping him and then frisked the defendant and felt a gun. The defendant pushed the officer’s hand away, after which the defendant was arrested. The First Circuit concluded that the initial encounter was a seizure; there was no lawful basis for the seizure (i.e., there was no articulable suspicion); the frisk was not proper; the discovery of the weapon was not the result of a valid search incident to arrest.

United States v. Beauchamp, 659 F.3d 560 (6th Cir. 2011)
The defendant was walking on the sidewalk in a “high crime area” when the police approached. The defendant was ordered to approach the officer, which he did. The defendant appeared to be nervous. The officer then frisked the defendant to look for weapons. The officer then asked for consent to conduct a search of the defendant’s person and the defendant agreed. The officer found drugs inside the defendant’s boxers. The Sixth Circuit held that this was an seizure, it was not based on an articulable suspicion and the consent was tainted by the illegal detention.

United States v. Villa-Gonzalez, 623 F.3d 526 (8th Cir. 2010)
The defendants were in custody when they were confronted and questioned on the porch outside their trailer. Several law enforcement officers questioned the brothers. They were accused of being drug dealers. Their identification papers were taken from them. This amounted to a seizure of Fourth Amendment purposes and for Miranda purposes.
United States v. Johnson, 620 F.3d 685 (6th Cir. 2010)

The police received a call that there were suspicious people at an apartment complex. The police went to the scene and saw the defendant, carrying a bag, walking calmly from the yard of the complex to a car. The police ordered him to stop; he kept walking. The police ordered him to stop again; he kept walking until he arrived at the car, opened the passenger door, threw the bag in and then stood still at the open door. The Sixth Circuit held that when he finally stopped, he had been seized. Because there was no articulable suspicion to justify the seizure, the resulting frisk and search was unconstitutional and evidence should have been suppressed.

United States v. Williams, 615 F.3d 657 (6th Cir. 2010)

The defendant was standing in a housing project with others when a police officer approached and said he was “again trespassing on [housing authority] property.” During the following interaction, the defendant acknowledged in response to questions that there might be a warrant out for his arrest and he also acknowledged carrying a gun. The Sixth Circuit held that the encounter was a seizure for Fourth Amendment purposes. There were two officers, they approached the defendant an immediately accused him of a crime, and there was no basis that would lead the defendant to believe that he could simply walk away from the officers. There was insufficient information known to the police to support the seizure; the defendant’s statement was the fruit of that detention; the evidence would be suppressed, even though there was an outstanding arrest warrant.

United States v. Fox, 600 F.3d 1253 (10th Cir. 2010)

The defendant’s wife pulled up to her house and was approached by a police officer who was conducting surveillance of the house (in particular, the defendant). The officer entered the wife’s car and directed her to drive across the street to a parking lot. She was questioned and then asked for consent to search her car. Ultimately, she consented to a search of the house. The Tenth Circuit held that the wife was detained; there was no basis for the detention and the consent to search was the product of this detention. The gun found in the house, therefore, should have been suppressed at the defendant’s trial.

Gentry v. Sevier, 597 F.3d 838 (7th Cir. 2010)

The defendant was walking with a wheelbarrow through a neighborhood late at night. The police were called. When the police arrived, they summoned the defendant over to their car and told him to “keep his hands up.” This amounted to a seizure, which was not supported by an articulable suspicion. The officer then patted down the defendant, locating a garage opener. There was no basis for this frisk: there was no reason to believe the defendant was armed or dangerous and he was not subject to a legitimate arrest or detention. Moreover, there was no basis to keep the garage door opener (and thereafter walk down the street seeing if it opened any garage in the neighborhood), because it was not a weapon, or apparent to be contraband. Finally, the search of the wheelbarrow was illegal. Though some items on the top of the pile in the wheelbarrow were subject to plain view, other items below the surface could only be seen when the officer probed beneath the surface. The defendant’s trial counsel was ineffective in failing to move to suppress the fruits of the search.

United States v. Gross, 662 F.3d 393 (6th Cir. 2011)
The same officer that was the subject of the opinion in See, infra, was the officer that made the illegal stop in this case. The officer pulled into a parking lot and blocked the vehicle in which the defendant was a passenger. There was no basis for this stop and the evidence obtained as a result of this illegal detention should have been suppressed.

United States v. See, 574 F.3d 309 (6th Cir. 2009)

The police pulled into a parking lot and saw the defendant’s vehicle backed into a parking space. The police parked their car directly in front of the defendant’s car so it could not leave. This was a seizure and absent any articulable suspicion to support this seizure, the evidence derived as a result of the seizure should have been suppressed.

United States v. Tyler, 512 F.3d 405 (7th Cir. 2008)

The police observed the defendant walking on the sidewalk with an open bottle of beer. Believing that this amounted to a violation of state or municipal law, the officers stopped him, asked for his identification and eventually dislodged a crown royal bag from under his belt and discovered drugs. Carrying a bottle of beer is not a crime. Therefore, stopping the defendant was unlawful and everything that flowed from this encounter should have been suppressed. In addition, the encounter did involve a seizure, because the police told him he was violating the law, they took his identification and ran a warrant check while holding his identification papers.

United States v. Espinoza, 490 F.3d 41 (1st Cir. 2007)

An ICE agent saw a large van with tinted windows driving near Boston on the Interstate and became suspicious that the van was smuggling illegal aliens. The agent determined that the car was registered to a man whose name he recognized from another investigation. The van had Texas plates. The car stopped near a restaurant and left its engine running. The officer approached the car, asked the driver for identification and ordered the driver to turn off the engine. The First Circuit held that the information known to the agent did not support an investigatory detention. The Court also held that directing the driver to turn off the engine, in this case, amounted to a detention. The First Circuit affirmed the order suppressing all evidence obtained by the detention.

United States v. Washington, 490 F.3d 765 (9th Cir. 2007)

The police approached the defendant in his parked car and asked if he would consent to a search of his person and car. The defendant was asked to get out of his car, “assume the position” and then was frisked and his car was searched. The Ninth Circuit held that at the point the defendant was asked for consent to search the car, the encounter had escalated to a “seizure” that required an articulable suspicion. Among the factors considered by the court were, (1) the manner in which the police directed the defendant to stand to be frisked (blocking his path to leave); (2) recent events in the community in which unarmed black citizens were shot by white police officers and a pamphlet sent out by the police instructing people to comply with officer’s directions during traffic stops; (3) the lighting in the area; (4) the fact that there were two officers and the defendant was alone; (5) the failure of the police to advise the defendant that he was free to decline the invitation to consent to a search of his vehicle.

United States v. Brown, 448 F.3d 239 (3rd Cir. 2006)

1667
The police received a report that a woman had just been robbed by two African American men, both in their late teens, one about 5'8” and the other about 6’. Shortly thereafter, the police stopped the defendant and his companion coming out of a coffee shop. The two men were 27 and 31 and both had full beards. The two men were ordered to stand against the patrol car and were patted down. The defendant tried to break away at that point. The Third Circuit concludes that prior to the defendant’s attempt to break away, he had already been “seized” for Fourth Amendment purposes and the police did not have an articulable suspicion supporting the stop and the frisk (and the discovery of a gun) was therefore illegal.

United States v. Lopez, 443 F.3d 1280 (10th Cir. 2006)

The police approached the defendant and his colleague who were standing next to their car. There was no articulable suspicion that prompted the police to approach the two individuals. Approaching them, of course, was nothing more than a consensual encounter. However, the officer then requested that the two individuals give him any identification documents that they had (i.e., ID card, or driver’s license). The officer took the ID’s back to his car and determined that one of the two had an outstanding warrant. The Tenth Circuit held that the evidence discovered during an ensuing search should have been suppressed. There was no basis for detaining the two individuals and taking the ID’s amounted to a detention. While the police may request a person’s identification without detaining him, once the officer takes the ID with him to another location (i.e., back to his car), this amounts to a detention.

United States v. Johnson, 427 F.3d 1053 (7th Cir. 2005)

The police received an anonymous tip that the defendant was a cocaine dealer and that he lived at a particular location. The police went to the defendant’s house and when the defendant’s girlfriend came out, she was asked by the police to knock on the door. She did so and the defendant came to the door. The police talked to him briefly, after which he turned around and started walking away, back down the hall. The police pulled out a gun, pointed it at the ground, and cautioned that “this was a matter of officer safety.” The defendant stopped in his tracks and returned to the door. He then consented to a search. The Seventh Circuit held, (1) this did amount to a detention; (2) there was no articulable suspicion supporting the detention; (3) the consent to search was a fruit of the unlawful detention.

United States v. Chan-Jimenez, 125 F.3d 1324 (9th Cir. 1997)

An officer observed the defendant's pickup truck and was suspicious, though there was no motor vehicle offense observed, or anything particular about the pickup that the officer could identify as being suspicious. The pickup pulled over to the side of the road and the driver raised its hood. The officer pulled in behind and asked the driver for his license and registration. Then, without returning the papers (and without having ever asked if the defendant was having trouble with the vehicle), the officer, hand on his weapon, asked if he could look in the vehicle. The driver consented. This was an unlawful detention. Withholding the papers in this situation prevented the defendant from freely refusing consent and the consent that was given, therefore, was ineffective.

United States v. Richardson, 385 F.3d 625 (6th Cir. 2004)
After issuing the driver a warning ticket, the police asked him to “stay where he was” and then approached one of the passengers (the owner of the car) for consent to search. This direction to the driver amounted to a detention – a detention that had no basis in an articulable suspicion – and amounted to an unlawful stop that tainted any subsequent search, even a consensual search. The detention of the driver amounted to a detention of all the car’s occupants.

United States v. Montilla, 928 F.2d 583 (2d Cir. 1991)

The Second Circuit concludes that in reviewing a trial court’s decision about whether a seizure occurred, the appellate court exercises de novo review. The issue poses a legal question, given a certain set of facts.

The defendant was encountered by task force agents at the airport. They asked if they could search him. He allowed them to search his carry-on bag and his person, but when they asked to search his coat which he had over his arm, he refused. They persisted. He refused. He walked away and the officers walked with him. At this point, the defendant was “detained” in so far as he would have been aware that he was not “free to leave” in the sense of being free to “break off the encounter.” The information known to the police did not give them an “articulable suspicion.” Apart from “looking suspicious,” coming from a source city, providing only a check-cashing card for identification, and misrepresenting his itinerary, the only information known to the police was that there was a visible bulge in the coat pocket. A bulge in a coat pocket – not hidden from view – is not suspicious at all. The only suspicious factor was the lie about where the defendant was coming from. However, it is not clear why this would provide suspicion that the defendant was a courier. That is, why would someone coming from New York carrying drugs lie and state that he was actually coming from Boston? This does not support the inference that he was carrying drugs. The motion to suppress should have been granted.

United States v. Gonzales, 842 F.2d 748 (5th Cir. 1988)

A federal agent informed an air traveler that he was “working narcotics” and requested permission to search his carry-on luggage. The Court holds that this constitutes a “seizure” requiring reasonable suspicion under Terry. The Fifth Circuit later held that the Gonzales decision set forth the incorrect burden of proof to establish consent, but did not alter the holding regarding what constitutes a seizure. United States v. Hurtado, 905 F.2d 74 (5th Cir. 1990).

United States v. Caicedo, 85 F.3d 1184 (6th Cir. 1996)

The defendant arrived at the bus station in Cincinnati and a narcotics officer testified that he looked nervous. The officer followed the defendant until he got into the car of another person. The officer approached the car and asked the two if he could talk to them. The defendant (the passenger) got out of the car and – though the evidence was unclear, the appellate court concluded – the officer then frisked him and then asked for consent to search his backpack. The appellate court held that the evidence should have been suppressed. If the frisk occurred before the request for consent, then the defendant was at that time “seized” and there was no basis for this seizure. The ensuing consent, therefore, was invalid and the search of the backpack violated his Fourth Amendment rights.
United States v. Jerez, 108 F.3d 684 (7th Cir. 1997)

The police decided to investigate the occupants of a hotel room in Milwaukee on the basis that the car being driven by them had out-of-state plates (Florida plates) and the car was a two-door vehicle. They also learned that the driver had previously been arrested on narcotics charges. At about 11:00 p.m., the officers knocked on the door of the room for several minutes and hearing no reply, then went outside and started knocking on the window. After several minutes, the defendant opened the door and eventually consented to a search of the room. The Seventh Circuit concluded that the knocking on the door and window late at night amounted to a seizure that had no valid basis. The consent was tainted by this unlawful detention.

United States v. Jefferson, 906 F.2d 346 (8th Cir. 1990)

Without any articulable suspicion, a trooper parked behind the defendant’s rented car, retained the defendant’s identification and rental agreement and then asked the driver to join him in the patrol car. Because there was no articulable suspicion justifying this detention, the subsequently discovered drugs should have been suppressed. The fact that the trooper kept the defendant’s personal documents changed the encounter from a consensual one, to a detention during which the defendant reasonably would not have felt free to leave.

United States v. Chan-Jimenez, 125 F.3d 1324 (9th Cir. 1997)

The police pulled behind the defendant’s vehicle which was disabled on the side of the road. The officer obtained the defendant’s license and registration and found everything in order. Without returning the identification documents back to the defendant, however (and while keeping his hand on his holstered weapon), the officer then asked for consent to search the vehicle. Retaining the documents amounted to a seizure, which was not supported by an articulable suspicion. A subsequent consent to search was not valid: the defendant was not told that he could refuse consent, he was not Mirandized and he was being unlawfully detained.

United States v. Alarcon-Gonzalez, 73 F.3d 289 (10th Cir. 1996)

The law enforcement agents (INS) approached the defendant and his colleague and yelled, “freeze.” This “order” amounted to a seizure for Fourth Amendment purposes and the ensuing questioning was the product of this detention.

United States v. Little, 60 F.3d 708 (10th Cir. 1995)

A train passenger was seized for Terry purposes when an agent questioned her in her roomette and asked incriminating questions in a manner which indicated that she was not free to leave. The agent also failed to advise the defendant that she was free to decline answering the questions.

United States v. Lambert, 46 F.3d 1064 (10th Cir. 1995)

The defendant purchased a plane ticket from Los Angeles to Wichita, Kansas with cash. When he arrived in Kansas, DEA agents approached him and asked if they could speak with him. He provided his driver’s license which they retained during further questioning. The retention of his driver’s license constituted a seizure, which, in this case, was not supported by any articulable suspicion.

United States v. Hall, 978 F.2d 616 (10th Cir. 1992)

Based on a tip, the police met the defendant when her train arrived at the station. She was asked for consent to search her luggage which she refused. She had purchased a one-way ticket from Flagstaff to Harrisburg, Pa. She appeared nervous when questioned. On this basis, the officers seized the luggage, but allowed the defendant to leave. This was unlawful. In order to seize the luggage, the police must have the same level of information – reasonable suspicion – as is required to seize the person. United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983). The facts in this case did not amount to reasonable suspicion.

United States v. Wood, 981 F.2d 536 (D.C.Cir. 1992)

The police ordered the defendant to “halt right there . . . stop.” The defendant complied and dropped his gun. This amounted to a seizure under the standard of California v. Hodari D., 499 U.S. 621 (1991), because there was a show of authority and an act of submission.

United States v. Jordan, 951 F.2d 1278 (D.C. Cir. 1991)

The record did not support the district court’s determination that, at the time the defendant was asked for consent to search his bags, he was not being detained. A remand was necessary, however, to augment the record. Of prime importance is the question were the police in possession of the defendant’s identification when they asked for his consent. The test is not whether the defendant himself felt free to leave, but whether the officer’s words and actions would have conveyed that to a reasonable person. See California v. Hodari D., 499 U.S. 621 (1991).
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Unreasonable Searches)

The Fourth Amendment is violated if a defendant who refuses to take a blood test after having been arrested for DUI, is prosecuted for the refusal. But it is not a Fourth Amendment violation if the police demand that the defendant take a breath test. A blood test, unlike a breath test, is too intrusive to be subject to an implied consent provision. Compare _Maryland v. King_.

_United States v. Booker_, 728 F.3d 535 (6th Cir. 2013)

The defendant was arrested on charges that he possessed marijuana. The police became suspicious that he was hiding drugs in his rectum and brought him to a hospital. There, a doctor administered drugs that paralyzed the defendant for a few minutes, during which time a rectal examination was conducted that yielded crack cocaine. The Sixth Circuit held that this search shocked the conscience, just as the search in _Rochin v. California_ 342 U.S. 165 (1942) and _Winston v. Lee_, 470 U.S. 753 (1985) did, and held that the evidence should have been suppressed. The doctor was acting as an agent of the police (he did not obtain consent to perform the medical procedure and did not give the defendant the option of simply using the toilet).
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(Waiver of Motion to Suppress)

United States v. Salahuddin, 509 F.3d 858 (7th Cir. 2007)

After a negotiated plea was aborted because of a misunderstanding by both parties about the possible sentencing consequences, the case was set down for trial in three months and defense counsel promptly filed a Motion to Suppress. The trial court denied the motion, concluding that it was filed too late. The Seventh Circuit reversed, holding that in this situation, it was an abuse of discretion not to consider the motion. It would not cause delay and the cause of the tardy filing was not attributable to any laziness, or misconduct on the part of any of the lawyers.

United States v. Gregg, 463 F.3d 160 (2d Cir. 2006)

If a defendant is charged in state and federal court with a criminal offense and enters a guilty plea in state court, this does not waive a fourth amendment challenge in federal court that focuses on the same arrest. The fact that the guilty plea in state court would operate as a waiver of any Fourth Amendment claim in state court does not deprive the defendant of the right to litigate the lawfulness of the stop and search in federal court.
SEARCH AND SEIZURE
(What Constitutes a Search)

SEE ALSO: SEARCH AND SEIZURE (Seizures)

The Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the D.C. Circuit in United States v. Maynard, though on somewhat different grounds. In the majority decision, the Court held that placing a GPS device on a car for the purpose of acquiring information constitutes a search for fourth amendment purposes. The Court held that placing the device on the car was a form of “trespass” and under traditional and historical Fourth Amendment jurisprudence, a trespass qualifies as a search if the trespass is conducted for the purpose of obtaining information. In a concurring opinion, which also garnered five votes, Justice Alito questioned the trespass theory, but held that the continuous monitoring of the defendant’s car for 28 days amounted to a search.

The police, based on an unverified tip, brought a drug-sniffing dog up the sidewalk to the front door of the defendant’s house. The dog alerted and the police then obtained a search warrant. The Supreme Court held that bringing the dog up to the front door was a search because it amounted to a trespass onto the defendant’s property for the purpose of conducting a search. The Court held that the police entered the curtilage of the home and, unlike open fields, this is an area of the home that must remain free from unwarranted intrusions by the police that are conducted for the purpose of searching for evidence.

Illinois v. Caballes, 125 S.Ct. 834 (2005)

The defendant was stopped for a routine speeding violation. While the car was stopped and the trooper was preparing a warning ticket, another officer walked a drug dog around the car. The dog alerted; the car was searched based on probable cause; drugs were found. The Supreme Court held that this was permissible. A dog alert is not a “search” and in this case, the time it took to walk the dog around the car did not prolong the stop. Thus, there was no Terry violation and no need for a warrant or an articulable suspicion to authorize the use of the dog.

Officers conducted a search when they attached a device to a package taken inside a home that signaled when the package was opened.

Kyllo v. United States, 533 U.S. 27 (2001)

The Supreme Court held that law enforcement’s use of a sophisticated heat detecting device that could gather information regarding the interior of a home that could not otherwise have been obtained without a physical intrusion into the constitutionally protected area did constitute a search. Justice Scalia reasoned that the occupant of the house has a reasonable expectation of privacy regarding the interior of his home. This expectation cannot be defied or diminished by law enforcement’s use of sophisticated technology. The Court was not persuaded by the government’s argument that the heat that was detected was actually outside the house; or by the argument that no “intimate” details about the interior of the house were learned through the thermal imaging device.

The defendant was a passenger on a bus and placed his duffel bag in an overhead rack. A law enforcement officer entered the bus and “physically manipulated” and squeezed the duffel bag. The Supreme Court held that feeling the bag in this manner constituted a search. The Court reasoned that just as a person has a right not to be frisked by police absent an articulable suspicion, a person has a right to expect that his belongings will not be frisked. The Court also acknowledged that other passengers could touch and feel the duffel bag and shove it aside when they placed their luggage in the same overhead rack, and to that extent, the police were not “touching” anything that was not otherwise subject to being touched by the public at large. The Court held, however, that a passenger has a reasonable expectation that other passengers — and hence the police — will not “feel the bag in an exploratory manner.” This is a reasonable expectation that was defied by the conduct of the police.

United States v. Bain, 874 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2017)

The defendant was detained when he exited a multi-family building. A search of his pockets yielded a key. The police used the key in the locks of the various front doors in the multi-family building to determine which unit the defendant lived in. Testing the key in different locks was a search and using the information that was obtained (which unit the defendant lived in) to later acquire a search warrant tainted the search warrant.

United States v. Lundin, 817 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2016)

Acting on the basis of a BOLO, but without an arrest warrant, the police went to the defendant’s home at 4:00 a.m. and started knocking on the door. They heard a crashing noise near the rear of the home and ran around back and stopped the defendant who was in the backyard. They then looked inside the house and found two handguns. The Ninth Circuit ordered that the evidence must be suppressed: (1) the government could not rely on the exigent circumstances exception, because the police were not allowed to be where they were located when the exigent circumstances arose (i.e., they heard the crashing noise); (2) while the police may walk up to the front door of a house and engage in a “knock-and-talk,” that exception to the rule that bars police from entering the curtilage of the home does not apply at 4:00 a.m. when nobody would expect visitors to appear and knock on the door; (3) in addition, walking up to the front door to make a warrantless arrest is not a permissible purpose and Jardines provides that the police may not enter the curtilage of the home for investigative purposes; (4) the security sweep of the house was not justified, because the defendant was already handcuffed and any further security measures in the house were not necessary; (5) the inevitable discovery doctrine did not apply, because the officers were not in the process of obtaining a search warrant when the illegal searches occurred.

United States v. Whitaker, --- F.3d --- (7th Cir. 2016)

The Seventh Circuit extends Jardines to the hallway of an apartment building. The police brought a dog to the apartment complex and walked the dog down a hallway. When the dog alerted to a particular apartment, the police obtained a warrant for that room. The court held that the initial use of the dog was a “search” under Jardines that needed a warrant.

United States v. Burston, 806 F.3d 1123 (8th Cir. 2015)

The police brought a dog to the defendant’s house and while the police remained outside the curtilage, allowed the dog to walk up to the house and sniff at the windows. This violated the rule announced in Jardines.

In a decision sure to be appealed, the District Court concludes that the NSA telephone data collection program probably violates the Fourth Amendment. The District Court held that the third-party rule announced in Smith v. Maryland, 442 U.S. 735 (1979), is obsolete in this new technological age where so much data about people is included in records maintained by service providers. The D.C. Circuit reversed in August, 2015, on the grounds that the plaintiff failed to establish standing. 800 F.3d 559 (D.C. Cir. 2015).

United States v. Davis, 690 F.3d 226 (4th Cir. 2012)

The police seized the defendant’s clothing from a hospital room and this was justified by the plain view exception. This seizure occurred after the defendant was victimized in a separate incident. After his clothes were seized the police extracted DNA from the clothing and tested it.
That DNA was entered into a database. Years later, a carjacking occurred that was the subject of this prosecution. The DNA recovered from that crime matched the defendant’s DNA. The Fourth Circuit held that the earlier DNA extraction was a search. The court also held that the search was not “reasonable.” However, the court ultimately concluded that law enforcement acted in good faith and therefore there exclusionary rule would not apply.

United States v. Sharp, 689 F.3d 616 (6th Cir. 2012)

During a canine walk-around, the dog jumped into the car and alerted. The Sixth Circuit held that this “entry” into the car did not amount to a search that invalidated the subsequent search that was based on the alert.

United States v. Maynard, 615 F.3d 544 (D.C. Cir. 2010)

The long-term use of a GPS device to track the movement of a suspect’s car constitutes a search that requires a search warrant. The GPS device in this case tracked the defendant’s car’s movement 24 hours per day for 28 days. This distinguishes the extent of the invasion of the expectation of privacy in United States v. Knotts. The court also relied on the Kyllo decision which held that a heat-seeking device was subject to the warrant requirement. Finally, the court cited such cases as Georgia v. Randolph, for the proposition that in deciding what is “reasonable” the court must consider the community standards and “societal understandings.”
This is the decision that the Supreme Court, in United States v. Jones, discussed above, affirmed.

United States v. Hardin, 539 F.3d 404 (6th Cir. 2008)

The police wanted to determine if a suspect was located in a particular apartment. They asked a maintenance man to go to the apartment and inform the occupants that he needed to enter to fix a plumbing problem. He did not obtain the occupants’ consent – he simply entered. He then left and told the police that the suspect was there. The Sixth Circuit held that this was not valid consent. First, there was, as a matter of fact, no consent given. Second, the use of a ruse, such as this, is not appropriate, because there was no need to use a ruse to avoid violence or danger. This is not a case in which the police already had probable cause to enter the house and used the ruse for safety purposes. Moreover, the apartment manager was acting as an agent of the police, so it triggered the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Askew, 529 F.3d 1119 (D.C. Cir. 2008) en banc

The police brought a defendant back to the scene of a robbery and unzipped his jacket so the witness could view his clothing under the jacket. The D.C. Circuit, en banc, held that this amounted to a search for Fourth Amendment purposes. The Court suggested that in some circumstances, unzipping a defendant’s jacket may be permissible in this situation, but that there was insufficient information known to the police in this case to justify this procedure.

The defendant was arrested in his car for speeding and driving with a suspended license. The officer decided not to impound the car and pulled it into a parking lot. He noticed a mobile phone on the floor and opened a console between the bucket seats for the purpose of hiding the phone in there. In the console, he discovered a gun. This amounted to a search and was unlawful. The fact that the officer was not looking for anything did not mean that it was not a “search.” The focus is on whether the actions of the government violate a subjective expectation of privacy that society recognizes as reasonable, not the state of mind of the officer.

United States v. Conner, 127 F.3d 663 (8th Cir. 1997)

The police received a tip that two burglars were at a motel. Six officers went to the motel and went to the room in front of which the burglars’ car was parked. The police knocked on the door and yelled, “Open up.” When one of the defendants opened the door, the police observed (through the open door) various coins (they knew a coin collection had been stolen in the burglary). The officers pulled their weapons and arrested both defendants. They then obtained a search warrant on the basis of what they observed in the room. The trial court correctly granted a motion to suppress. Though the police did not enter the room in order to see the coins, when they ordered the occupants to open the door, and thereby gained the ability to see in the room, this amounted to a search. Demanding that the occupants open the door did not amount to a consent search and there were no exigent circumstances necessitating the immediate entry into the room. The search pursuant to the search warrant was not salvaged by Leon, because the information contained in the application (the observations that were gained through the illegal entry), negated the existence of good faith. Finally, the officers would not have inevitably discovered the evidence, because absent the illegal entry, no other investigatory effort was underway to obtain a search warrant for the motel room.

United States v. Nicholson, 144 F.3d 632 (10th Cir. 1998)

A police officer “felt” the outside of the defendant’s carry-on and checked luggage on a bus in such a way that he was able to determine that the bags contained some tightly-wrapped bundles. While the touching of a bag’s exterior is not a search, in this case, the officer acknowledged that he “manipulated” the bags; this constituted a search. After having his suspicions aroused, the officer asked the bus passengers to whom the bag belonged. Nobody answered. Because of the initial illegal search, this did not amount to an abandonment of the property.

United States v. Doe, 61 F.3d 107 (1st Cir. 1995)

An airport security officer noticed a dense object in the defendant’s carry-on luggage. He pulled it out of the bag (which was legal) and handed it to a DEA agent. The agent then punctured the bag to field test the contents. This was an illegal search which required a warrant. Exigent circumstances and probable cause justify the seizure of a bag such as this, but does not justify opening the bag or removing the contents.

United States v. Knoll, 16 F.3d 1313 (2d Cir. 1994)

A private citizen burglarized an attorney’s office in order to find incriminating information to supply to the government. He removed boxes from the office and then brought some documents to the AUSA. The AUSA was not impressed and the burglar went back to the boxes and retrieved more documents. This further search of the boxes amounted to a search. It is not relevant that the boxes had already been removed from the office without government involvement. If the boxes had not yet been opened, then the opening of the boxes by the burglar may have been with government approval which would invoke the Fourth Amendment.

United States v. Pierre, 932 F.2d 377 (5th Cir. 1991)

An officer poked his head inside the window of the defendant’s car. This was a search according to the panel opinion, and because of the absence of any articulable suspicion, the ensuing consent was unlawful. The en banc court reversed, 958 F.2d 1304 (5th Cir. 1992): Even though sticking his head in the window may have amounted to a search, it was “reasonable.” The border patrol agent had the right to question the occupant of the rear of the car and to make eye contact with him, which required him to stick his head in the window.

United States v. Cuevas-Sanchez, 821 F.2d 248 (5th Cir. 1987)

The police placed a video camera on top of a light pole allowing the police to record all activities in the defendant’s backyard. Portions of the backyard were observable from the street; however, there was a ten-foot fence around the back yard. The Fifth Circuit holds that this is an unconstitutional search.

United States v. Concepcion, 942 F.2d 1170 (7th Cir. 1991)

The police conducted a search by placing a key into a keyhole in an effort to determine if the defendant resided at that location. The key had been seized from the defendant. Though the act of placing the key into the keyhole was a search, no warrant was required.

United States v. $277,000.00, 941 F.2d 898 (9th Cir. 1991)

In New York v. Class, 475 U.S. 106 (1986), the Supreme Court held that a police officer who had lawfully stopped a vehicle for a motor vehicle violation could move a piece of paper from the dashboard which was covering the VIN (in the process of moving the paper, the officer found a gun under the seat). The Court held that although this was a search, it was minimally intrusive and constitutionally permissible. Here, the defendant’s car was parked in his backyard. The police noted that the vehicle had a Mexican license plate. The police could not see the VIN because the car had an opaque car cover. The police removed the car cover and discovered that there were no VIN numbers. The cars were then impounded and a search of the vehicles unearthed the defendant currency. The Ninth Circuit holds that Class does not control. These vehicles were not on the highway, there were no motor vehicle infractions and the removal of the opaque car covers was a search.

United States v. Taketa, 923 F.2d 665 (9th Cir. 1991)

Federal agents entered the private office of a state law enforcement agent to determine whether he was engaged in illegal wiretapping. This was a reasonable search. However, after determining that the officer was engaged in misconduct, the agents then set up video surveillance equipment in the office. This was an illegal search. Once the investigation changed from a reasonable inquiry into work-related misconduct into a search for criminal evidence, a warrant was required.

United States v. Winsor, 846 F.2d 1569 (9th Cir. 1988)

Police officers who knew that a bank robbery suspect had entered a small residential hotel violated the defendant’s Fourth Amendment rights by knocking on the door of a specific room (a room they did not know he was in), requiring him to open the door and then submit to a search. The Ninth Circuit holds that the required opening of the hotel door represented a “search.” The Court then held that such a search could only be predicated on probable cause and the police did not have probable cause to believe that the suspect was in that particular room.

United States v. Cusumano, 67 F.3d 1497 (10th Cir. 1995)

The use of a thermal imager does amount to a search and, therefore, the government must obtain a search warrant prior to scanning a home with such a device. On re-hearing en banc, the court vacated this decision and did not reach the issue of whether an imager amounted to a search, concluding, instead, that there was sufficient probable cause to search the premises even without the thermal imager evidence. 83 F.3d 1247 (10th Cir. 1996).

The Supreme Court affirms the basic rule of Dirks that holds that providing information to a family member or friend constitutes illegal insider trading, because the jury may infer that the tipper personally benefited from making a gift of confidential information to a trading relative.

The “misappropriate theory” of securities fraud involves a corporate “outsider” who violates Rule 10b-5 by misappropriating confidential information for securities trading purposes, in breach of a fiduciary duty owed to the source of the information, rather than to the persons with whom he trades. In this case, the Court holds that this conduct amounts to a criminal violation of the securities laws.

United States v. Litvak, 808 F.3d 160 (2d Cir. 2015)

Litvak was a securities broker who worked for Jefferies & Company and was involved in selling residential mortgage backed securities (“RMBS”). He was charged with fraud in connection with his sales of RMBS’s. There were three categories of misrepresentations: (1) He lied about the cost at which Jefferies acquired certain RMBS in his effort to convince a purchaser to pay more for the same RMBS’s; (2) He lied when he said that he was negotiating for the purchase of certain RMBS’s at a certain price in his efforts to re-sell the RMBS’s, when, in fact, Jefferies already owned the RMBS’s at a lower price than the price he was about to pay to purchase the RMBS’s; (3) In the process of purchasing RMBS’s, he lied about the price at which he had negotiated to re-sell the RMBS’s (falsely saying that the price was less than it actually was) and thereby induced the seller to sell the RMBS’s to him at a cheaper price to enable Jefferies to make a profit. On the basis of these representations, Litvak was convicted of securities fraud and also making a false statement to the U.S. Treasury which was overseeing certain RMBS sales in connection with TARP. The Second Circuit reversed the false statement count, based on the failure to prove that Litvak’s false statements were material. Though the U.S. Treasury was aware and monitored these types of sales, the Treasury made no “decision” that was affected by the price of the sales. The Second Circuit held, however, that the materiality of the false statements to counter-parties was a jury question that could not be decided as a matter of law for purposes of the securities fraud convictions under Rule 10b-5. Litvak argued that the “price” of the RBMS’s to Jefferies was not what was important to the counter-parties; what mattered was the value. The Second Circuit disagreed, holding that the jury was the proper fact-finder on the question of materiality. However, the securities fraud convictions were reversed, because the district court improperly excluded expert testimony offered by Litvak on the topic of materiality. The expert was prepared to testify that a reasonable counter-party would not rely on representations made by Litvak and that they would normally make their own determination of value, rather than relying on Litvak’s representation about Jefferies’ price in purchasing (or the intended sales price of) the RMBS’s. This was the proper subject of expert testimony. Finally, the Second Circuit held that the trial court erred in excluding evidence offered by Litvak that his supervisors permitted these types of sales practices by other brokers, which, according to Litvak, demonstrated his good faith and his lack of intent to defraud. The evidence was relevant to show that Litvak held an honest belief that he was not engaged in improper or illegal conduct.

1680

United States v. Newman, 773 F.3d 438 (2d Cir. 2014)

The Second Circuit announced a new standard for insider trading cases, holding that in order to support an insider trading conviction under Section 10(b) of the 1934 Act (15 U.S.C. §78j(b)), the government must prove that the tippee knew that an insider disclosed confidential information and that he did so in exchange for a personal benefit. The decision in Newman did not survive the United States Supreme Court decision in Salman v. United States, --- S. Ct. --- (2016), as noted above.

United States v. McKye, 734 F.3d 1104 (10th Cir. 2013)

Whether a particular transaction involves a “security” is a mixed question of fact and law that, pursuant to Gaudin, must be submitted to the jury to be decided under the reasonable doubt standard. In this case the judge instructed the jury that a “note” constitutes a security. This was reversible error. Not all notes are securities, so the instruction erroneously explained the law and removed from the jury’s consideration whether the notes in this case were securities.

United States v. Ferguson, 676 F.3d 260 (2d Cir. 2011)

The defendants were charged with securities fraud. In order to prove the materiality of the fraud, the government introduced evidence of charts that showed the fall in stock price on certain days when the fraud was revealed to the investing public. However, there were a number of other scandals and financial problems facing the company and no effort was made to prove what portion of the stock price decline was attributable to the defendants’ conduct. Admitting the charts was reversible error. The court noted that the company involved, AIG, was known to the public and it was possible that the jury would infer that the economic downturn in the country was caused by the defendant’s conduct.

United States v. Behrens, 644 F.3d 754 (8th Cir. 2011)

The provision in the securities law (§ 78ff(a)) that provides that a sentence of imprisonment may not be imposed if the defendant can show that he did not know about the regulation he was found to have violated, applies to any securities fraud violation, not just technical securities violations. Thus, a defendant who entered a guilty plea to a violation of § 78j(b) may attempt to prove at sentencing that he was not aware of the regulation he violated.

United States v. Goyal, 629 F.3d 912 (9th Cir. 2010)

The defendant was charged with securities fraud in connection with the method by which he accounted for certain sales. According to the government, the method violated GAAP. The proof at trial, however, failed to prove that materiality of the misrepresentations that were made on the financial statements. The court also reversed the counts of the indictment dealing with lying to auditors. The basis of the reversal on these counts, in part, was the failure to prove that the defendant had a culpable state of mind (i.e., willful and knowing deception).
United States v. Kaiser, 609 F.3d 556 (2d Cir. 2010)

The Second Circuit discusses the various interpretations of the term “wilfullness” in the context of several different securities fraud offenses, ultimately concluding that the term has different meanings for different violations.

United States v. Schiff, 602 F.3d 152 (3rd Cir. 2010)

The Third Circuit holds that the government could not rely on an “omissions liability” theory of securities fraud in this case. The government’s theory is that the corporate executive failed to disclose the “channel stuffing” practices that the company engaged in. The government’s theory was foreclosed by the fact that there was no allegation in the indictment of misstatements in the SEC filings, which is where the government now alleged the information should have been included.

United States v. Finnerty, 533 F.3d 143 (2d Cir. 2008)

The evidence was insufficient to prove that the defendant’s conduct violated the securities laws. The defendant may have violated certain stock exchange rules, but this does not equate to securities fraud.

United States v. Cassese, 428 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2005)

The Second Circuit affirmed the decision of the district court granting a judgment of acquittal in this securities fraud case. The evidence failed to show that the defendant willfully violated the law.

United States v. Langford, 946 F.2d 798 (11th Cir. 1991)

In connection with the fraudulent sale of stock, the defendant made numerous mailings. Each such mailing should not have been listed as separate counts of securities fraud. A separate count should only be set forth for each separate sale or purchase of securities.
SELECTIVE PROSECUTION

SEE: GOVERNMENTAL MISCONDUCT (SELECTIVE PROSECUTION)
SELF DEFENSE

United States v. Biggs, 441 F.3d 1069 (9th Cir. 2006)

When a defendant claims that he acted in self-defense, he is required to make out a prima facie case that he reasonably believed that the use of force was necessary to defend himself and that he used no more force than was reasonably necessary in the circumstances. The trial court in this case improperly instructed the jury that the defendant was also required to show that he had no alternative other than the use of force in self-defense.
SEQUESTRATION

The Supreme Court reverses the decision of the Court of Appeals regarding the propriety of preventing counsel from speaking with the defendant during a brief recess which occurred while the defendant was on the stand. The Court held that a criminal defendant has no right under the Sixth Amendment’s guarantee to effective assistance of counsel to consult with his attorney during such a brief recess when it is clear that the consultation would relate entirely to the defendant’s ongoing testimony.

United States v. Sandoval-Mendoza, 472 F.3d 645 (9th Cir. 2006)

After the defendant testified on direct, an overnight recess occurred. The trial court directed the attorney that he could speak with the defendant, but not about his testimony. The Ninth Circuit held that this violated the defendant’s right to counsel. See Geders v. United States, 425 U.S. 80 (1976); Perry v. Leeke, 488 U.S. 272 (1989).

United States v. Cobb, 905 F.2d 784 (4th Cir. 1990)

A trial court committed reversible error in preventing an attorney from speaking with his attorney during a weekend break. This decision concludes that Perry v. Leeke does not apply to the facts of this case.

United States v. Farnham, 791 F.2d 331 (4th Cir. 1986)

The District Court permitted two case agents to remain at counsel table with the prosecutor. The Fourth Circuit holds that this is automatic grounds for reversal. No showing of prejudice is required. The rule is that one witness for the prosecution may be permitted to remain in the courtroom as an exception to the rule of sequestration.

United States v. Pulley, 922 F.2d 1283 (6th Cir. 1991)

Rule 615 does not allow two agents to be exempted from the rule of sequestration. Harmless error.

United States v. Hobbs, 31 F.3d 918 (9th Cir. 1994)

Excluding a defense witness because of a violation of the rule of sequestration is a remedy which should be used sparingly. It is a remedy which should be reserved for those cases in which either the defendant or his counsel have contributed to the violation.

Mudd v. United States, 798 F.2d 1509 (D.C.Cir. 1986)

A trial judge’s order to a defense attorney not to speak with his client over a weekend recess concerning the client’s testimony deprived the defendant of his Sixth Amendment right to the effective assistance of counsel. An order such as that requires automatic reversal without a showing of any prejudice.
SEVERANCE

(Counts -- Misjoinder)

United States v. Hawkins, 776 F.3d 200 (4th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was charged with carjacking and possession of a weapon by a convicted felon. The latter count was based on his possession of a weapon seventeen days after the carjacking and involved a different weapon. Joining these two offenses was error and prejudiced the defendant’s defense of the carjacking charge. The offenses did not qualify as “of the same or similar character.” Regarding prejudice, the evidence of the firearm possession offense would not have been admissible under Rule 404(b) in the carjacking case had they been charged separately. See also United States v. Holloway, 1 F.3d 307 (5th Cir. 1993).

United States v. Mann, 701 F.3d 274 (8th Cir. 2012)

Though the failure to sever mis-joined counts was not prejudicial error, there were, nevertheless, misjoined counts. The defendant was prosecuted for various offenses relating to his efforts to kill a doctor who had been involved in efforts to sanction him (the defendant was also a doctor). Numerous counts were included in the indictment relating to that offense, including possession of various weapons, obstruction of justice and causing damage to property. However, also included were counts relating to his possession of other weapons that had no connection to the attempt to kill the victim and which were obtained long before the doctor’s troubles with the Medical Board began. Those possession counts were no properly joined with the other counts of the indictment. No prejudice, however, was shown by the misjoinder.

United States v. Litwok, 678 F.3d 208 (2d Cir. 2012)

Joining mail fraud and tax evasion counts was prejudicial error in this case. The tax that was avoided was not from income derived from the mail fraud scheme, which is the typical legitimate reason to join such offenses.

United States v. Shellef, 507 F.3d 82 (2nd Cir. 2007)

Tax charges should ordinarily not be joined with non-tax charges, unless the other offense generated the money for which no taxes were paid, or there is some other logical overlapping evidence that would justify joinder of these offenses. Joining tax charges with charges of fraud (which conduct did not generate the unreported income) and money laundering was prejudicial and necessitated reversing the conviction. At separate trials, evidence of one crime would not have been admissible in the trial for the other, under Rules 404(b) / 403. Moreover, two defendants were jointly tried, despite the fact that their offenses should not have been joined, therefore, there was improper joinder of defendants, as well.

United States v. Jawara, 474 F.3d 565 (9th Cir. 2007)

A trial judge must look beyond the categorical nature of the offense in determining whether joinder pursuant to Rule 8(a) is proper. The specific elements of the offenses, as well as the places, times and victims of the crimes should also be considered. The court is limited, however, to the allegations in the indictment, not the proof at trial in evaluating whether joinder is proper. In this case, joinder was improper, but not prejudicial. The indictment joined charges of marriage fraud and immigration fraud, though the charges were not part of a common scheme. These charges were improperly joined. The case contains an extensive review of the law regarding joinder under Rule 8.

United States v. Sampson, 385 F.3d 183 (2d Cir. 2004)
Defendant was charged with a drug offense committed in 1998 and another offense committed in 2000. He demonstrated that he would testify at a trial involving the 1998 offense, but not the 2000 offense. The Second Circuit concluded that the events surrounding the 2000 incident would not have been admissible in a trial involving just the 1998 transaction, because the defendant contended that he was not the person who was involved in the 1998 event – thus his “intent” was not in issue and the 2000 event could not be introduced to prove his intent. Because the evidence of the 2000 offense would not have been admissible under Rule 404(b) and the defendant demonstrated that he had a plausible basis for testifying at a trial involving just the 1998 offense, the failure to sever the counts was reversible error.

Bean v. Calderon, 163 F.3d 1073 (9th Cir. 1998)
The Ninth Circuit held that the joinder of two murder charges in one indictment violated the defendant’s right to due process. The evidence on one count was substantial, while the evidence on the other count, involving an entirely separate event, was considerably weaker. Joining these two charges enabled the jury to infer the defendant’s guilt of the weaker charge based on the strength of the evidence on the other charge. The court noted that there is a high risk of undue prejudice whenever joinder of counts allows evidence of other crimes to be introduced in a trial of charges with respect to which the evidence would otherwise be inadmissible.

United States v. Richardson, 161 F.3d 728 (D.C. Cir. 1998)
The improper joinder of DC local threat charges with a federal firearms charge was improper. The improper joinder tainted the firearms charge, as well.

United States v. Jordan, 112 F.3d 14 (1st Cir. 1997)
The defendant was charged with tax evasion, mail fraud and money laundering. The tax charge arose from the same operative facts as the mail fraud and the money laundering offenses, but, nevertheless, the trial court should have granted the defendant’s motion to sever these charges. The defendant wanted to testify in defense of the tax charge, but desired to remain silent with regard to the other charges. The trial court, in this unusual situation should have granted the motion. The defense to the tax charges involved considerations different from the defense to the fraud charges. The defendant’s state of mind and understanding of tax law was a qualitatively different matter than his claim of innocence of the other charges. Thus, he met the standard of establishing that he had both important information to give concerning one count and strong need to refrain from testifying on the other.

United States v. Holloway, 1 F.3d 307 (5th Cir. 1993)
The defendant was a suspect in a string of robberies. Months after the last robbery was committed, the defendant was arrested and he was found in possession of a weapon. The weapon was not connected to any of the robberies. Nevertheless, the government charged the defendant with the robberies and the weapon charge (possession by a convicted felon) in one indictment. The failure to sever counts was prejudicial under Rule 14 and necessitated reversing the conviction. Joinder was inappropriate in the first place under Rule 8(a).

United States v. Terry, 911 F.2d 272 (9th Cir. 1990)

The government improperly joined drug possession charges with a firearm charge where the two offenses were not part of the same transaction, or part of a common scheme. Furthermore, the charges were not proved by the same evidence. Pursuant to Fed.R.Crim.P. 8(a), this misjoinder was reversible error. In evaluating a Rule 8(a) claim of misjoinder the Court need do no more than examine the indictment. The indictment in this case failed to identify any commonality between the drug offenses and the firearm offenses.

Defendants were charged in two conspiracies, one to defraud SCT Corporation, the other to launder money provided by an undercover IRS agent. These conspiracies did not have a common end or a shared goal. Furthermore, one defendant had no involvement at all in the SCT scheme or conspiracy. The mere fact that conspiracies have overlapping members does not automatically permit their joinder in one indictment. The improper joinder in this case was prejudicial.

The defendant was charged with racketeering and weapons charges. There was a substantial possibility of prejudice flowing from the proof of prior felony convictions which would otherwise be admissible during the RICO prosecution. The court ordered that the trial be bifurcated, and at the first stage of the trial, the racketeering charges would be presented followed by a verdict and then proof of the previous felony convictions in support of the firearms offenses.

In this twenty-two count, fourteen-defendant trial, Judge Weinstein ordered seven separate trials. The Court ordered severance of defendants and counts based on a logical grouping of offenses and conspirators.

It was error to join in one trial charges relating to possession of cocaine with charges relating to conspiracy and substantive fraud counts. There was no relationship between the cocaine offenses and the offenses relating to the scheme to defraud.

The defendant, an attorney, was entitled to a severance of charges relating to making a false or misleading statement to the grand jury and false statements to the government from eight other transactions which were separated by as much as three years from the transactions in these false statement counts.

The defendant was entitled to a severance of mail fraud and Hobbs Act counts. The counts were totally unrelated; the mail fraud involved an insurance claim for damage to his house which never occurred and the Hobbs Act involved the judge’s receipt of $500 from a union official in connection with the judge’s professional duties. The offenses differed in time, victim, nature and facts involved.

The defendant was charged with various drug-related charges and possession of a firearm after having been previously convicted of a felony. Because the prior felony would not be admissible during the drug trial, the gun and drug charges had to be severed.
SEVERANCE
(Severing Defendants)

Rule 14 does not require severance as a matter of law whenever the defendants’ defenses are antagonistic. Rather, the trial court should assess the evidence and determine if there is a serious risk that a joint trial would compromise a specific trial right, or prevent the jury from making a reliable judgment of guilt or innocence.

United States v. Slatten, 865 F.3d 767 (D.C. Cir. 2017)
This is the Blackwater prosecution relating to the murders committed by military contractors while serving in Iraq. Reversal was required because the trial court refused to sever one defendant’s case which was requested in order to introduce the statement of a co-defendant that was inadmissible in a joint trial. Severance is required under Rule 14 if it is necessary in order to assure that a defendant can introduce evidence that would be inadmissible at a joint trial, and which is essential to the defendant’s right to a fair trial. The statement of the co-defendant exonerated the defendant. Even though the co-defendant would not have testified at defendant’s severed trial, the statement of the co-defendant would have been admissible pursuant to Rule 807, the residual exception to the hearsay rule. The co-defendant’s statements to the authorities investigating the shooting contained equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness: the co-defendant was speaking pursuant to a grant of immunity; he was implicating himself; his statements were consistent over time. Because the statement of the co-defendant would have been admissible at a separate trial, the trial court erred in denying the severance motion.

United States v. McRae, 702 F.3d 806 (5th Cir. 2012)
The defendant, a police officer in New Orleans, was tried with two other police officers in a civil rights violation case arising from the Katrina aftermath. The defendant shot a suspected looter. Later, the body was brought to a police station by a “good Samaritan” and two other police officers beat up the good Samaritan, took his car and brought the suspected looter’s body to a secluded area and burned it. The officer who originally shot the looter was not involved in the conduct after the shooting. The Fifth Circuit held that a severance should have been granted to the shooter. The spillover effect from the highly prejudicial and inflammatory evidence that was introduced against the other two officers impaired the shooter’s ability to get a fair trial.

United States v. Mannie, 509 F.3d 851 (7th Cir. 2007)
The defendant was denied a fair trial because of the disruptive behavior of his co-defendant during trial. The co-defendant constantly interrupted the proceedings and physically assaulted his attorney.

United States v. Shellef, 507 F.3d 82 (2nd Cir. 2007)
Tax charges should ordinarily not be joined with non-tax charges, unless the other offense generated the money for which no taxes were paid, or there is some other logical overlapping evidence that would justify joinder of these offenses. Joining tax charges with charges of fraud (which conduct did not generate the unreported income) and money laundering was prejudicial and necessitated reversing the conviction. At separate trials, evidence of one crime would not have been admissible in the trial for the other, under Rules 404(b) / 403. Moreover, two defendants were jointly tried, despite the fact that their offenses should not have been joined, therefore, there was improper joinder of defendants, as well.

United States v. Tarango, 396 F.3d 666 (5th Cir. 2005)

The defendant’s co-defendant was a fugitive and was tried in absentia, but the defendant had to endure a joint trial with the fugitive. The vast majority of the evidence focused on the absent co-defendant. The defendant was prejudiced by this joinder and the trial court correctly granted a Rule 33 Motion for New Trial.

United States v. Blankenship, 382 F.3d 1110 (11th Cir. 2004)

At great length, the court reviews the law relating to the necessity of granting a severance based on antagonistic defenses, or for reasons of the “denial of a trial right.” Ultimately, the court concludes that a severance was not required in this case, despite the level of antagonism of the parties.

United States v. Cortinas, 142 F.3d 242 (5th Cir. 1998)

Two defendants’ motion to sever, pursuant to Rule 14, should have been granted. Evidence of other defendants’ violent crimes rendered their trials unfair, despite cautionary instructions.

United States v. DiNome, 954 F.2d 839 (2d Cir. 1992)

Numerous defendants were tried for their participation in a vicious enterprise involving murder, narcotics distribution, pornography, firearms distribution and other offenses. Two defendants’ link to this enterprise was the fact that in a previous trial of one of the members of the enterprise in state court, one of these defendants served as a juror and accepted a bribe, and her husband (the other defendant in this trial) spent the proceeds of the bribe on a new house. After the trial court granted the Rule 29 motion (after a sixteen month trial) on these defendants’ (i.e., the former juror and his spouse’s) RICO counts, the court should have severed their trials on remaining counts from that of their co-defendants. The obvious prejudicial spillover effect of trying these two defendants with the members of the criminal enterprise should have prompted the trial court to sever their cases.

United States v. Serpoosh, 919 F.2d 835 (2d Cir. 1990)

The trial court erred in not severing defendants’ trials where their defenses were mutually antagonistic. The test for this basis for severance is: “The jury, in order, to believe the core of testimony offered on behalf of one defendant, must necessarily disbelieve the testimony offered on behalf of his codefendant.” Alternatively, defendants must show that the jury will infer that both defendants are guilty solely due to the conflict. The two drug defendants in this case pointed the finger of blame at one another. One of the defendants had to be guilty. A severance should have been granted. Query whether this result would be the same after Zafiro?

United States v. Casamento, 887 F.2d 1141 (2d Cir. 1989)

This is the appeal of the “pizza connection case.” Though upholding the verdicts, the Second Circuit set forth guidelines for future mega-trials. Among other considerations, the district judge should question the propriety of severing counts and defendants in any case where the prosecutor anticipates that a joint trial will exceed four months.

United States v. Wilson, 116 F.3d 1066 (5th Cir. 1997)

The trial court erred in failing to sever defendant’s trial from that of his co-defendants in light of the proof that his co-defendants would not testify at a joint trial, but were available to exonerate the defendant at a separate trial.

United States v. Neal, 27 F.3d 1035 (5th Cir. 1994)

Some of the defendants in this multi-defendant drug prosecution established that had they been tried separately, the lead defendant would have testified at their trial and exculpated them. In this situation, the trial court erred in failing to sever those defendants from the case.

United States v. Breinig, 70 F.3d 850 (6th Cir. 1995)

The defendant’s conviction for tax evasion was reversed because of the trial court’s failure to grant the defendant’s Rule 14 severance motion. The defendant and his estranged wife were jointly tried for tax evasion. The hostility between the parties at trial necessitated a severance. The wife defended on the ground of diminished capacity and argued to the jury that defendant was manipulative, abusive and adulterous. In separate trials, none of this evidence would have been admissible against the defendant.

United States v. Davidson, 936 F.2d 856 (6th Cir. 1991)

Davidson was charged with one count of drug trafficking in an indictment which also included nine additional counts against a co-conspirator in the drug venture named Mulligan. Mulligan was also charged with various tax related violations. Davidson was not charged with any of those violations. Mulligan fled prior to trial and he was tried in absentia. Statements of Mulligan were introduced in which he acknowledged being a drug trafficker. The trial court abused its discretion in refusing to sever the trial of Mulligan (in absentia) and Davidson. The prejudicial spillover effect denied Davidson a fair trial.

United States v. Baker, 98 F.3d 330 (8th Cir. 1996)

The trial court erred in refusing to sever defendant’s trial from the trial of his co-defendant. Both defendants were charged with possessing a poisonous substance used as a weapon. But evidence that was introduced against the co-defendant would not have been introduced against the defendant had he been tried alone. The two were not charged as co-conspirators, but the other defendant was charged with conspiring with others to possess the substance on another occasion.

United States v. Adkins, 842 F.2d 210 (8th Cir. 1988)

A defendant charged with being a participant in a cocaine conspiracy was entitled to a severance from co-defendants who participated only in a tax fraud count of the indictment.

United States v. Sazenski, 833 F.2d 741 (8th Cir. 1987)

Two defendants were tried jointly: one for being involved in a marijuana conspiracy, the other for cocaine charges. The evidence did not indicate that the marijuana conspiracy defendant had any connection with the cocaine transaction which occurred five months before the marijuana conspiracy began. Despite this misjoinder, it was harmless error in this case because the evidence of the cocaine would have been admissible in the conspiracy trial to rebut the charge of entrapment.
United States v. Sherlock, 962 F.2d 1349 (9th Cir. 1992)

The trial court committed reversible error in failing to sever the defendant’s trial from that of his co-defendant. The use of the co-defendant’s extra-judicial statement which implicated the defendant required a severance.

United States v. Tootick, 952 F.2d 1078 (9th Cir. 1991)

The trial court erred in not severing the defendants’ trials where they had mutually antagonistic defenses. Both defendants blamed the assault entirely on the other defendant. The antagonistic defenses were capitalized upon by the government in its closing argument.

Note: This is a pre-Zafiro decision.

Taylor v. Singletary, 122 F.3d 1390 (11th Cir. 1997)

The trial court granted a severance on the basis of the defendant’s motion that only with a severance would his co-defendants testify in his favor. But the trial court then set the defendant’s trial to begin first and the co-defendants refused to testify. This was error of constitutional proportion. Failing to try the co-defendants first violated the defendant’s Fifth and Sixth Amendment rights to present a defense.

United States v. Yizar, 956 F.2d 230 (11th Cir. 1992)

An evidentiary hearing was necessary to evaluate defendant’s claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Among counsel’s alleged errors was the failure to interview witnesses which would have revealed that the co-defendant had told the prosecutor that the defendant was innocent. Had counsel learned of this, he may have been entitled to a severance in order to use the co-defendant’s testimony pursuant to Byrd v. Wainwright, 428 F.2d 1017 (5th Cir. 1970).

United States v. Rucker, 915 F.2d 1511 (11th Cir. 1990)

The trial court committed reversible error in denying the defendants’ motion to sever their trials. Severance was compelled in this case because the jury, in order to believe the core of testimony offered on behalf of one of the defendants must necessarily have disbelieved the testimony offered on behalf of the co-defendant. In this case there were two related co-defendants, one of them owned the vehicle that was stopped and in which contraband had been found and both asserted their ignorance of the contraband. No reasonable juror could have believed both of their stories, for to do so would mean that the contraband had been placed there by some unknown third party, and that neither defendant had thought to investigate this mysterious package which was found at their feet. This case presented an example of a situation where two defendants’ stories logically conflicted to the point “that the jury will unjustifiably infer that this conflict alone demonstrates that both are guilty.” Query whether this result would be the same after Zafiro? The subsequent decision in United States v. Blankenship, 382 F.3d 1110 (11th Cir. 2004), held that Rucker did not survive Zafiro.

United States v. Fernandez, 892 F.2d 976 (11th Cir. 1989)

The government charged numerous defendants with being members of one overall conspiracy. The evidence at trial revealed that there were, in fact, separate conspiracies which were not part of one overall scheme. A mid-trial severance should have been granted to the appellant. Forcing him to continue with the trial in the light of the overwhelming evidence against the other conspirators deprived him of due process.
United States v. DiBernardo, 880 F.2d 1216 (11th Cir. 1989)

The defendants sought to sever their case from that of a co-defendant in order to utilize the co-defendant’s exculpatory testimony. In order to prevail on such a motion, the defendant must establish (1) a bona fide need for the co-defendant’s testimony; (2) the substance of the testimony; (3) its exculpatory nature and effects; and (4) the likelihood that the co-defendant will in fact testify if the cases are severed. The trial court found that the defendant had made an adequate showing to justify a severance. However, the trial court then ordered that the defendant’s trial precede that of the co-defendant who was to testify. The co-defendant refused to testify and the defendant was thus deprived of his exculpatory testimony. The Eleventh Circuit, in affirming the grant of habeas corpus relief, found that forcing the defendant to trial first effectively deprived him of the benefit of the severance, which itself was a matter of due process. The error in requiring the defendant to be tried first constituted an abuse of the trial court’s discretion which denied him a fair trial.

United States v. Castro, 829 F.2d 1038 (11th Cir. 1987)

Two separate conspiracies were alleged in this indictment. One involved certificates of deposit while the other involved a scheme to create a fraudulent inventory. The court holds that the charges should have been severed and tried separately. There was a substantial risk that the defendant in a joint trial risked association by jurors with the illegal acts of the other conspiracy and that there would be prejudice by the spillover effect.

United States v. McLain, 823 F.2d 1457 (11th Cir. 1987)

The defendant, charged with RICO and collection of unlawful debts was entitled to a severance from the trial of his co-defendant who was charged with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. There was no evidence connecting the RICO defendant to any of the co-defendant drug operations. Note that in United States v. Lane, 474 U.S. 438 (1986), the Court held that Rule 8 misjoinder is subject to harmless error analysis.

United States v. Gonzalez, 804 F.2d 691 (11th Cir. 1986)

The Eleventh Circuit reverses a conviction where two defendants who had mutually exclusive and antagonistic defenses were required to stand trial together. In this case, one of the defendants was necessarily incriminated by his co-defendant’s version of events. The Court rules that the test in granting a severance on the basis of antagonistic defenses is whether the jury, in order to believe the “core” of the testimony offered by one defendant must necessarily disbelieve that offered by the other defendant. Throughout this trial, one defendant’s counsel repeatedly asserted that the other defendant was lying. It is dubious whether this decision survived Zafiro.
SEX OFFENDER REGISTRATION AND NOTIFICATION ACT

The registration requirements of the federal SORNA do not apply to offenders convicted before the act became effective until the A.G. validly specifies that they do apply. Thus, compliance with the rules for the enactment of an interim rule is a relevant inquiry.

18 U.S.C. § 2250 does not apply to defendants whose travel was completed before the law was enacted in 2006.

United States v. Haslage, 853 F.3d 331 (7th Cir. 2017)

A defendant has no obligation to report to the state that he is leaving, the fact that he has moved to another state. See Nichols v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1113 (2016).

United States v. Ross, 848 F.3d 1129 (D. C. Cir. 2017)

The defendant was convicted of a sex offense in 1999 and moved from D.C. to Ohio in 2009. The D.C. Circuit holds that the A.G.’s rule which applied SORNA to pre-act offenders was not promulgated until after Ross moved, so it could not be applied to him.

United States v. Morales, 801 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015)

The Rhode Island offenses that the defendant committed did not qualify as Tier III offenses pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 16911(4)(A).

United States v. Brewer, 766 F.3d 884 (8th Cir. 2014)

The Eighth Circuit holds that the A.G.’s failure to comply with the Administrative Procedure Act in promulgating the rules about the retroactive requirement for registering rendered the rules invalid.

United States v. DeJarnette, 741 F.3d 971 (9th Cir. 2013)

Defendant committed a sex offense in the Northern District of California in 2001. He was released from prison in 2006 and in 2008 moved to Georgia. SORNA was enacted in 2006 and the retroactivity provisions were promulgated in 2008. Because he resided in Georgia when the retroactive provisions were enacted, the Ninth Circuit held that he was not required to register in California.

United States v. Lunsford, 725 F.3d 859 (8th Cir. 2013)

If a convicted sex offender moves from a state to a foreign country, he is not required to alert the state from which he is moving of his change of address. Only changes of residence from one state to another (or an American Territory) require the offender to notify the states involved.

United States v. Reynolds, 710 F.3d 498 (3rd Cir. 2013)
After this case was remanded from the United States Supreme Court (see above), the Third Circuit concluded that the Attorney General’s failure to comply with the Administrative Procedure Act rendered the regulations void, insofar as they required the defendant to register for an offense that occurred prior to the enactment of SORNA. Because the regulations were not promulgated properly, the failure to register would not amount to a criminal offense.

United States v. Kebodeaux, 687 F.3d 232 (5th Cir. 2012) (en banc)

If a defendant completed his period of supervised release prior to the enactment of SORNA in 2006, he cannot be convicted of the provision making it a crime to fail to update his registration after moving within a state. There is no Constitutional basis for Congress to enact such a law. 18 U.S.C. § 2250(a)(2)(A). The Supreme Court REVERSED: 133 S. Ct. 2496 (2013).

United States v. Clements, 655 F.3d 1028 (9th Cir. 2011)

SORNA registration requirements did not apply to a defendant who was convicted of a sex offense prior to SORNA’s enactment and whose travel predated August 1, 2008. See also United States v. Valverde, 628 F.3d 1159 (9th Cir. 2010).

United States v. Pietrantonio, 637 F.3d 865 (8th Cir. 2011)

In this SORNA prosecution, the defendant was proved to have moved from Minnesota to Las Vegas and later traveled to Boston. Though the indictment was not duplicitous on its face, because of the manner in which the judge charged the jury, there was a likelihood that the jury may not have unanimously agreed on what conduct of the defendant constituted the offense.

United States v. Beasley, 636 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2011)

Defendant was not subject to SORNA’s registration requirements when he traveled to Georgia and did not register, because the DOJ interim rule had not yet been promulgated.

United States v. Hoang, 636 F.3d 677 (7th Cir. 2011)

The defendant’s travel occurred prior to the date that the Attorney General enacted the regulations specifying that all sex offenders must register, regardless of when their predicate offenses occurred. The Seventh Circuit held that the SORNA did not apply to the defendant.

United States v. Husted, 545 F.3d 1240 (10th Cir. 2008)

The defendant was charged with violating 18 U.S.C. § 2250, which makes it a crime to fail to register as a sex offender after traveling in interstate commerce. Because the defendant’s interstate travel occurred prior to the enactment of the Act, he could not be convicted.
SEX TOURISM

_United States v. Weingarten_, 632 F.3d 60 (2d Cir. 2011)

The sex tourism statute, 18 U.S.C. §2423, does not make it a crime to travel between two foreign countries with intent to engage in illicit sexual conduct. There must be some territorial nexus to the United States.

_United States v. Jackson_, 480 F.3d 1014 (9th Cir. 2007)

In 2001, the defendant moved to Thailand. In 2003, Congress made it a crime to travel in interstate commerce and engage in illicit sexual conduct. 18 U.S.C. § 2423(c) (commonly known as the PROTECT Act). Though the Ninth Circuit previously upheld the constitutionality of this provision, _United States v. Clark_, 435 F.3d 1100 (9th Cir. 2006), the question in this case is whether a person can be prosecuted if his travel occurred prior to passage of the Act, but his sexual misconduct occurred after passage of the act. The Ninth Circuit concludes that the Act does not criminalize the defendant’s conduct.
SPEECH OR DEBATE CLAUSE

In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 571 F.3d 1200 (D. C. Cir. 2009)

The grand jury may not subpoena either documents provided by a Congressman, or statements made by the Congressman to an ethics panel of Congress.

United States v. Rayburn House Office Building, Room 2113, 497 F.3d 654 (D.C. Cir. 2007)

A search of Congressman Jefferson’s office violated the Speech or Debate Clause, to the extent that law enforcement officers were permitted to review legislative materials in an effort to find evidence of corruption. In order to conduct such a search, the seized material must first be reviewed by the court, not the agents, to ensure that no legislative materials are reviewed by the agents.
SPEEDY TRIAL

(Constitutional)

United States v. Tigano, -- F.3d -- (2d Cir. 2018)
A seven-year pretrial delay amounted to a Sixth Amendment speedy trial violation. The delay was caused by competency exams, the defense lawyer’s failure to push for trial after plea offers were rejected, as well as the court’s failure to schedule the case for trial.

United States v. Irizarry-Colon, 848 F.3d 61 (1st Cir. 2017)
In measuring the length of delay for purposes of the first Barker v. Wingo factor, the starting point is the initial indictment, not a superseding indictment or a new indictment following a dismissal.

United States v. Velazquez, 749 F.3d 161 (3rd Cir. 2014)
After an initial effort to locate the defendant following his indictment, the government’s experts for the next five years amounted to nothing more than running his name through the NCIC database. The defendant was eventually apprehended after he was arrested on an unrelated charge. The Third Circuit held that his constitutional right to a speedy trial was violated and he was entitled to have his case dismissed with prejudice. The defendant did have an attorney during this time who was aware of the pending charges, but not that an indictment had been returned. Thus, the defendant was aware that there were pending charges and the record was clear that he did not surrender. Nevertheless, the trial court did not find that the defendant was engaged in evasive conduct, though he lived a “transient” lifestyle. The appellate court reasoned that a defendant has no duty to surrender, even if he is aware that there is an arrest warrant, though if he had engaged in evasive conduct, it would be hard to convince the court that his success at evasion would be rewarded with dismissal of the indictment. In the absence of evasive conduct, as in this case, the mere fact that the defendant is aware that he is “wanted” does not preclude him from winning a Speedy Trial motion. Finally, the court concluded that the defendant did not waive his speedy trial claim simply by virtue of his failure to insist on a speedy trial. Because the right to a speedy trial is not triggered until the indictment is returned and the defendant in this case was not shown to have been aware of the indictment, he could not have insisted on his right to a speedy trial.

United States v. Ferreira, 665 F.3d 701 (6th Cir. 2011)
A three year delay in bringing a defendant to trial violated the Sixth Amendment guarantee of a speedy trial, even though the defendant was in prison on other charges in another jurisdiction. The cause of the delay was bureaucratic bungling of the habeas corpus ad prosequendum process.

United States v. Seltzer, 595 F.3d 1170 (10th Cir. 2010)
The feds waited over nearly two years after the initial return of the federal indictment to prepare the case for trial. In the interim, the defendant was awaiting trial in state court for unrelated charges. The Tenth Circuit held that there was insufficient justification for deferring to the state court and held that the defendant’s right to a speedy trial was violated.
United States v. Battis, 589 F.3d 673 (3rd Cir. 2009)

The federal government indicted the defendant after he was arrested on state charges. Forty-five months elapsed after his federal indictment was returned while the federal prosecutor waited for the state to try the defendant on the state charges. Ultimately the state dismissed the state case. The Third Circuit held that the delay in this case was attributable to the government and prejudice was presumed because of the length of the delay. The court of appeals held that the indictment had to be dismissed.

United States v. Ray, 578 F.3d 184 (2d Cir. 2009)

The defendant appealed her sentence in 1992. The government and defendant agreed that the appellate court should remand the case, following the issuance of an intervening decision that in both parties’ opinion required re-sentencing. Nothing happened for the next fifteen years. When the defendant was finally re-sentenced, the defendant challenged the proceedings as a violation of her right to a Speedy Trial and to Due Process. The Second Circuit held that this did amount to a Due Process violation and that the proper remedy in this case was to suspend the remainder of the sentence. The Second Circuit noted that after remand from the appellate court, it is not the duty of the defendant to bring himself to court and demand a re-sentencing.

United States v. Molina-Solorio, 577 F.3d 300 (5th Cir. 2009)

The defendant was serving a federal sentence and escaped. A federal indictment for escape was obtained by the government. A few years later, he was arrested by state authorities on a cocaine charge and was sentenced to three years and after serving a sentence, was sent to ICE custody and then deported. Five years later he was arrested back in Texas. He was charged with illegal re-entry and shortly thereafter was charged with the escape offense that was initially the subject of an indictment approximately ten years earlier. The Fifth Circuit held that the defendant’s right to speedy trial under the Sixth Amendment was violated. There was no proof that the defendant was actually aware of the indictment, so his failure to “assert his right to a speedy trial” prior to the arrest on the escape charge would not be held against him. The government failed to demonstrate “diligent pursuit” of the defendant during the time between his indictment and the arrest ten years later.

United States v. Erenas-Luna, 560 F.3d 772 (8th Cir. 2009)

The defendant was arrested and deported shortly thereafter. Later, he was indicted. For three years after he was indicted, the defendant was not arrested, or arraigned, even though the police knew that he had returned to the jurisdiction. The Eighth Circuit held that the three year delay was presumptively prejudicial and the lower court erred in failing to presume prejudice. A remand was necessary to permit the government an opportunity to rebut the presumed prejudice.

United States v. Mendoza, 530 F.3d 758 (9th Cir. 2008) (revised opinion)

The government was aware that the defendant had moved to the Philippines. He was indicted. The only effort the government made to alert him to the indictment was to issue a warrant that would have resulted in his arrest when he returned to the country. Ten years later, the defendant returned to the country. Trying him at that point in time violated his right to a speedy trial under the Sixth Amendment. The court concluded that there was a strong presumption of prejudice which the government failed to rebut.

United States v. Ingram, 446 F.3d 1332 (11th Cir. 2006)
Reviewing the Barker v. Wingo factors, the Eleventh Circuit held that the defendant’s prosecution was barred by the Speedy Trial Clause of the Sixth Amendment. The court noted that although pre-accusation delay may not be considered when determining whether a defendant has made the showing necessary to trigger a presumption of prejudice, any delay prior to indictment may be considered when determining whether the defendant was prejudiced by the overall delay. The four-year delay in this case was sufficient to require dismissal.

United States v. Woolfolk, 399 F.3d 590 (4th Cir. 2005)
An eight-month delay between the time of the accusation and the return of the indictment was presumptively prejudicial. A remand was necessary for further fact-finding on the constitutional speedy trial claim.

McNeely v. Blanas, 336 F.3d 822 (9th Cir. 2003)
The defendant filed a habeas corpus challenge to his continued detention in state custody, alleging that his detention for five years without a preliminary hearing or trial violated his constitutional right to a speedy trial. The Ninth Circuit agreed and granted the writ.

United States v. Bergfeld, 280 F.3d 486 (5th Cir. 2002)
A five-year delay between the time the indictment was filed (under seal) and the time the defendant was told about the indictment was presumptively prejudicial. The relative weight of the other Barker v. Wingo / Doggett factors is less important once the delay reaches this length.

Brooks v. Jones, 875 F.2d 30 (2d Cir. 1989)
Following his conviction, there was an eight-year delay prior to the defendant’s appeal. Federal habeas relief was warranted in light of this extraordinary delay.

Simmons v. Beyer, 44 F.3d 1160 (3rd Cir. 1995)
A thirteen-year delay between the defendant’s conviction and his first direct appeal violated his right to due process and a speedy trial. Though the Supreme Court has never recognized a right to a speedy appeal, the Third Circuit holds that the Due Process Clause ensures the right to a speedy appeal, if the state has chosen to give defendants the right to appeal. “The 13-year delay in this case is an outrage, and that Simmons’ appeal as of right ‘slipped through the cracks’ is shameful.” The fact that the cause of the delay was ineffective assistance of counsel by the public defender does not mitigate the damage. The defendant was entitled to a new trial.

Burkett v. Fulcomer, 951 F.2d 1431 (3rd Cir. 1991)
Twenty-nine months after he was convicted, the defendant was sentenced. Nine months had elapsed between his arrest and his trial. There was no justification for the delay, other than crowded court dockets, which weighs against the government. The court discusses at length the type of “prejudice” which a defendant suffers during post-conviction delay and concludes that the defendant did suffer prejudice during the period of delay, including the defendant’s inability to utilize certain rehabilitative services which would have been available after sentencing, as well as the psychological harm suffered by the uncertainty of the incarceration. The remedy provided by the court was to reduce the defendant’s sentence by the amount of time he served in various county jails, awaiting sentencing.

Burkett v. Cunningham, 826 F.2d 1208 (3rd Cir. 1987)

It took five and one half years before sentence was imposed for this defendant. He was incarcerated the entire time. The State attributed the delay to crowded court calendars and the court reporter’s delay in filing the transcript. The defendant was tried and convicted in 1981. In 1986, he was still in jail awaiting the imposition of sentence. The Court holds that the right to speedy trial includes the right to be tried, sentenced and to have appellate resolution of the case.

Howell v. Barker, 904 F.2d 889 (4th Cir. 1990)

Twenty-seven months expired between the issuance of an arrest warrant and its actual service. The Fourth Circuit concludes that this delay prejudiced the defendant and his conviction was vacated. Actual prejudice is not necessary where, as here, there was no justification for the delay between the conclusion of the investigation and the returning of the indictment.

United States v. Graham, 128 F.3d 372 (6th Cir. 1997)

The defendants were indicted in 1987 on RICO charges, but tried in 1995. This violated their constitutional right to a speedy trial and the convictions were reversed.

United States v. Smith, 94 F.3d 204 (6th Cir. 1996)

If the government appeals a sentencing decision, an unreasonable delay in resolving this appeal may give rise to a Sixth Amendment speedy trial violation. For example, if the government prevails, a delay may prejudice the defendant in presenting evidence at a resentencing. Also, if the defendant is released prior to the appellate court’s decision, the risk of being re-incarcerated is an important consideration in assessing the prejudice to the defendant from the delay.

Redd v. Sowders, 809 F.2d 1266 (6th Cir. 1987)

The defendant’s lengthy incarceration prior to trial was oppressive and prejudicial. Possible alibi witnesses were no longer available at trial to substantiate the defendant’s alibi claim.

United States v. Pomeroy, 822 F.2d 718 (8th Cir. 1987)

Although an extradition treaty permits Canada to deny surrender of an alleged fugitive to the United States, the government’s failure to request surrender of the fugitive in this case precluded the government from relying on that treaty in defending against a speedy trial violation.

United States v. Shell, 974 F.2d 1035 (9th Cir. 1992)

Though the defense could not identify any specific prejudice, the five-year delay between the time of indictment and the time of defendant’s arrest was presumptively prejudicial under the standard of Doggett v. United States, 505 U.S. 647 (1992).
SPEEDY TRIAL
(Statutory)

The Supreme Court holds that a defendant may not prospectively waive indefinitely the provisions of the Speedy Trial Act. Though the defendant signed a document prepared by the court that purported to waive the provisions of the Act, the Supreme Court held that the Act does not permit this kind of prospective waiver. The Court also held that the trial court must make specific findings under § 3161(h)(8), or an “ends of justice” delay will not stop the clock. Finally, the court held that there is no harmless error in this situation.

The trial court granted the defendant’s motion to dismiss the indictment with prejudice because of the government’s failure to comply with the Speedy Trial Act. The Supreme Court reverses holding that the trial court did not properly exercise its discretion in deciding whether to grant the motion with, as opposed to without, prejudice.

Bloate v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 1345 (2010)

If a defendant seeks additional time to file pretrial motions, is the period of time between the filing of that motion and the actual filing of the pretrial motions automatically excludable? The Supreme Court held that this period of time is not automatically excludable. Section 3161(h)(1)(D) provides for an automatic exclusion of any period of delay resulting from certain proceedings, including any delay resulting from any pretrial motion, from the filing of the motion through the conclusion of the hearing on, or other prompt disposition of, such motion. This does not include the period of time during which a defendant is given the opportunity to file motions. However, if the court makes express findings that the ends of justice are served by granting a continuance, this is a permissible method of stopping the clock.

Any time resulting from the filing of a pretrial motion falls within the exclusion of time for such pretrial motions, regardless of whether the filing of the motion actually results in a delay. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(h)(1)(D). The Sixth Circuit had previously held that only pretrial motions that actually result in a delay toll the clock.

United States v. Ammar, 842 F.3d 1203 (11th Cir. 2016)

In Ammar, the court reiterated the principle that the parties’ agreement to delay trial is not a sufficient basis to invoke (h)(7) and that was, in fact, the only basis upon which the court granted a delay – a one year delay – between the return of the indictment and the trial. The court reversed the conviction and remanded for a determination whether the dismissal should be with, or without, prejudice.

United States v. Brown, 819 F.3d 800 (6th Cir. 2016)

In order to avoid the 70-day Speedy Trial Act deadline, the court scheduled voir dire to begin just before the deadline, but delayed the start of trial until two weeks later. This violated the Speedy Trial Act. The fact that one of the government’s witnesses was “in training” was also not a basis for stopping the speedy trial clock. The court also addressed the defendant’s assertion of the right to a speedy trial and held that his objections to the continuance were sufficient given the unique facts of the case.

United States v. Bert, 814 F.3d 70 (2d Cir. 2016)

Eleven months elapsed of non-excludable time during which time the defendant remained in pretrial detention and the district court was holding a suppression motion under advisement (a period that should not have lasted longer than 30 days pursuant to § 3161(h)(1)(H). The Second Circuit set forth the trial court’s obligation to consider numerous factors in deciding whether to dismiss with, or without, prejudice. The Act expressly requires the court to consider the seriousness of the offense, the facts and circumstances of the case which led to the dismissal; and the impact of a reprosecution on the administration of the Act. The Second Circuit disagreed with the lower court’s suggestion that the absence of bad faith on the part of the government is dispositive, and also disagreed with the suggestion that if the delay was entirely the court’s fault and not the fault of the government, this, too, counsels in favor of a dismissal without prejudice.

United States v. Ramirez, 788 F.3d 732 (7th Cir. 2015)

The trial judge complained about his crowded docket and postponed the defendant’s trial. Later, the judge entered an order declaring the case complex. The Seventh Circuit held that the Speedy Trial Act was violated and the post hoc rationale for the continuance did not overcome the actual reason announced by the court at the time the continuance was granted.

United States v. Hicks, 779 F.3d 1163 (10th Cir. 2015)

A government motion “to set a trial date” stops the Speedy Trial clock for at most thirty days.

United States v. Hernandez-Meza, 720 F.3d 760 (9th Cir. 2013)

The Speedy Trial court should not have been tolled due to the existence of plea negotiations. There was no notification to the district court that a plea agreement had actually been reached (which would have briefly stopped the clock).

United States v. Ortiz, 687 F.3d 660 (5th Cir. 2012)

Section 3161(h)(3)(A) creates a tolling period resulting from the absence of an essential witness. The absent witness in this case was the defendant’s co-conspirator, who fled after initially making a statement implicating himself and the defendant. The delay in this case resulted in the return of an indictment more than thirty days after the defendant’s arrest. The Fifth Circuit held that the co-conspirator was not an essential witness as far as seeking and obtaining an indictment and therefore § 3161(h)(3)(A) did not apply. The absent witness’s confession to the police was admissible in the grand jury proceeding and therefore his appearance was not essential.

United States v. Mathurin, 690 F.3d 1236 (11th Cir. 2012)

The government must obtain an indictment within thirty days of the defendant’s first appearance. 18 USC § 3161(h). The time between first appearance and the return of an indictment during which the defense and the prosecutor are engaged in efforts to resolve the case with a plea agreement is not excludable time. Though there are certain periods of excludable time during the thirty day window (e.g., “for other proceedings concerning the defendant”), this does not include plea negotiations.

1704

The government’s motion to permit the introduction of Rule 404(b) evidence did not stop the Speedy Trial clock. Trial counsel was ineffective in failing to move to dismiss the indictment given the violation of the Speedy Trial Act.

United States v. Huete-Sandoval, 668 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2012)

Relying on the Supreme Court decision in Bloate, the First Circuit holds that excluding days for the purpose of allowing the defendant to prepare motions was improper. Only pursuant to (h)(7) may the court exclude a period of time such as this, and only if specific findings are made that such time is necessary for a case-specific reason. The second period that the district court excluded was for 16 days when the defendant said that he was going to file for a continuance to enable him to consider a plea offer. No continuance, however, was ever actually requested. The First Circuit reluctantly held that this period was also not properly excluded. The First Circuit reversed the conviction with directions to dismiss the indictment, though the lower court was permitted to do so without prejudice.

United States v. Bloate, 655 F.3d 750 (8th Cir. 2011)

On remand from the Supreme Court, the Eighth Circuit held that the Speedy Trial Act was violated and that a document filed by the defendant styled, “Waiver of Pretrial Motions” did not constitute a “motion” which stopped the Speedy Trial clock pursuant to § 3161(h)(1)(D).

United States v. Burrell, 634 F.3d 284 (5th Cir. 2011)

The government sought a continuance because a critical government witness (law enforcement officer) was scheduled to be on specialized training when the trial was scheduled. The trial court, relying on 18 U.S.C. 3161(h)(3), found that the witness could not, though the exercise of due diligence, be brought to trial by the government. The Fifth Circuit reversed. There was no showing that the government made reasonable efforts to secure the attendance of the witness at trial. There was no evidence concerning where the witness was at training, how many hours he was required to attend, whether he could miss one day for purposes of attending the trial, or what the cost of transportation would be. For the same reason the trial court could not rely on the “ends of justice” tolling period.

United States v. Alvarez-Perez, 629 F.3d 1053 (9th Cir. 2010)

Several rulings on a Speedy Trial Act dismissal, including holding that the speedy trial clock begins to run upon the filing of an information, even if an indictment is later filed. The court also rejected the government’s argument that the defendant waived the speedy trial act error.

United States v. Larson, 627 F.3d 1198 (10th Cir. 2010)

The trial court repeatedly granted continuances in this case, but provided inadequate reasons to justify the ends-of-justice continuances. The indictment should have been dismissed, though a remand to the district court was necessary to determine whether the dismissal should be with, or without, prejudice.

United States v. Jones, 601 F.3d 1247 (11th Cir. 2010)

When a defendant successfully appeals his conviction, the Speedy Trial Act allows only seventy days between the date that the district court receives the mandate and the date the defendant’s retrial begins. New charges added by a superseding indictment do not reset the speedy trial timetable for offenses either charged in the original indictment or required under double jeopardy principles to be joined with such charges. In this case, following reversal of the conviction, the government investigated additional charges against the defendant before starting the new trial and during this period of time, the 70-day period (i.e., non-excludable days) expired. The court also explains how to calculate time when various motions are filed (some of which were set down for a hearing, some of which were not). The original charges should have been dismissed.

United States v. Toombs, 574 F.3d 1262 (10th Cir. 2009)

The trial court granted several “ends of justice” continuances. Many of the continuances were granted to enable the defendant to “review newly provided discovery” or for the prosecution to locate a co-defendant and transport him to the jurisdiction. The trial court failed to adequately make case-specific findings to support the various continuances. The fact that many of the continuances were at the request of the defendant is not determinative, because the Speedy Trial Act protects the interest of the public, not just the defendant, in a speedy trial.

United States v. Henry, 538 F.3d 300 (4th Cir. 2008)

The trial court failed to adequately perform the (h)(8) balancing between the need for a continuance and the public’s interest in a speedy trial. A remand was necessary to make findings on the record.

United States v. Young, 528 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 2008)

The defendant was initially indicted for possession of an unregistered silencer. Two months later, the indictment was superseded and various drug counts were added to the indictment. When the case went to trial, the defendant moved to dismiss the firearm charge, because more than seventy non-excludable days passed prior to the trial on that charge. The Eleventh Circuit held that neither the filing of a superseding indictment, nor a dismissal and re-indictment operates to re-start the speedy trial clock.

United States v. Bryant, 523 F.3d 349 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

The Speedy Trial clock started on the day of the co-defendant’s arraignment. The clock did not stop indefinitely when the government filed a motion to permit the introduction of a prior conviction under Rule 609, because the defendant never responded and there was no hearing contemplated by the motion. In the trial court’s pre-Zedner ruling, it also found that there was an “implicit” finding of the need for an “ends of justice” continuance. Zedner does not approve that procedure. In light of the violation of the Speedy Trial Act, the conviction was reversed and the trial court was obligated to determine whether the dismissal of the indictment would be with, or without, prejudice.
United States v. Kuper, 522 F.3d 302 (3rd Cir. 2008)

A defendant who has prevailed in a motion to dismiss on the basis of a violation of the Speedy Trial Act, but whose success is tempered by the fact that the dismissal was entered without prejudice, may not appeal that decision to the Court of Appeals. A dismissal without prejudice is not a final order.

United States v. Lewis, 518 F.3d 1171 (9th Cir. 2008)

When the Ninth Circuit initially reviewed this case, it found that the Speedy Trial Act was violated during one period of delay, and perhaps during another. The case was remanded to determine the facts surrounding the second period of delay and then to dismiss the indictment either with, or without prejudice. The lower court then simply dismissed the indictment without prejudice based on the first period of delay. Because the second period of delay, if it did violate the Act, may have prompted a dismissal with prejudice, the lower court erred in failing to make a determination about the facts surrounding that delay. In deciding whether to dismiss with, or without prejudice, the court must consider the seriousness of the offense, the facts and circumstances which led to the dismissal, and the impact of re-prosecution on the administration of justice. The Supreme Court, in United States v. Taylor, 487 U.S. 326 (1988), also requires that prejudice to the defendant be considered. In this case, because the lower court failed to make necessary findings about the cause and extent of the delay, the determination of whether the dismissal should be with, or without, prejudice could not properly be made.

United States v. Williams, 511 F.3d 1044 (10th Cir. 2007)

A defendant may not sign a prospective indeterminate waiver of his rights under the Speedy Trial Act. Also, the district court may not retroactively grant an “ends of justice” continuance. While findings of fact may be entered after the fact, the findings themselves must be made before the continuance is granted.

United States v. Lopez-Valenzuela, 511 F.3d 487 (5th Cir. 2007)

The Fifth Circuit held that the date the indictment was returned was the start date for the seventy day clock, because the defendant had already appeared in court. The government unsuccessfully argued that the date he filed a written waiver of appearance and entered a not guilty plea was the date that started the clock.

United States v. Stephens, 489 F.3d 647 (5th Cir. 2007)

In joint defendant cases, if the clock has not run out on one defendant, the clock is tolled “for a reasonable period of time” as to co-defendants. § 3161(h)(7). In this case, a co-defendant entered a guilty plea and the district court tolled the clock for the defendant for seven weeks while the co-defendant’s plea was being considered (i.e., prior to sentencing). The Fifth Circuit reversed: delaying the defendant’s trial for seven weeks while the co-defendant’s plea was being considered was not reasonable. In addition, the defendant’s severance motion, which did not require a hearing, only created a thirty-day clock stoppage from the date the motion was taken under advisement. § 3161(h)(1)(J).

United States v. Sanders, 485 F.3d 654 (D.C. Cir. 2007)
The trial court made inadequate Zedner findings to support the various tolling periods of the speed trial clock and the only remedy was to reverse the conviction and dismiss the indictment.

United States v. Suarez-Perez, 484 F.3d 537 (8th Cir. 2007)

The trial court issued a nunc pro tunc order suspending the Speedy Trial clock under the ends of justice provision, but provided inadequate reasons. The conviction was set aside and the indictment was dismissed. The trial court was directed to make a decision about whether the dismissal should be with, or without, prejudice.

Greenup v. United States, 401 F.3d 758 (6th Cir. 2005)

When a defendant waives his statutory speedy trial rights, the district court must make a specific finding pursuant to § 3161(h)(8)(A) that the continuance serves the ends of justice. Unless the court considers the factors set forth in the statute, the defendant’s waiver is not effective to stop the clock. The Sixth Circuit later ordered that the opinion be “depublished.”

United States v. Woolfolk, 399 F.3d 590 (4th Cir. 2005)

The defendant was in state custody, awaiting state charges. The feds issued an arrest warrant and notified the state that it intended to try the defendant on federal charges. The state proceedings were terminated, but the state continued to hold the defendant, apparently only because of the federal detainer, for another three months. The Fourth Circuit held that this violated the Speedy Trial Act. Where a defendant is kept in state custody without any pending state charges and only on the basis of a federal warrant, the Speedy Trial clock runs and the thirty-day limit for obtaining an indictment is triggered.

United States v. Lewis, 349 F.3d 1116 (9th Cir. 2003)

A government’s motion to present evidence non-sequentially which was delayed an extensive period of time, did not stop the Speedy Trial clock the entire time, because the defendant requested a hearing on the motion.

United States v. Watkins, 339 F.3d 167 (3rd Cir. 2003)

The government’s failure to indict the defendants on the charges for which they were arrested within thirty days violated the Speedy Trial Act and required dismissal of those charges. Charges on other offenses, however, did not need to be dismissed. Thus, the conspiracy to import drugs offense should have been dismissed, but the substantive importation charge could go forward.

United States v. Pitner, 307 F.3d 1178 (9th Cir. 2002)

When there is an interlocutory appeal, the 70-day Speedy Trial clock is interrupted, but not restarted. Here, the defendant filed an interlocutory appeal after the trial court denied his motion to dismiss a new indictment which was returned following an earlier mistrial.

United States v. Johnson, 120 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 1997)

When the court invokes the "ends of justice" basis for postponing a trial, the findings in support of this continuance must be made before the time limit expires, though the written order may be entered after the 70-day period expires. In this case, the court's only findings within the time limit, was that a continuance was needed to accommodate the court's schedule. A congested court calendar is not a permissible basis for a § 3161(h)(8)(A) continuance. The indictment should have been dismissed and a remand was necessary for the lower court to determine whether the dismissal should be with, or without prejudice.

United States v. Lloyd, 125 F.3d 1263 (9th Cir. 1997)

The defendants' first conviction was reversed in September 1994, with the mandate being issued in December 1994. In January 1996 -- over a year later -- the re-trial was held. The Speedy Trial Act requires re-trial within seventy days after the mandate is issued. 18 U.S.C. § 3161(e). Various continuance motions filed by both the government and the defense caused the delay of over a year. The longest delay, however, was occasioned by an (h)(8) continuance for the purpose of ensuring "continuity of counsel." The continuance, however, was not justified by the facts. Vague statements by counsel that a continuance is needed because of scheduling conflicts, vacations and time needed to prepare, may not be the basis for a four month delay. On remand, the case would be re-assigned to a new judge to decide whether the dismissal should be with, or without prejudice.

United States v. Gonzales, 137 F.3d 1431 (10th Cir. 1998)

The prosecutor's statement that he could not prepare for trial in the allotted time was not an adequate basis for granting an ends-of-justice Speedy Trial continuance. The prosecutor offered no specifics and the trial itself only lasted three days. The trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion to dismiss. The lower court would have to decide on remand whether the dismissal would be with, or without, prejudice.

United States v. Alford, 142 F.3d 825 (5th Cir. 1998)

The defendant was initially charged in a two-count indictment. Later, eight more counts were added in a superceding indictment. Trial was held within seventy days of the superceding indictment, but this was more than seventy days from the initial indictment. The first two counts, therefore, should have been dismissed.

United States v. Barnes, 159 F.3d 4 (1st Cir. 1998)

Violation of the 70-day Speedy Trial Act requirement necessitated dismissal of the indictment (without prejudice). The court explained various provisions of the Act: (a) § 3161(h)(1)(F) exclusions apply to motions; if the motion requires a hearing, all time up to the date the hearing is conducted is excludable, in addition to thirty days thereafter for a decision on the motion. Excludable time for motions that do not require a hearing is thirty days. All told, there were approximately 120 non-excludable days between arraignment and trial. The government’s argument that the defendant waived the provisions of the Act was rejected by the First Circuit: though the defense may not cause a delay and affirmatively waive the provisions of the Act and then claim a violation, a waiver for a discrete period of time does not negate the requirements of the Act for all time.

United States v. Ramirez, 973 F.2d 36 (1st Cir. 1992)
The trial court properly dismissed the indictment with prejudice in light of the Speedy Trial Act violation. The violation in this case was caused by an eighty-one day delay in ruling on the pretrial motions. Though the offense was serious (500 grams of cocaine), what motivated the court was the fact that the delay was caused by carelessness and a dismissal was necessary as a deterrent measure and to ensure that such delays do not occur in the future. When a delay is caused by the court or the prosecutor, this militates in favor of a dismissal with prejudice.

United States v. Gambino, 59 F.3d 353 (2d Cir. 1995)

The defendant’s trial was severed from the trial of the co-defendants’ trial. Once the co-defendants’ trial ended, the speedy trial clock started running. Also, the fact that the lower court deferred ruling on a Kastigar motion until the conclusion of trial did not toll the statute. In declaring a case complex, the district court may not delay the trial indefinitely: The length of an exclusion for complexity must be not only limited in time, but also reasonably related to the actual needs of the case. The court also notes that a superceding indictment inherits the clock of the original indictment. Finally, the court held that the defendant may not waive the speedy trial act provisions, except in cases where the defendant treats the Act as a game of trial strategy. The court concludes, however, that the failure to dismiss the indictment was harmless error, because the indictment would have been dismissed without prejudice.

United States v. Giambrone, 920 F.2d 176 (2d Cir. 1990)

The trial court did not err in dismissing the indictment with prejudice. The government was “extremely lax” in complying with the Speedy Trial Act. The first indictment was dismissed without prejudice three months after the initial case was set for trial because of the unavailability of the government’s star witness. The second case was handled at a routine pace, but seventy days expired before the case was set for trial. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing with prejudice: “A pattern of disregard for the responsibility to bring criminal cases to trial expeditiously has the potential for nullifying the requirements of the Act, for if the government suffers only dismissals without prejudice on motion of the defendant, it in effect gains successive 70-day periods in which to bring the defendant to trial.”

United States v. Hamilton, 46 F.3d 271 (3rd Cir. 1995)

The government sought to toll the Speedy Trial Act clock because an essential government witness, who was a severed co-defendant, was pleading the Fifth and thus was “unavailable.” This was not proper. A witness who the government may immunize is not “unavailable.”

United States v. Jones, 56 F.3d 581 (5th Cir. 1995)

Almost a year and a half after arraignment, the defendant was tried. Shortly before the first scheduled trial date, which was set three months after the arraignment, a co-defendant moved for a continuance to complete discovery. The motion was never ruled on by the trial court and over a year passed before the trial was held. Shortly before the trial, the court entered an order “memorializing” his granting the continuance motion. This violated the Speedy Trial Act. A motion for a continuance which is pending for over a year does not create excludable time under §3161(h)(1)(F). Also, the court gave no reason why a continuance for a year was necessary under the ends of justice provision, §3161(h)(8)(A).
Two provisions of the Speedy Trial Act were the focus of this case: 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(F) and §3161(h)(1)(J). Under (F), anytime between the filing of a motion and a hearing on the motion is excludable, even if the delay in holding the hearing is unreasonable. (F) also excludes anytime after the hearing during which time the court is “assembling papers,” such as post-hearing briefs. Once all the papers have been received, (J) applies and limits the time in which a decision may be made to 30 days. Any time more than 30 days is not excludable. If no hearing is required by a motion, then (F) only allows for 30 days excludable time to rule on the motion. Henderson v. United States, 476 U.S. 321 (1986). In this case, a motion for a bill of particulars (which did not require a hearing) a motion for a pretrial James hearing (which was never held, and thus did not require a hearing) and a motion in limine, were all covered by the subsection (F) 30 day rule. In calculating the 30 days, the matter is deemed submitted on the last day in which briefs are actually filed. Here, the district court permitted too much time to pass. The court of appeals held that the indictment should be dismissed without prejudice.

United States v. Ortega-Mena, 949 F.2d 156 (5th Cir. 1991)

The defendant filed a Brady motion to which the government responded in one day that there was no exculpatory evidence. Only two days on the clock were tolled by this motion. Also, an “ends of justice” tolling period cannot be predicated on a crowded court docket, even if the court is engaged in a related trial.

United States v. Castle, 906 F.2d 134 (5th Cir. 1990)

The government took more than ten days to transport a prisoner to obtain a mental competency exam. The government complained that this was due to budgetary cuts at the United States Marshall’s office. The Court stated that this is no excuse. The fact that the government acted reasonably was also not an excuse for failing to comply with the Speedy Trial Act provisions.

United States v. Velasquez, 890 F.2d 717 (5th Cir. 1989)

The defendant was arrested on May 16. The indictment was not returned until July 19. The government contended that the 30-day limit prescribed by §3161(b) was tolled because a co-conspirator’s competency was being evaluated during the interim. The Court also sought refuge in the exclusion for “delay resulting from consideration by the Court of a proposed plea agreement,” §3161(h)(1)(I). The Court rejects both excuses: Determining the competency of a co-defendant does not provide an excuse for failing to indict the defendant; and because the plea agreement was never submitted to the Court for consideration, that exclusion also does not apply. The Court goes on to hold that only the substantive count for which the defendant was arrested need be dismissed. Thus, the Court may prosecute the defendant for conspiracy but not the substantive offense for which he was arrested.

United States v. Bigler, 810 F.2d 1317 (5th Cir. 1987)

The failure of the federal government to gain custody of a state prisoner and seek the appointment of a lawyer for him resulted in a violation of the Speedy Trial Act. Excluded from the seventy-day indictment-to-trial period is any period during which the defendant is in state custody awaiting trial on state charges. However, once the state proceedings were concluded, the government delayed in gaining custody of him from the state jurisdiction. Furthermore, the government delayed in finding a lawyer to represent defendant once he was in federal custody.
United States v. Moran, 998 F.2d 1368 (6th Cir. 1993)

The trial court allowed the defendants two weeks to file suppression motions after arraignment. This was not excludable time under the Speedy Trial Act. Moreover, the thirty days which the Act allows for consideration of motions under advisement was exceeded in this case and the excess time should have been counted on the Speedy Trial clock.

United States v. Crawford, 982 F.2d 199 (6th Cir. 1993)

The indictment in this case should have been dismissed because of a Speedy Trial Act violation. A continuance was supposedly granted, but there were no findings made as to the reason for the continuance, or the necessity for the continuance.

United States v. Menzer, 29 F.3d 1223 (7th Cir. 1994)

Following the granting of a mistrial requested by the defense, the government dismissed the indictment and reindicted the defendant on similar charges. The new indictment would proceed under the same speedy trial clock – the clock did not start anew with the new indictment. Thus, the government had seventy days from the date of the granting of the mistrial, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(1)(F), rather than seventy days from the return of the new indictment.

United States v. Dezeler, 81 F.3d 86 (8th Cir. 1996)

The defendant’s attorney withdrew on the 72nd day of the speedy trial clock. This did not stop the clock and because the time had expired prior to the attorney’s withdrawal, there was no basis for denying the defendant’s motion to dismiss the indictment. In calculating the time, the court noted that pursuant to §3161(h)(1)(J), once a motion is taken under advisement, a decision must be reached within thirty days and any time longer than that is not excluded.

United States v. Palomba, 31 F.3d 1456 (9th Cir. 1994)

In the criminal complaint, the defendant was charged with mail fraud. The original indictment, however, did not allege mail fraud. A superceding indictment three months later, added the mail fraud counts. This violated the Speedy Trial Act, 18 U.S.C. §3161(b). Trial counsel’s failure to move to dismiss these charges amounted to ineffective assistance of counsel.

United States v. Clymer, 25 F.3d 824 (9th Cir. 1994)

Over 500 days of non-excludable time could not be justified by a post-trial finding of complexity and the need to satisfy the “ends of justice.” Moreover, the pendency of pretrial motions does not amount to excludable time, unless the pendency of those motions causes delay. Thus, motions which are pending and which are held until trial and which do not cause delay, do not create excludable periods of time. The Ninth Circuit concludes, moreover, that the indictment should be dismissed with prejudice.

United States v. Engstrom, 7 F.3d 1423 (9th Cir. 1993)

After a reversal of the first conviction, the trial court set the case down for trial within the 70-day time limit. Shortly thereafter, however the case was transferred to another district judge which set the case down for trial after the time limit expired. After realizing that the new date was outside the time limit, the judge solicited a motion to continue (which the government filed) and then granted the motion with a conclusory finding that a continuance was needed to serve the ends of justice. This was a violation of the Speedy Trial Act and the conviction was reversed.
The routine setting of dates for the filing of pretrial motions does not toll the Speedy Trial clock. Only where the preparation of motions requires extra time and a request for an extension of time has been granted does the clock stop.

The defendant has the right to a hearing, and to be represented by counsel at that hearing, when the trial court decides to dismiss a case with, or without prejudice, because of a Speedy Trial Act violation.

Three days prior to trial, the government obtained a superseding indictment which added a conspiracy and lengthened another conspiracy. According to United States v. Rojas-Contreras, 474 U.S. 231 (1985), “to avoid prejudicing a defendant, a continuance should be granted where there is a meaningful possibility that a superseding indictment will require an alteration or adjustment in the planned defense.” With regard to the counts that were added or altered in the superseding indictment, the convictions were reversed.

An “ends of justice” continuance needs to be specifically limited in time and specific findings must be made in the record to justify such a continuance under 18 U.S.C. §3161(h)(8)(A). At the commencement of this 33-defendant case, the district court declared that it was a complex case and came within the “ends of justice” exclusion. Though discovery deadlines were later established, the continuance was indefinite in nature. No defendant objected to these orders. The appellate court acknowledged that because of the complexity of the case, some continuance was necessary. However, an indefinite period of excludable time was not justified. The Ninth Circuit also notes that the monitoring of the limitations period is not the exclusive burden of the district judge, the government shares the responsibility for the speedy trial enforcement. As a result of the delay in this case, the convictions were reversed and the district court would need to determine whether a dismissal of the indictment would be with or without prejudice.

The trial court dismissed some but not all counts of an indictment. The defendant was reindicted on the counts which were previously dismissed. All counts of the indictment are subject to the clock which was running on the original indictment.

When granting a dismissal without prejudice, the trial court must set forth its findings with regard to the factors enumerated in 18 U.S.C. §3162(a)(2). The failure to do so requires a remand.

The only basis for the court’s §3161(h)(8) continuance was a crowded court docket; that is, that the court was engaged in another trial and could not try this case when initially set. This basis for stopping the Speedy Trial clock is specifically outlawed by §3161(h)(8)(C).

The defendant entered a guilty plea, but before sentencing, was permitted to withdraw the plea. The speedy trial clock’s 70-day period began the day the plea was withdrawn. Several weeks later, a new attorney was appointed. The new attorney requested a continuance for two months in order to prepare the defense. The court granted this motion, but made no findings regarding the ends of justice. Even though the attorney requested the continuance, the trial court’s failure to make contemporaneous ends of justice findings required that the conviction be set aside and the indictment dismissed – without prejudice.

United States v. Saltzman, 984 F.2d 1087 (10th Cir. 1993)

Though the defendant waived his rights under the Speedy Trial Act to be indicted within 30 days of arrest, this was ineffective. Absent findings by the judge that the ends of justice would be served, the defendant’s waiver did not protect the public’s right to the speedy disposition of criminal cases. A dismissal without prejudice, however, was the appropriate remedy.

United States v. Miranda, 835 F.2d 830 (11th Cir. 1988)

A local rule of the Southern District of Florida requires counsel to notify the Court of developments in the case. The defendants failed to comply with this local rule. The Eleventh Circuit holds that this does not preclude a dismissal on speedy trial grounds.

United States v. McNeil, 911 F.2d 768 (D.C.Cir. 1990)

There is no need that the defendant prove that he suffered actual prejudice in order to obtain relief for a violation of the Speedy Trial Act if the violation resulted from the trial court’s erroneous exclusion of time under §3161(h)(3) because of the supposed absence or unavailability of an essential witness. Unlike §3161(h)(8) which specifically requires a finding of prejudice, under §3161(h)(3), there is no requirement that the Court balance the ends of justice against the right of the defendant to a speedy trial. The Court went on to find that the unavailable witness was in fact “not essential” and thus there should have been no excludable time.
STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Smith v. United States, 133 S Ct. 714 (2013)

If a defendant claims that he withdrew from a conspiracy outside the statute of limitations period, he has the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the evidence, this defense.

United States v Delia, 906 F.3d 1212 (10th Cir. 2018)

Defendant’s health care fraud offense targeted a state Medicaid program, not a federal agency or the federal government and therefore the Wartime Suspension of Limitations Act (5 U.S.C. § 3287) did not apply to toll the statute of limitations.

United States v. Ongaga, 820 F.3d 152 (5th Cir. 2016)

Marriage fraud, 18 U.S.C. § 1325(c) is not a “continuing offense” and therefore the five-year statute of limitations applies. Two marriage fraud counts of the indictment in this case were reversed on statute of limitations grounds.

United States v. Tavarez-Levario, 788 F.3d 433 (5th Cir. 2015)

The crime of using a counterfeit immigration document is not a continuing offense and therefore, the 5-year statute of limitations begins to run when the counterfeit document is presented for “use” (in this case, for use in gaining employment).

United States v. Mergen, 764 F.3d 199 (2d Cir. 2014)

The defendant’s cooperation agreement contained ambiguous language about a waiver of the statute of limitations for certain offenses. The Second Circuit held that the ambiguity had to be construed against the government and the statute of limitations barred the prosecution of various offenses not specifically identified in the agreement.

United States v. Grimm, 738 F.3d 498 (2d Cir. 2013)

The defendants were charged with bid-rigging. The conspiratorial agreement occurred more than five years prior to the return of the indictment. Though some of the contract payments occurred within five years of the indictment, the Second Circuit held that these payments were not sufficient to bring the conspiracy within the statute of limitations.

United States v. Rojas, 718 F.3d 1317 (11th Cir. 2013)

The offense of marriage fraud is completed when the marriage occurs – it is not a continuing offense. Therefore, the statute of limitations begins to run on the date of the marriage.

United States v. Franco-Santiago, 681 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2012)

The defendant was charged with being a member of a conspiracy that participated in five armed robberies. Only the last robbery occurred within five years of the return of the indictment. The government agreed that the defendant had no involvement in the first three robberies. The evidence was sufficient to demonstrate his participation in the fourth. After he was convicted of the conspiracy count, the government conceded at sentencing that he was not involved in the fifth robbery. The First Circuit concluded that the defendant only agreed to participate in one conspiracy and that he could not be held responsible for participating in the overarching conspiracy that involved several other defendants and the other four robberies. Though he agreed to join the conspiracy, the conspiracy that he agreed to join only involved the one robbery that occurred outside the statute of limitations. NOTE: The United States Supreme Court, in Musacchio v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1737 (2016), held that raising a statute of limitations defense for the first time on appeal was too late and not subject to plain error review.

United States v. Jenkins, 633 F.3d 788 (9th Cir. 2011)

The government must submit a sworn affidavit when it seeks to toll the statute of limitations pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3292 (tolling the limitations period during the government’s effort to obtain evidence in a foreign country). See also United States v. Trainor, 376 F.3d 1325 (11th Cir. 2004).

United States v. Borman, 559 F.3d 150 (3rd Cir. 2009)

The statute of limitations expired on one of the conspiracy counts in the indictment. The conspiracy to receive bribes from contractors in exchange for an award of public benefits was accomplished when the last bribe was received. The fact that the bribes were disguised as “loans” and that the defendant refused to repay the “loan” on a later date did not extend the life of the conspiracy.

United States v. Turner, 548 F.3d 1094 (D.C. Cir. 2008)

Determining when a conspiracy ends is important in numerous contexts, including a defense that the statute of limitations has expired; a claim that a co-conspirator statement was not made during the course of a conspiracy and, as in this case, in deciding which version of the Sentencing Guidelines to apply (i.e., a possible Ex Post Facto claim). In this case, the conspirator forged certain documents that enabled them to receive money as the beneficiary of another person who died. The forgery and receipt of the money occurred in 2001. When questioned by the police about these events in 2006, the conspirators lied. The D. C. Circuit held that the conspiracy ended in 2001 when the objects of the conspiracy were achieved. See generally Grunewald v. United States, 353 U.S. 391 (1957); Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U.S. 440 (1949); Lutwak v. United States, 344 U.S. 604 (1953).

United States v. Seale, 542 F.3d 1033 (5th Cir. 2008)

The defendant allegedly committed the offense of kidnapping in 1964. He was indicted in 2007. Though at the time of the offense, there was no statute of limitations, because kidnapping was considered to be a capital offense in 1964, when the death penalty was eliminated as an option for kidnapping cases (in 1972), the five-year limitations period became applicable. 18 U.S.C. § 3282. The five-year statute of limitations barred the prosecution in this case. EN BANC RECONSIDERATION GRANTED, 550 F.3d 377 and this decision was affirmed without opinion by the en banc court which divided 9-9.

United States v. Grenier, 513 F.3d 632 (6th Cir. 2008)
The defendants faxed a false statement to the SEC on July 10. A copy of the statement was mailed and received by the SEC on July 11. The statute of limitations period began on July 10.

United States v. Kozeny, 541 F.3d 166 (2d Cir. 2008)

If the government intends to toll the statute of limitations pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3292 to facilitate the acquisition of evidence in a foreign country, the government must apply for tolling prior to the expiration of the statute of limitations.

United States v. Gunera, 479 F.3d 373 (5th Cir. 2007)

The agents were aware of the defendant’s presence in the country more than five years prior to the filing of the charges and the illegal reentry charge, therefore, was barred by the statute of limitations. The defendant reentered illegally and then applied for temporary protected status. More than five years later, the charges were filed.

United States v. Arias, 431 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2005)

The defendant introduced sufficient evidence to warrant an instruction on the law of withdrawal from the conspiracy – and thus a statute of limitations defense. The defendant, a doctor, was charged with conspiring with others to defraud Medicare. More than five years prior to the indictment, he wrote a letter to Medicare, stating that he no longer would be a Medicare provider at the facility where the crime was being committed, thus signaling his withdrawal from the conspiracy to other conspirators who had previously relied on his participation in the program as a means to commit the crime.

United States v. Atiyeh, 402 F.3d 1354 (3rd Cir. 2005)

The government’s request to toll the statute of limitations for the purpose of obtaining foreign evidence (18 U.S.C. § 3292) must be made before the statute of limitations otherwise expires.

United States v. Trainor, 376 F.3d 1325 (11th Cir. 2004)

The government may apply for suspension of the statute of limitations when it seeks evidence located outside the country. 18 U.S.C. § 3292(a)(1). In this case, the Eleventh Circuit holds that an unsworn application submitted to a foreign government does not adequately establish that evidence of the charged offense is actually located in the foreign country. Therefore, because the government did not make an adequate showing under § 3292(a)(1), the indictment in this case was dismissed on statute of limitations grounds.

United States v. Dunne, 324 F.3d 1158 (10th Cir. 2003)

Making a false statement is not a continuing offense for statute of limitations purposes.

United States v. Reitmeyer, 356 F.3d 1313 (10th Cir. 2004)

When a defendant files a false claim with the government, the clock starts ticking on the statute of limitations. A Major Fraud Act violation is not a continuing offense that includes the period of time when the fruits of the crime are received. The offense makes it a crime to “execute a scheme” to defraud. The execution occurs when the fraudulent claim is submitted.
United States v. Midgley, 142 F.3d 174 (3rd Cir. 1998)

As part of a plea agreement, the government dismissed certain counts of the indictment. Three years later, while in custody, the defendant filed a successful collateral attack of his conviction. The Third Circuit held that the government could not reinstate the dismissed counts in anticipation of a new trial. The Statute of Limitations had expired in the interim and the government was not entitled to have the trial court simply “re-instate” the dismissed counts, notwithstanding the expiration of the statute of limitations. Nor was the statute “equitably tolled” during the pendency of the defendant’s incarceration absent a showing of intentional inducement or trickery by the defendant.

United States v. Gilbert, 136 F.3d 1451 (11th Cir. 1998)

In a bankruptcy fraud concealment of assets case, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the debtor is discharged or denied a discharge. 18 US.C. § 3284. Here, the court held that if the defendant converts the corporate bankruptcy from a Chapter 11 to a Chapter 7, thus precluding discharge, the statute of limitations begins to run at that time. The prosecution in this case was barred by the statute of limitations.

United States v. Meador, 138 F.3d 986 (5th Cir. 1998)

The statute of limitations is tolled during the time that the government is pursuing evidence in a foreign country. 18 U.S.C. § 3292(b). The tolling period ends when “final action” is taken by the foreign country in response to a request for assistance. In this case, the court decided that “final action” occurs when the foreign government regards its efforts as complete and communicates that fact to the United States.

United States v. Grimmett, 150 F.3d 958 (8th Cir. 1998)

The defendant filed a pretrial motion to dismiss on the grounds that she withdrew from the drug conspiracy more than five years prior to the return of the indictment. The trial court denied the motion, holding that this was a fact question for the jury. The Eighth Circuit reversed: First, the court held that withdrawal from a drug conspiracy starts the statute of limitations clock, even though no overt act is required under 21 U.S.C. § 846. Second, the court held that a statute of limitations defense may be raised by a pretrial motion. If there are no disputed factual issues, then the judge should rule on the motion. If there are disputed factual issues (for example, whether the defendant continued to participate in the conspiracy), the judge may resolve the factual issue, or may defer to the trial jury.

United States v. Spector, 55 F.3d 22 (1st Cir. 1995)

The defendant urged the prosecutor not to indict him, agreeing in writing to an extension of the statute of limitations for several days. As the next deadline approached, the defendant again agreed in writing to an extension of the statute, but, while the government orally agreed, no agent of the government ever signed the extension. The terms of the agreement provided that it would be effective upon being signed by the parties. The government’s failure to sign this agreement was a fatal error and, when the indictment was returned several weeks later, it was barred by the statute of limitations.
A superseding indictment which supplants a timely filed indictment, still pending, is itself regarded as timely vis-a-vis a given defendant so long as it neither materially broadens nor substantially amends the charges against the defendant. In other words, the superseding indictment relates back to the filing date of the original indictment so long as a strong chain of continuity links the earlier and later charges.

The defendant was charged with wire fraud and conspiracy. He later entered a guilty plea to CTR violations (as the law was understood pre-\textit{Ratzlaf}). The plea was accepted and the defendant was sentenced. Seven years later, after the Supreme Court decided \textit{Ratzlaf v. United States}, 510 U.S. 135 (1994), the defendant successfully moved to withdraw his guilty plea. The government re-indicted the defendant on the original charges. The Second Circuit concluded that the re-indictment was barred by the statute of limitations.

The defendants were charged with bankruptcy fraud. 18 U.S.C. §152. Generally, the statute of limitations is five years. However, for cases involving concealment of a bankruptcy estate’s assets, the limitations period does not begin until the debtor has been discharged, or a discharge is denied. 18 U.S.C. §3284. In this case, the defendants were charged with making a false declaration in order to conceal assets. This is a different offense than concealing assets. Therefore, the §3284 extended limitations period did not apply, and the limitation period began at the time the false declaration was made, which was more than five years prior to the return of the indictment. The indictment should have been dismissed. Criminal statutes of limitations are liberally construed in favor of repose, and no offense should be construed as continuing a limitations period unless the explicit language of the substantive criminal statute compels such a conclusion, or the nature of the crime involved is such that Congress must assuredly have intended that it be treated as a continuing one.

The conspiracy count in this mail fraud indictment was time-barred. The statute of limitations in a conspiracy case runs from the last overt act committed by a member of the conspiracy. In this case, though there was a mailing within the previous five years, the mail was posted by someone other than the defendant. This mailing was sufficient to support a mail fraud conviction, but was not an overt act committed by a member of the conspiracy. Therefore, the conspiracy count was time-barred.

A statute of limitations defense may be decided by the trial court prior to trial pursuant to Rule 12(b), Fed.R.Crim.P. In this case, the defendant was charged with obstruction of justice and conspiracy to defraud the United States by creating fictitious documents to resurrect a civil action. The only act that occurred within five years of the indictment, however, was the filing of a notice of appeal which challenged the dismissal of the civil action (despite the use of the fraudulent documents). The filing of the notice of appeal was not an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy and, therefore, the statute of limitations barred this prosecution.

Defendant was charged with false representations of social security numbers. The last time the defendant presented the false social security number to a payor was more than five years prior to the indictment. Though the payor continued to rely on that number thereafter, the offense is not a “continuing crime” and therefore the statute of limitations barred this prosecution. See Toussie v. United States, 397 U.S. 112 (1970). The offense is complete when the last representation is made, not when the number is last used by someone to whom the representation is made.

United States v. Edwards, 968 F.2d 1148 (11th Cir. 1992)

Because there was conflicting evidence as to when a drug importation offense was completed, the trial court committed reversible error in refusing to give an instruction on the statute of limitations defense.
STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

(Rule of Lenity)

In a 4-1-4 decision, the Supreme Court held that the term “proceeds” in § 1956 refers to “profits” and not gross receipts. Thus, in a gambling case, such as this case, the money that is paid to runners and other participants/employees of the gambling activity does not amount to a transaction in proceeds, because this money does not represent the profit of the gambling venture. Justice Stevens, who provided the fifth vote, limited the holding (perhaps) to cases in which the money is not derived from the sale of contraband. The decision relies principally on the Rule of Lenity.

Employing numerous rules of statutory construction, the Court concluded that the term “tangible object” in 18 U.S.C. § 1519 refers only to tangible objects that record or preserve information (such as hard drives and flash drives). It does not apply to tangible objects that do not record or preserve information (such as under-size fish, as in this case), that are concealed or destroyed, in order to prevent law enforcement from investigating a crime.

United States v. Valle, 807 F.3d 508 (2d Cir. 2015)

The defendant, a NYC police officer was given access through his job to a law enforcement website that allowed him to engage in certain investigations, including access to the NCIC. At home, at night, however, he accessed these sites to track down women who he fantasized raping. He never actually engaged in any such criminal conduct with the women. (See the discussion of this case in the topic Conspiracy). He was prosecuted for violating the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act. One provision of that Act provides that it is a crime to “intentionally access[] a computer without authorization or [to] exceed authorized access and thereby obtain[] information ... from any department or agency of the United States.” 18 U.S.C. § 1030(a)(2)(B). The defendant was, in fact, permitted to access the NCIC, so his access to that site, alone, would not be a crime, unless his access for an unauthorized purpose is included in the criminal provision. The Second Circuit holds that the statutes is ambiguous, because “exceeds authorized access” could mean either that the defendant’s “purpose” for accessing the site was beyond authorization, or it could mean that the defendant accessed a site that he was not authorized to access. Invoking the rule of lenity, the Second Circuit held that a conviction for accessing a site that the defendant was authorized to access, but not for a proper purpose, is not an offense under the CFAA.

United States v. Kaluza, 780 F.3d 647 (5th Cir. 2015)

18 U.S.C. § 1115 provides that, “Every captain, engineer, pilot, or other person employed on any steamboat or vessel, by whose negligence . . . the life of any person is destroyed . . . shall be imprisoned.” The issue in this case, which dealt with the Deepwater Horizon catastrophe, was whether this statute applied to every person employed by a steamboat. The Fifth Circuit, applying various rules of statutory construction – principally the rule of lenity – concluded that the statute was ambiguous and held that the statute does not apply to every employee. The court reasoned that if the statute applied to every person, the terms “every captain, engineer, pilot” would be entirely superfluous.

United States v. Ashurov, 726 F.3d 395 (3rd Cir. 2013)

It is a crime under 18 U.S.C. §1546, to knowingly making a false statement under oath a document required by the immigration laws. It is also a crime “to knowingly present any such document which contains any such false statement.” This latter section is ambiguous regarding whether the document must be under oath. The word “such” suggests that the document must be under oath, but that second law only refers to a “false statement” being contained in the document. The Third Circuit, applying the Rule of Lenity, holds that the latter provision also requires proof that the document was made under oath.

United States v. Miller, 12-6501 (6th Cir. 2013)

The defendant, a partner in a real estate investment partnership applied for a loan and falsely stated that the other partners had authorized the loan. This was false. Nevertheless, this did not constitute the crime of identity theft. The identity theft statute requires that the defendant “use” the identifying information to commit a crime (including making a false statement to a bank). The Sixth Circuit, however, relying on the Rule of Lenity, concluded that “use” requires that the defendant falsely claim to be the other person, not simply to lie about the other person’s agreement.

United States v. Izurieta, 710 F.3d 1176 (11th Cir. 2013)

The Eleventh Circuit analyzed a provision of the law that makes it a crime to import goods into United States “contrary to law.” 18 U.S.C. § 545. The question the court confronted was “What does ‘contrary to law’ mean?” The government claimed that the violation of any statute or regulation that governs importing goods is a sufficient foundation for a criminal prosecution. The Eleventh Circuit, however, rejected this broad approach and held that in order to support a criminal prosecution, there must be a showing that Congress intended that a violation of the particular regulation would support a criminal prosecution. Where it is clear that a regulation was designed only to establish civil obligations and penalties, it may not be used to support a criminal prosecution.

United States v. Costello, 666 F.3d 1040 (7th Cir. 2012)

The girlfriend of an illegal alien was not guilty of harboring under § 1324(a)(1)(A)(iii) simply by virtue of the fact the alien/boyfriend lived in her apartment. There was no evidence that she concealed the boyfriend, or shielded him from detection. The court spends considerable time discussing the definition of the word “harboring” and concludes that it means more than simply providing a place to live. Various dictionaries were consulted, as well as Google in this endeavor to figure out the meaning of the word.

United States v. Introcaso, 506 F.3d 260 (3rd Cir. 2007)

 Firearms, such as short-barreled shotguns, that were manufactured prior to 1900, are not covered by the registration act, if the ammunition designed for that weapon is not being manufactured, nor is readily available. The government argued in this case that the ammunition designed for that weapon is not being manufactured, but regular (and easily available) twelve-gauge shells worked with this particular gun. The Third Circuit held that the statute was ambiguous – it was not clear if the exemption only applied if the ammunition originally designed for the weapon was not available, or if any ammunition that could be used with the weapon was not available. Applying the Rule of Lenity, the court held that the conviction could not be sustained.
United States v. Llanez-Garcia, 735 F.3d 483 (6th Cir. 2013)

The defense attorney was sanctioned for issuing a Rule 17(c) subpoena that directed the witness to produce documents on a particular date that was not a scheduled court date. No court approval of the early compliance was obtained. The district judge held that the lawyer engaged in misconduct. The Sixth Circuit reversed the sanction order. The case includes a discussion of the conflicting rules regarding the issuance of a Rule 17(c) subpoena. Because the central issue was whether the attorney engaged in conduct that merited sanctions, the court did not conclusively decide whether a Rule 17(c) subpoena necessarily requires court approval. The Sixth Circuit held that this may be decided by district courts through local rules, standing orders, or on a case-by-case basis. For purposes of this case, however, the issue was sufficiently debatable that the attorney did not engage in intentional misconduct and was not acting in bad faith.

United States v. Bahamonde, 445 F.3d 1225 (9th Cir. 2006)

The Ninth Circuit concluded that the federal regulation that requires the defendant to serve notice upon the United States Attorney, or a designated Department of Homeland Security official before serving a subpoena on an agent employed by Homeland Security is unconstitutional. The regulation, 6 C.F.R. § 5.44 et seq., requires a defendant to notify the U.S. Attorney of the desired testimony, in as much specificity as possible. The Ninth Circuit held that the lack of reciprocity in this discovery provision violated the Due Process concept announced in Wardius v. Oregon, 412 U.S. 470 (1973). A similar regulation governs subpoenas issued to DOJ employees, including FBI and DEA agents. 28 C.F.R. § 16.21.
TAPES AND TRANSCRIPTS

United States v. Adams, 722 F.3d 788 (6th Cir. 2013)

A judge may not alter a transcript of a difficult-to-understand or unintelligible tape that changes its meaning without prompting by either party. A judge may direct that certain portions of a transcript be removed, because the tape is unintelligible, or may make minor changes that do not alter the meaning. In this case, the judge made over 1,000 changes in the transcripts.
TAX OFFENSES

In this tax evasion prosecution, the district court erroneously instructed the jury that the defendant could be found guilty of tax evasion if he unreasonably believed that he had no obligation to pay taxes. That is, in order to establish the element of willfulness, the government must prove that the defendant _in fact_ knew that he was evading taxes. A good faith misunderstanding of the law or a good faith belief that one is not violating the law negates willfulness, whether or not that claimed belief or misunderstanding is objectively reasonable.

_*United States v. Boitano_, 796 F.3d 1160 (9th Cir. 2015)

The defendant, an accountant, had not filed his tax returns in several years. At a scheduled meeting with an IRS agent, he handed over several years worth of returns that included false information. The agent stamped the returns as having been received. The returns were never “filed” however in the IRS system. The defendant was prosecuted for providing false information on a tax return. Because the return was not filed, however, he could not be prosecuted under 26 U.S.C. § 7206.

_*United States v. Miner_, 774 F.3d 336 (6th Cir. 2014)

In order to convict a defendant of obstructing or impeding the due administration of federal tax laws (26 U.S.C. § 7212), the government must prove that the defendant was aware of and tried to thwart a pending IRS action and not simply routine administrative procedures such as those required to accept and process tax filings in the ordinary course. The court noted that § 7212’s language is identical to 18 U.S.C. § 1503, and the construction of section 1503 in _United States v. Aguilar_, 515 U.S. 593 (1995), requires an awareness of the proceeding that the defendant is allegedly endeavoring to obstruct.

_*United States v. Coplan_, 703 F.3d 46 (2d Cir. 2012)

Various counts of conviction in this tax evasion and Klein conspiracy case were reversed on sufficiency grounds. The case involved the prosecution of various employees of Ernst & Young for devising and implementing fraudulent tax shelters.

_*United States v. Vallone_, 698 F.3d 416 (7th Cir. 2012)

In this lengthy opinion, the Seventh Circuit reviews the law governing good faith defense to charges of tax evasion. Though upholding the convictions, the court provides an extensive discussion of _Cheek_ and the type of evidence that is admissible to prove that the defendant had a belief that his conduct was legal. See in particular, the discussion on page 449 – 460 of the opinion.

_*United States v. Litwok_, 678 F.3d 208 (2d Cir. 2012)

In order to be guilty of tax evasion, the government must show (1) the existence of a substantial tax debt, (2) willfulness of the nonpayment, and (3) an affirmative act by the defendant, performed with intent to evade or defeat the calculation or payment of the tax. The failure to file a return is not, in itself, sufficient to prove tax evasion. In this case, the defendant’s tax evasion conviction on one count was affirmed but on two other counts the evidence was insufficient to show an affirmative act other than the failure to file.

United States v. Herrera, 559 F.3d 296 (5th Cir. 2009)

The evidence in this case was insufficient to convict the defendant of tax evasion based on the transfer of money from his account into the account of his wife shortly after he was advised that his accounts would be levied. There was insufficient evidence that he orchestrated the transfers or that he willfully shifted the funds to avoid the levies.

United States v. McKee, 506 F.3d 225 (3rd Cir. 2007)

The evidence was insufficient to prove that the defendant owed taxes during certain years, and consequently there was insufficient evidence to support a conviction for failure to file.

United States v. Kayser, 488 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2007)

When a defendant is indicted for tax evasion based on failing to report income, he may introduce evidence that there were unreported deductions that offset the income. He may do so, even if the “deductions” were reported in some different manner in the false tax return. In other words, a defense at trial which disproves the existence of a deficiency need not be consistent with the tax return that was filed. The defendant is also entitled to have the jury properly instructed on this theory.

United States v. Kassouf, 144 F.3d 952 (6th Cir. 1998)

Title 26 U.S.C. § 7212(a) makes it a crime to corruptly endeavor to obstruct and impede the due administration of tax laws. The Sixth Circuit concludes that the government must prove (and allege) that there was a pending proceeding or investigation by the IRS of which the defendant was aware. It is not enough that the defendant engages in conduct that operates to conceal current financial transactions in order to evade tax and prevent IRS detection and scrutiny. Thus, a person who destroys financial records – before being told that his tax returns are to be audited – has not violated this statute.

United States v. Marsh, 144 F.3d 1229 (9th Cir. 1998)

The defendants were charged with endeavoring to impede and obstruct the IRS. The IRS investigation was being handled out of the Northern District of California. The defendants’ obstructive conduct, however, occurred in other districts. Venue was only appropriate where the “endeavor to obstruct” occurred, not where the impact was felt.

United States v. Peters, 153 F.3d 445 (7th Cir. 1998)

This case contains a comprehensive discussion of the rules that regulate when the IRS civil division is required to cease an audit when the Service determines that a criminal prosecution is indicated. In short, “If, during an examination, an examiner discovers a firm indication of fraud on the part of the taxpayer, the tax return preparer, or both, the examiner shall suspend his activities at the earliest opportunity without disclosing to the taxpayer, the taxpayer’s representative, or employees the reason for such suspension.”

United States v. Silkman, 156 F.3d 833 (8th Cir. 1998)
A formal tax assessment that has become administratively final is prima facie evidence of the asserted tax deficiency, and if unchallenged, it may suffice to prove this element of a tax evasion crime. But the assessment is only prima facie proof of a deficiency. The assessed deficiency may be challenged by the defendant accused of tax evasion, and the issue is one for the jury.

United States v. Adkinson, 158 F.3d 1147 (11th Cir. 1998)

The government failed to prove that the defendants were guilty of a Klein conspiracy. The government’s theory was that the defendants conspired to impair the IRS by concealing income from bank loans and by failing to file or filing false tax returns. But the government failed to point to a single conversation among the defendants regarding taxes, much less demonstrating an intent to avoid the payment of taxes. The mere failure to report the receipt of money as income does not, by itself, establish a Klein conspiracy. Moreover, the failure to pay taxes must be shown to be the object of the conspiracy, not merely a foreseeable consequence of some other conspiratorial scheme. If impeding the IRS is only a collateral effect of an agreement, rather than one of its purposes, than a conviction for a Klein conspiracy cannot stand. In this case, the entire focus of the government’s case was the allegation that the defendants engaged in a bank fraud scheme (this aspect of the case was reviewed in another decision, 135 F.3d 1363 (11th Cir. 1998)). The fact that the defendants endeavored to conceal their supposedly ill-gotten gains does not automatically translate into a Klein conspiracy.

United States v. Regan, 937 F.2d 823 (2d Cir. 1991)

The trial court erred in failing to give a particularized good faith defense instruction keyed to the specific facts of this case. The defendants, charged with tax fraud, argued that the transactions were not taxable under their reading of a particular section of the Tax Code. The trial court failed to identify that section in the instructions and failed to explain that if the defendants’ theory was believed, they were entitled to an acquittal.

United States v. Gaumer, 972 F.2d 723 (6th Cir. 1992)

Pursuant to Cheek, the defendant should have been given an opportunity to read tax protestor articles into the record, as well as portions of the Congressional Record and old Supreme Court decisions in order to show the basis of his belief that he was not obligated to pay taxes.

United States v. Eaken, 995 F.2d 740 (7th Cir. 1993)

In order to convict a person of tax evasion, the government must prove that the defendant acted willfully, that there was a tax deficiency and an affirmative act constituting an attempt to evade or defeat the payment of the tax. In considering defendant’s motion for bond pending appeal, the appellate court, while finding evidence that the defendant was engaged in embezzlement and that he attempted to hide the funds he had embezzled, failed to find any effort to engage in acts designed to defeat the payment of taxes. Attempts to hinder detection of the local crime of embezzlement are not the same as attempting to evade the payment of taxes. Thus, bond pending appeal was appropriate.

United States v. Harris, 942 F.2d 1125 (7th Cir. 1991)

The defendant received money from a wealthy man who explained that he enjoyed giving money to young women. The woman was the older man’s mistress. The failure to report this “income” could not be the basis of a tax evasion charge: she could not form the requisite intent to violate the law, because the law was far from clear that such payments amounted to income.

United States v. Reynolds, 919 F.2d 435 (7th Cir. 1991)

The defendant was charged with filing a false tax return. He filed a 1040EZ form when he in fact had income other than earned income. However, every statement on the 1040EZ form was truthful, though all his unearned (illegal) income was not listed. This was not sufficient to sustain a false tax return charge. The specific false statement – Line 7 – was not, technically, false. He could be found guilty of tax evasion, but not filing a false return.

United States v. Sinigaglio, 942 F.2d 581 (9th Cir. 1991)

26 U.S.C. §6103(h)(5) provided that the Treasury Department must (upon request) provide information to the defendant about any prospective juror who has been investigated or audited by the IRS if the defendant is charged with a tax offense. The audit history may not be arbitrarily limited by the government (as in this case to the past six years). Though the court does not hold that this is reversible error per se, it was reversible in this case where the voir dire did not eliminate the significant risk of prejudice.

United States v. Salerno, 902 F.2d 1429 (9th Cir. 1990)

The defendants embezzled millions of dollars from the casino where they were employed. The result of their embezzlement was that the casino ended up filing inaccurate tax returns. The defendants were prosecuted for aiding and abetting the preparation of a false tax return. However, there was no evidence that the employees’ embezzlement activities were designed to have the casino file false tax returns. Therefore, the government failed to prove the willfulness requirement of the offense.

United States v. Harting, 879 F.2d 765 (10th Cir. 1989)

The trial court erred in failing to give an instruction on good faith in a prosecution for failing to file federal income tax returns. The defendant presented evidence that he believed that he was not required to file a return and that he was acting in good faith.

United States v. Morris, 20 F.3d 1111 (11th Cir. 1994)

The trial court committed reversible error by failing to instruct the jury on the good faith defense, as requested by the defendant in this prosecution for filing a false income tax return. The court’s instruction defining the terms “willfully” and “knowingly” was not an adequate substitute. Among other things, the charge did not explain that a good faith – yet objectively unreasonable – belief in the correctness of the return, would be a complete defense.

United States v. Lankford, 955 F.2d 1545 (11th Cir. 1992)

In defense of tax evasion charges, the defendant sought to introduce expert evidence that the money he received could be characterized as a gift rather than a loan. The trial court committed reversible error by excluding this evidence. Such expert testimony is highly relevant to the assessment of whether the defendant willfully violated the tax laws.

United States v. Pritchett, 908 F.2d 816 (11th Cir. 1990)

The evidence was insufficient to support the defendant’s conviction for conspiracy to evade income taxes. The government failed to show that the defendant was aware that his conduct which aided a co-defendant in hiding assets resulted in the other party’s attempt to evade taxes.
United States v. Kaiser, 893 F.2d 1300 (11th Cir. 1990)

The defendant pled guilty to charges of tax evasion and to a charge of filing a false tax return. The fact that he pled guilty did not prevent him from later challenging the conviction on the basis of double jeopardy. Whether the double jeopardy clause barred prosecution for both offenses could be determined from the face of the indictment.
TELECOMMUNICATIONS, ALTERING EQUIPMENT

United States v. Harrell, 530 F.3d 1051 (9th Cir. 2008)

In the context of deciding what amounts to contraband (and thus not available to be returned to a claimant pursuant to Rule 41(g)), the Ninth Circuit canvasses the various applicability of 18 U.S.C. § 1029(a)(7), which makes it a crime to knowingly and with intent to defraud, produce, traffic in, or possess a telecommunications instrument that has been modified or altered to obtain unauthorized use of telecommunications services. Various devices possessed by the defendant in this case did not qualify as altered devices under the scope of the statute.
TELEPHONE HARASSMENT

United States v. Tobin, 480 F.3d 53 (1st Cir. 2007)

The defendant was convicted of violating 47 U.S.C. § 223(a)(1)(D), which makes it a federal crime to make or cause the telephone of another repeatedly or continuously to ring, with intent to harass any person at the called number. The defendant, a Republican Party official, hired a company to use technology to continuously call the phone numbers of various Democratic Party offices, thereby tying up their lines on election day. The First Circuit reversed the conviction: the instructions to the jury did not require proof that the called party was harassed, as opposed to inconvenienced. There must be proof of an intent to cause an adverse reaction in the called party in order to violate this statute as written. On the second trip to the First Circuit, the court held that the mens rea element of the offense requires proof that the defendant had the purpose of harassing (and not just knowledge that the probable consequences of his conduct would be harassment). United States v. Tobin, 552 F.3d 29 (1st Cir. 2009).
THEFT OFFENSES

United States v. Osborne, 886 F.3d 604 (6th Cir. 2018)

In order to be convicted of a § 641 offense, the property stolen must belong to the U.S. government. In this case the money appropriated by the defendant had been given to the contractor who helped recruit soldiers for the Air National Guard. Once the money was given to the contractor, it lost its federal government character, because even if it were not all spent on recruitment activities, the money was not returned to the government.

United States v. Jiminez, 705 F.3d 1305 (11th Cir. 2013)

18 U.S.C. § 666 is often applied to employees of an entity that receives federal funds and who accepts money (either a bribe or a gratuity) to benefit the payor. The statute also applies, however, to agents of an entity that receives federal funds who misapplies money of the entity. In this case, the defendant encouraged his employer to purchase books that, unbeknownst to his employer, were actually written by the defendant’s wife. The defendant failed to reveal his conflict of interest. The Eleventh Circuit held that this was neither an honest service fraud offense, or a § 666 violation. Skilling foreclosed the theory that a conflict of interest could be the basis for an honest services fraud prosecution. The § 666 offense was invalid, because the defendant was not the person responsible for spending the funds of the agency.

United States v. Aleynikov, 676 F.3d 71 (2d Cir. 2012)

The defendant, a computer programmer, developed sophisticated “source codes” for the high frequency trading system used by Goldman Sachs. He was offered another job and took the source code with him. He was charged with economic espionage (18 USC § 1832(a)) and a violation of the National Stolen Property Act (18 USC § 2314). The Second Circuit reversed the conviction on both counts. The Stolen Property Act outlaws the theft of “goods, wares, merchandise, securities or money” and the court decided that the source code does not qualify as “goods, wares or merchandise.” Relying on the decision in United States v. Bottone, 365 F.2d 389 (2d Cir. 1966), the court held that a person who memorizes a secret formula and sells it to a competitor has now stolen goods. See also Dowling v. United States, 473 U.S. 207 (1985) (Stolen Property Act does not apply to interstate bootleg record operation); United States v. Brown, 925 F.2d 1301 (10th Cir. 1991); United States v. Stafford, 136 F.3d 1109 (7th Cir. 1998). In short, the interstate transportation of stolen intangible property does not violate § 2314. (The court also noted that transporting the source code on a flash drive did not alter the result, because the flash drive was not the item alleged to be stolen). Turning to the Economic Espionage Act, the code requires that the defendant transmit information “that is related to or included in a product that is produced for or placed in interstate or foreign commerce.” Because the source code was not produced for, or placed in, interstate commerce (though it obviously facilitated Goldman Sachs’ interstate sales), it could not be the focus of a § 1832 offense.

United States v. Kapelioujnyj, 547 F.3d 149 (2d Cir. 2008)

The evidence in this § 2315 case was insufficient to prove that the defendant was aware that the stolen property he was enlisted to help sell was worth at least $5,000.00. The government also failed to prove the interstate commerce element of the offense. Though the stolen property had traveled between New York and New Jersey, the defendant was not, at that time, a member... of the conspiracy to sell the stolen property. The fact that the seller was attempting to get others to help sell the stolen item cannot be imputed to the defendant, who was never shown to have entered a conspiracy to sell stolen property across state lines.

United States v. Lazarenko, 564 F.3d 1026 (9th Cir. 2009)

The defendant obtained money by fraud and deposited it into a specific bank account. Later, money was transferred out of that bank account. The government however, failed to introduce evidence that the same money that went in, was later transferred out. Under 18 U.S.C. § 2314, the government may not simply prove that money went into an account that was obtained by fraud, and sometime in the future money was transferred out, without some effort to trace the money to show that the stolen money was the money that crossed a state line.

United States v. Sargent, 504 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 2007)

The defendant, an employee of the Postal Service, stole certain forms from the Postal Service, the result of which was that customers were not required to actually pay for certain bulk mailings. The forms themselves, however, did not have value in excess of $1,000 and consequently, the theft did not involve a thing valued at more than $1,000.00. The court noted that the forms were not negotiable instruments.

United States v. Moore, 504 F.3d 1345 (11th Cir. 2007)

The defendants, husband and wife, were charged with theft of Veterans Benefits. After the death of the mother of one of the defendants, the VA continued to direct deposit his benefits into an account which the defendant then converted to his own use. The defendants contended that they did not realize that they were not entitled to continue to receive the benefits upon the death of the veteran. That is, they claimed that they lacked knowledge that the money was “government funds” that they were using and that they did not take the money “willfully.” Based on the evidence presented during the government’s case in chief, there was simply no evidence that the defendants were aware that they were not entitled to use the money, or continue to receive benefits based on the death of the veteran.

United States v. Ligon, 440 F.3d 1182 (9th Cir. 2006)

In a case involving theft of government property, the government must prove that the stolen item has “value.” 18 U.S.C. § 641. The government failed to prove that the stolen Indian artifacts had value. The government’s argument – that the items were shown to have archaeological value – was not sufficient.

United States v. Morgan, 393 F.3d 192 (D.C. Cir. 2005)

The defendant was the recipient of a stolen computer. He received it in Maryland and had no connection with the computer until he received it in Maryland. He was charged with receiving stolen property. Venue in D.C. was improper.

United States v. Stafford, 136 F.3d 1109 (7th Cir. 1998)

1734
The defendants carried across state lines codes that enabled them to cash checks. These codes were written down on a piece of paper. This does not amount to a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2314. That offense requires the interstate transportation of stolen property, securities, or money. The piece of paper with a code written on it is not stolen property, though it enabled the defendants to steal money.

United States v. Scanzello, 832 F.2d 18 (3rd Cir. 1987)

An indictment which charged the defendant with conspiring to steal goods from interstate shipments can only support a misdemeanor conviction because of the failure to allege the value of the stolen goods.

United States v. Klingler, 61 F.3d 1234 (6th Cir. 1995)

18 U.S.C. §641 makes it a federal crime to steal, convert, or embezzle any federal money. 18 U.S.C. §649 makes it a federal crime to fail to deposit federal money which is required to be deposited according to the Secretary of the Treasury. The defendant in this case was a customs broker, a private person who was licensed by the Customs Service to collect duties from importers of goods. She collected the money and stole it. At no time was the money the property of the federal government, despite the fact that it was collected by the defendant to be paid to the federal government. Therefore, the defendant could not be prosecuted under either of these statutes.

United States v. Howard, 30 F.3d 871 (7th Cir. 1994)

The defendant obtained a loan from the SBA to rebuild his ice cream parlor. The SBA was named as a loss payee on the fire insurance policy. The defendant later removed the SBA from the insurance policy. The shop later burned down and the defendant kept the proceeds from the insurance company. This did not support a conviction under 18 U.S.C. §641. A defendant cannot convert government property when that which is converted is merely a security interest held by the government.

Ward v. Lockhart, 841 F.2d 844 (8th Cir. 1988)

Defendant attempted to sell stolen musical instruments. When questioned by the police officer at the pawnshop, the defendant indicated that he had his credentials in his car. Rather than returning to the police officer, the defendant sped away. The defendant also made contradictory statements to the police about his acquisition and possession of the musical instruments. Nevertheless, the Eighth Circuit holds that the circumstantial evidence was insufficient to sustain the defendant’s conviction for burglary.

United States v. Johnson, 812 F.2d 1329 (11th Cir. 1986)

It is not a proper jury instruction to state that the jury would be “justified” in inferring that the possessor of stolen property committed the theft unless the possession is “explained to the satisfaction of the jury.” This is an improper charge which shifts the burden of proof.
THREATENING THE PRESIDENT

United States v. Lincoln, 403 F.3d 703 (9th Cir. 2005)

Title 18, U.S.C. § 871 makes it a crime to threaten the President of the United States. In this case, the defendant’s letter did not amount to a “true threat” either in, or out, of context. The court characterized the defendant’s letter as a crude means of exercising his First Amendment rights.
THREATENING COMMUNICATIONS

In order to be guilty of making an unlawful interstate threat, it is not enough that the defendant’s rants (on Facebook) would be perceived by others as threatening. The government must prove that the defendant intended the statements as threats. There must be subjective intent to threaten the listener, which is not satisfied simply with proof that a reasonable listener would feel threatened.

United States v. Martinez, 800 F.3d 1293 (11th Cir. 2015)

Conviction reversed based on a jury instruction that was erroneous in light of Elonis.

United States v. Houston, 792 F.3d 663 (6th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was convicted based on an instruction that did not comply with the Elonis standard. This was plain error requiring reversal of the conviction.

United States v. Heineman, 767 F.3d 970 (10th Cir. 2014)

Anticipating the decision in Elonis, the Tenth Circuit held that unless there is proof that the defendant subjectively intended to instill fear in the recipient, a conviction for violating § 875(c) may not be sustained. See also United States v. Wheeler, 776 F.3d 736 (10th Cir. 2015) (same).

United States v. Stock, 728 F.3d 287 (3rd Cir. 2013)

The defendant was charged with violating 18 U.S.C. §875. The Third Circuit held that “the word ‘threat’ in § 875(c) encompasses only communications expressing an intent to inflict injury in the present or future.” Thus, a general threat that a person deserves to be killed is not sufficient to prove a threat under §875. In this case, the defendant wrote a post on Craigslist stating that he had been searching for some particular police officer so that he could beat him up, but couldn’t find him. He did not say that the search would continue, or that he had any intent to harm him in the future. However, he did state that he wished that the officer would die. The Third Circuit held that this “wish” was sufficient to satisfy the “future intent” element of the offense. The Third Circuit held that the district court had the authority to determine whether the indictment was sufficient to allege an offense, because the precise “threat” made by the defendant was set forth in the indictment.

United States v. White, 670 F.3d 498 (4th Cir. 2012)

It is a federal crime to transmit interstate “any threat to injure the person of another.” 18 U.S.C. § 875. Several counts of conviction were affirmed in this case, but one count was found to have insufficient evidentiary support, because the “threats” did not show an immediate intent to inflict harm on the recipient.

United States v. Havelock, 619 F.3d 1091 (9th Cir. 2010)

The statute that makes it a federal crime to mail a threatening communication to another person – 18 U.S.C. § 876(c) – requires that the mailing be to a person, not to an institution, or a company. This case was re-heard with the same holding, 664 F.3d 1284 (9th Cir. 2012).
TRANSACTIONAL IMMUNITY

United States v. Castaneda, 162 F.3d 832 (5th Cir. 1998)

The defendant entered into an oral transactional immunity agreement that obligated him to “tell everything he knew” about corrupt practices connected with DUI prosecutions in Brownsville, Texas. The government later indicted the defendant, contending that he did not fulfill his obligation. The Fifth Circuit reversed the conviction: the government failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant materially breached. A breach is not material unless the non-breaching party is deprived of the benefit of the bargain. In this case, the defendant provided considerable information about the corruption scheme. Though the defendant omitted to tell the government certain things, the government received the benefit of its bargain and the relatively insignificant omissions were not sufficient to constitute a breach of the agreement.
TRAVEL ACT

United States v. Zolicoffer, 869 F.2d 771 (3rd Cir. 1989)

The defendant was convicted of a Travel Act offense based on his acts of trafficking in cocaine. However, there was no evidence that the defendant acted or attempted to act after his interstate travel. The mere act of deplaning and entering a terminal cannot be separated from the actual act of travel and thus an essential element of the offense was missing. The defendant must at least do something to further the illegal activity, though the post-travel activity need not be itself illegal.

United States v. Montford, 27 F.3d 137 (5th Cir. 1994)

The defendants sought to avoid the reach of Mississippi gambling statutes by gambling on a boat which traveled outside the three-mile limit. They were prosecuted under the Travel Act for traveling in foreign commerce to accomplish the gambling. They were also prosecuted under 18 U.S.C. §1084. The cruise ship, however, did not travel in foreign commerce because it never traveled to another country, or into another country’s waters.

United States v. Roberson, 6 F.3d 1088 (5th Cir. 1993)

In order to constitute a violation of the Travel Act, the defendant’s conduct must be part of a criminal enterprise, not just an isolated act of criminality, or even one of many sporadic acts. The government failed in this case to prove the existence of an enterprise.

United States v. Holcomb, 797 F.2d 1320 (5th Cir. 1986)

The defendant was the accountant for a business which operated a prostitution ring. There was no evidence that the accountant was aware that the prostitutes traveled across state lines. Consequently, the accountant’s conviction as an aider and abettor of a travel act violation could not be upheld.

United States v. Barry, 888 F.2d 1092 (6th Cir. 1989)

The Sixth Circuit holds that the use of the mails in a purely intrastate mailing is not sufficient to constitute a Travel Act violation. 18 U.S.C. §1952(a) punishes the use of any facility in interstate commerce, including the mail, with intent to commit or facilitate unlawful activity. This does not include the use of the mails which do not cross state boundaries.

United States v. Pollock, 926 F.2d 1044 (11th Cir. 1991)

The evidence failed to support the defendant’s Travel Act conviction. The defendant was stopped and searched on I-75 and was found in possession of two kilograms of cocaine. In order to be guilty of violating 18 U.S.C. §1952, the defendant must travel interstate to promote, carry on, or facilitate, any unlawful activity. “Unlawful activity” is defined as “any business enterprise involving narcotics.” The government in this case failed to prove that the travel from Florida to Georgia establishes the kind of continuous course of conduct required to establish a “business enterprise” as contrasted with casual and sporadic drug involvement. Merely being familiar with the mechanics of the drug trade and the fact that the defendant had a prior drug conviction, is a far cry from establishing that he was engaged in a continuous course of drug business activity.

United States v. Bates, 840 F.2d 858 (11th Cir. 1988)

One single act involving the transportation of narcotics across state lines cannot constitute a “business enterprise” as described in the Travel Act, 18 U.S.C. §1952(a)(3). There must be continuous conduct rather than sporadic casual involvement in illegal activity.
United States v. Jones, 909 F.2d 533 (D.C.Cir. 1990)

Four women were prosecuted under the Travel Act for their participation in a prostitution ring. In order to prosecute someone for using a facility in interstate commerce for the purpose of violating a state law, the prosecution must show the activity was, in fact, unlawful under a specific state law. Furthermore, the government must prove that the defendant had the intent, with respect to each element of the relevant state offense. In instructing the jury in this case, the district court read the prostitution-related statutes of the relevant states, but did not adequately charge the jury, as a state court would, on the elements of those offenses. Because of this failure, all Travel Act convictions in this case were reversed.
TRANSCRIPTS

United States v. Thompson, 482 F.3d 781 (5th Cir. 2007)

The trial court erred in permitting the government to play a silent video, while simultaneously showing a scrolling transcript, even though there was no sound coming from the video. The transcript was based on an audio recording that was made at the time of the transaction, but the audio tape was never played for the jury. Harmless error.

Kennedy v. Lockyer, 379 F.3d 1041 (9th Cir. 2004)

The state trial court’s refusal to provide a transcript of earlier pretrial hearings that preceded the first trial (which resulted in a hung jury) to the indigent defendant violated his constitutional right to due process and required granting a writ. See Britt v. North Carolina, 404 U.S. 226 (1971). Britt is not limited to transcripts of prior trial proceedings.

United States v. Morales-Madera, 352 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2003)

When Spanish language tapes are introduced in evidence, the court should also admit English translated transcripts. The transcripts should be introduced in evidence and the court should not instruct the jury that the tapes, and not the transcripts, are the only evidence.

In great depth, the court reviews the various procedures that have been used around the country in admitting transcripts of undercover tapes. The three approved methods of admitting transcripts: (1) by stipulation of the parties; (2) by the court deciding which of the parties' transcripts is accurate; (3) allowing the jury to consider alternative transcripts offered by both parties. The court also held that the trial court retains the authority to exclude transcripts altogether, or to decline to allow the jury to consider transcripts while deliberating, though the preferred practice is to allow the jury to have the transcript, with appropriate cautionary instructions, during deliberations.

Fullan v. New York State Corrections Commissioner, 891 F.2d 1007 (2d Cir. 1989)

New York State courts require that a free transcript be given only to indigent appellants who proceed pro se or with assigned as opposed to retained counsel. This violates the defendants’ right to equal protection. If someone else pays for an attorney, the State must still pay for the transcript if the defendant is, in fact, indigent.

United States v. Pulido, 879 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir. 1989)

The defendant, proceeding in forma pauperis, sought a free transcript of a prior trial which resulted in a mistrial. The Fifth Circuit holds that there is no burden on the defendant to make a showing of particularized need; rather, the court should take into account the length of time between the proceedings, whether the same lawyer was involved in the prior case as is involved in the pending litigation, and whether there are adequate available alternatives.

Riggins v. Rees, 74 F.3d 732 (6th Cir. 1996)

The defendant, who is indigent, already endured two mistrials. Prior to the third trial, he requested transcripts of the first two trials. The state trial court erred in denying this request.
Offering the court reporter’s tapes was not an adequate substitute. See generally Britt v. North Carolina, 404 U.S. 226 (1971).

United States v. Segines, 17 F.3d 847 (6th Cir. 1994)

The parties could not agree on a transcript of the undercover tapes. During an in camera review of the tape and the government-prepared transcript, the trial judge stated that he couldn’t make out portions of the tape and otherwise indicated that the transcripts were not accurate. Nevertheless, over objection, the court allowed the jury to have the transcripts. This was error. Also, the trial court had permitted the government to introduce a composite tape, and never admitted the original tapes. Nevertheless, during deliberations, the jury asked for the originals, which were furnished to them. This, too, was reversible error: the trial judge had never listened to the originals and they were never admitted into evidence.

United States v. Wilson, 16 F.3d 1027 (9th Cir. 1994)

The transcript in this case was so perforated with missing pages, missing volumes of testimony and an unintelligible pagination system that the conviction was reversed and a new trial ordered.
VENUE

A §924(c) firearm offense can be tried in any district where the underlying crime of violence occurred, even if the gun is not possessed or used in that district. In this case, the defendant kidnapped the victim and carried him through various states. In one state, Maryland, the defendant possessed a gun in connection with the kidnapping. The defendant was tried in New Jersey, however, one of the states in which the kidnapping occurred, but not in which the defendant ever possessed the gun. The Court holds that venue was proper in New Jersey.

United States v. Orona-Ibarra, 831 F.3d 867 (7th Cir. 2016)
The defendant was “found” in Texas by immigration officials. That is where the crime of illegal reentry occurred. Venue was not proper, therefore, in Illinois, where the case was tried. The case had been transferred to Illinois, because that was where he had originally been placed on probation.

United States v. Auernheimer, 748 F.3d 525 (3rd Cir. 2014)
In this Computer Fraud and Abuse Act prosecution, the Third Circuit held that the government failed to prove that the defendant’s offense occurred in New Jersey and therefore, venue for this prosecution was not proven in New Jersey. The venue defect also affected the identity theft count of the indictment.

A cocaine conspiracy existed in Missouri and proceeds from the cocaine sales were obtained in Missouri. The funds were then transferred to Florida where the money was deposited in a bank and withdrawn in a way that violated CTR laws and therefore constituted both §1956 and §1957 money laundering. The defendant was charged in the Missouri District Court with the money laundering activity in Florida; for purposes of the charges in this appeal, she was not charged with participating in the drug sales in Missouri that generated the tainted funds, or with transferring the money from Missouri to Florida. She deposited and withdrew the money in Florida. Venue for the money laundering offenses was not in Missouri. Though 18 U.S.C. §3237(a) provides that for offenses begun in one district and completed in another, such offenses may be prosecuted in any district in which the offense was begun, continued, or completed, the money laundering offenses in this case were begun, continued and completed in Florida.

United States v. Thomas, 690 F.3d 358 (5th Cir. 2012)
Venue for the attempt crime was not proper in Texas. Though the conspiracy offense could be prosecuted in Texas based on the conduct of defendant’s co-conspirators, the attempt offense could only be prosecuted where the defendant took substantial steps toward the commission of the crime.

United States v. Jefferson, 674 F.3d 332 (4th Cir. 2012)
Venue for a wire fraud offense is where a telephone call is made, or the recipient is located, not where the “scheme” is devised. The transmission of the call is the actus reus of the offense.

United States v. Tzolov, 642 F.3d 314 (2d Cir. 2011)

The defendant was charged with securities fraud. The only connection to the Eastern District of New York was the fact that he flew through JFK Airport on the way to meeting with some of the investors who were defrauded. The Second Circuit held that this did not establish venue in the E.D.N.Y.

United States v. Smith, 641 F.3d 1200 (10th Cir. 2011)

Venue for a false statement prosecution is where the statement was made. In this case, the government sought to prosecute the defendant in the jurisdiction that was the subject matter of the false statement. The government argued that there was a ‘substantial contacts” test for venue. The Tenth Circuit rejected this theory.

United States v. Foy, 641 F.3d 455 (10th Cir. 2011)

Venue for an attempt crime is not proper in the district where other people involved in the attempted offense engage in the preparatory conduct if the defendant himself does not engage in such conduct in that district. Venue by imputation is appropriate in a conspiracy case, but not in an attempt case.

United States v. Clenney, 434 F.3d 780 (5th Cir. 2005)

Venue in this kidnapping case was not proper in the district of the child’s primary residence, or the residence of his mother. The court rejected the government’s argument that in a case of international parental kidnapping, venue is proper in the district where the parent (whose parental rights were violated) resides.

United States v. Ramirez, 420 F.3d 134 (2d Cir. 2005)

Venue in New York was not proper in this visa and mail fraud case. The defendant submitted documents to the Department of Labor in New York which falsely certified that certain aliens had highly specialized knowledge and that they would be hired by the defendant’s employer. These applications were then submitted with a visa petition to the INS in Vermont. The Second Circuit held that the submission of the applications in New York was merely preparatory to the charged offense of visa fraud.

United States v. Strain, 396 F.3d 689 (5th Cir. 2005)

Venue in this fugitive harboring case was not proper in the Western District of Texas. Although the defendant was aware that there was a warrant for the fugitive, there was no act of harboring that occurred in the district where the trial was conducted. The mere failure to disclose a witness’s whereabouts does not constitute harboring a fugitive. There must be some affirmative act of concealment, or aiding the fugitive in his fugitivity. After rehearing the case, the Fifth Circuit further held that granting a judgment of acquittal was an appropriate (albeit not necessarily the exclusive) remedy. The court recognized that a remand for trial in the appropriate venue was an alternative remedy. 407 F.3d 379.
United States v. Morgan, 393 F.3d 192 (D.C. Cir. 2005)

The defendant was the recipient of a stolen computer. He received it in Maryland and had no connection with the computer until he received it in Maryland. He was charged with receiving stolen property. Venue in D.C. was improper.

United States v. Salinas, 373 F.3d 161 (1st Cir. 2004)

Proper venue for a passport fraud prosecution is in the district where the defendant made the false statement to the Postal Service employee in the process of applying for the passport. Venue is not proper in the district where the passport was processed for issuance.

United States v. Wood, 364 F.3d 704 (6th Cir. 2004)

The government failed to prove venue with regard to several of the mail fraud counts in this case. Though the scheme to defraud was centered in the district where the charges were brought, the actual mailings involved in the challenged counts did not start, end, or move through that district.

United States v. Carter, 130 F.3d 1432 (10th Cir. 1997)

Failure to instruct on venue, when requested, is reversible error unless it is beyond a reasonable doubt that the jury's guilty verdict on the charged offense necessarily incorporates a finding of proper venue. Where a defendant is charged in a substantive count and the defendant is never present in the district (and the jury is instructed on a constructive possession theory), the failure to instruct on venue may (as here) be reversible error.

United States v. Marsh, 144 F.3d 1229 (9th Cir. 1998)

The defendants were charged with endeavoring to impede and obstruct the IRS. The IRS investigation was being handled out of the Northern District of California. The defendants’ obstructive conduct, however, occurred in other districts. Venue was only appropriate where the “endeavor to obstruct” occurred, not where the impact was felt.

The defendants were charged with placing adulterated and misbranded food products into interstate commerce. The corporate headquarters were located in Pennsylvania; the manufacturing operation was located in the Northern District of New York. They were prosecuted in the Eastern District of New York on the theory that they made phone calls and sent letters to the Eastern District in ordering the main ingredients for the products. The acts of introducing the adulterated juice into interstate commerce were not committed in the Eastern District or caused by them to be committed while they were in the Eastern District. The Second Circuit concludes that because the offense did not begin, continue, or end in that district, reversal was required. Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §3237(a), the government failed to adequately establish venue in the Eastern District of New York.
United States v. Frederick, 835 F.2d 1211 (7th Cir. 1987)

Venue for a witness tampering prosecution is in the district in which the judicial proceeding at which the witness was to testify is located. It does not matter where the conduct of tampering with the witness occurs.

United States v. Brakke, 934 F.2d 174 (8th Cir. 1991)

18 U.S.C. §1501 makes it a crime to obstruct a process server. Venue for this offense is only where the obstruction occurs, not where the action is pending which is obstructed. In this respect, §1501 differs from other types of obstruction offenses, such as §1503 and §1512, both of which permit prosecution in the jurisdiction where the proceeding which was obstructed was pending.

United States v. Corona, 34 F.3d 876 (9th Cir. 1994)

If a conspiracy is hatched in Nevada, but the substantive offenses are committed in California, the prosecution cannot obtain venue over the substantive offenses in Nevada.

United States v. Miller, 111 F.3d 747 (10th Cir. 1997)

The trial court erred in failing to instruct the jury that the burden of proving venue was on the government. The defendant was charged with being a member of a conspiracy in Wyoming. The defendant’s only conduct occurred in Montana. The evidence suggested that another member of the conspiracy committed overt acts in Wyoming. The co-conspirator, who pled guilty, lived in Wyoming and purchased cocaine from the defendant in Montana. While the evidence may have supported a conviction, the jury must make that decision where the defendant requests an instruction on venue.
VERDICT FORM

United States v. Gonzales, 841 F.3d 339 (5th Cir. 2016)

Relying in part on the decision in Randolph, below, the court held that a jury’s verdict that a defendant was guilty of murder could not be sustained, even though was sufficient evidence to support guilt on a Pinkerton theory (though not on a personal theory), because in a special interrogatory, the jury expressly found that he was guilty on a personal theory, not Pinkerton. This case has a lengthy discussion of the use of special interrogatories in criminal cases.

United States v. Randolph, 794 F.3d 602 (6th Cir. 2015)

The defendant was charged with being a member of a drug conspiracy with various members of his family. On the verdict form, the jury was asked to first mark whether the defendant was “guilty” or “not guilty” of the conspiracy charge and then, “If you unanimously find that a particular controlled substance was not involved in the offense [i.e., cocaine, crack cocaine, marijuana], mark ‘none’ on the appropriate special verdict form.” The jury returned a verdict of guilty against Randolph, but marked “none” beside each of the three drugs. The Sixth Circuit held that this amounted to an acquittal, because the jury had to find that the conspiracy had as its object at least one of the drugs. This is not a case in which there are inconsistent verdicts (which generally do not require a reversal). This was one count of the indictment for which the jury apparently found insufficient evidence with regard to one of the elements of the offense.

United States v. Ramirez-Castillo, 748 F.3d 205 (4th Cir. 2014)

The jury was provided a verdict form that answered whether certain essential elements were proven, but the verdict form did not ultimately provide an answer to the question whether the defendant was guilty or not guilty. In fact, the verdict form did not even include all the essential elements of the offense (possession of a prohibited item in a correctional facility). This was plain error that required setting aside the conviction.

United States v. Amaya, 731 F.3d 761 (8th Cir. 2013)

The verdict form did not provide a box for the jury to indicate “guilty” or “not guilty” in connection with a money laundering conspiracy count but directed the jurors, if they found the defendant guilty to then answer what the object of the conspiracy was. When the jury returned the verdict, the judge realized the error and then polled the jury, and the jury confirmed that they had found the defendant guilty on that count. Nevertheless, the judge granted a Rule 33 New Trial Motion on the basis of this irregularity. The Eighth Circuit affirmed. The polling of the jury is not an appropriate substitute for the jury returning a unanimous verdict in open court.

United States v. Jones, 664 F.3d 966 (5th Cir. 2011)

Though the trial court properly defined the mens rea element of the crimes, the verdict form incorrectly asked the jury to decide whether the defendant “knew or should have known” that services that were billed were not actually provided. This was reversible error.
United States v. Barrett, 870 F.2d 953 (3rd Cir. 1989)

The trial judge instructed the jury that they could return a verdict of guilty, guilty of a lesser-included offense, or not guilty. The verdict form, however, only provided for a verdict of guilty or not guilty. Thus, when the jury returned a verdict of guilty, it was not possible to determine whether they were convicting him of the charged offense or the lesser-included offense. This requires reversal of the conviction.

United States v. Perez, 129 F.3d 1340 (9th Cir. 1997)

When the police went to one defendant's apartment to arrest him, he was sitting on the couch. When he stood up, a gun was discovered where he had been sitting. This does not satisfy Bailey's standard for use of a gun. With regard to another defendant, the indictment charged him with using three guns. The sentence would be dramatically different if the defendant used an assault weapon, versus a pistol. In this situation, the trial court must submit a special verdict form to the jury to determine which gun(s) they unanimously agreed the defendant used.
VIENNA CONVENTION

Osagiede v. United States, 543 F.3d 399 (7th Cir. 2008)

Though the Supreme Court, in Sanchez-Llamas v. Oregon, 548 U.S. 331 (2006) held that suppression of evidence was not a remedy for a violation of the Vienna Convention’s requirement (Article 36) that the consulate of a foreign defendant be advised when the defendant is arrested, the opinion did not foreclose the possibility that a defendant could successfully mount an ineffective assistance of counsel claim if, as here, his attorney failed to insist on notification of the consulate. In this case, the consulate could have provided assistance that might have had an impact on his sentence. A remand to develop the facts was required.
VIOLENCE IN AID OF RACKETEERING

United States v. Banks, 514 F.3d 959 (9th Cir. 2008)

The trial court improperly instructed the jury on the relationship between the defendant’s act of violence and the enterprise. 18 U.S.C. § 1959. It is not enough for the defendant to be a member of a gang and to engage in an act of violence. There must be a connection between his act of violence and his status in the gang.
WILDLIFE OFFENSES (LACEY ACT)

United States v. Hughes, 795 F.3d 800 (8th Cir. 2015)

If wildlife is hunted in violation of state law and transported across state lines, it is a misdemeanor unless the market price of the item is more than $350, in which case it is a felony. “Market price” is the price that a willing buyer would pay a willing seller on the open market. In this case, however, the trial court instructed the jury to determine if the offense was a misdemeanor or a felony there were other measures of market price, including the cost of guide services. This was erroneous and required that the conviction be set aside.

United States v. Romano, 137 F.3d 677 (1st Cir. 1998)

The Lacy Act (16 U.S.C. § 3373) outlaws, among other conduct, purchasing wildlife which the purchaser knows were taken in violation of state law. In this case, the question was whether a person could be convicted of this offense if he purchases guiding and outfitting services to facilitate a taking of wildlife that, if effectuated, would be in violation of state law. The court, construing three different provisions of the law, concludes that this is not an offense under the Act.
WIRETAP EVIDENCE

The Supreme Court holds that a delay in sealing recorded communications may result in suppression just as a total failure to seal such recordings may necessitate suppression of the evidence. Furthermore, the Supreme Court holds that the government’s explanation for failure to seal the recordings promptly must provide an actual reason for the delay and must also explain why the failure must be deemed excusable. The Court went on to hold that a misunderstanding of the law—a misunderstanding as to when the recordings must be sealed—may provide an adequate explanation justifying a failure to seal.

United States v. Carey, 836 F.3d 1092 (9th Cir. 2016)

The police had a lawful wiretap to listen to “T-14” which was believed to be Escamilla’s phone. After a few days, however, the police realized that someone else was using that phone and the calls—though drug-related—were not related to Escamilla’s drug conspiracy. The Ninth Circuit holds that the “plain hearing” exception to the warrant requirement applies. As in the case of a search, the police do not suffer the consequences of the exclusionary rule if incriminating calls are heard by police who are lawfully listening to a intercepted calls. But, also consistent with “plain view” jurisprudence, once the police realize that they are listening to calls that were not the basis for the probable cause showing (or the wiretap order), they must stop listening and seek a new wiretap order. The fact that the wiretap order authorized the interception of people “as yet unknown” did not authorize the continued monitoring of people who were not believed by the agents to be part of the same Escamilla drug conspiracy.

United States v. Dahda, 853 F.3d 1101 (10th Cir. 2017)

This case discusses at some length the jurisdiction of a judge to issue a wiretap order when the tapped phone is a cell phone and the user leaves the jurisdiction or the state. The Court concludes that if the Wiretap Order, consistent with the statute, authorizes interception of cell phones by a mobile listening device outside the jurisdiction, that is permissible, but an Order may not authorize the interception of a cell phone by a stationary listening post that is outside the jurisdiction.

United States v. Scurry, 821 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016)

When a wiretap is challenged on the basis of the procedures used by law enforcement, the court will order suppression if the violation related to a core concern of the wiretap statute. However, when a challenge is made to the facial validity of the wiretap order, the review is more mechanical: either the order is valid, or it is not. In this case, the wiretap application failed to identify by name the DOJ official who approved the wiretap. This is a facial defect that required suppressing the wiretap evidence.

Gennusa v. Canova, 748 F.3d 1103 (11th Cir. 2014)

A suspect and her attorney went to a police station to be interviewed. Prior to the interview, the attorney and the suspect were placed in an interview room (the suspect was not in custody) and were not warned that their conversation would be taped. The Eleventh Circuit held that monitoring the conversation violated the Fourth Amendment rights of the two individuals and that a § 1983 action could be brought, because the deputies were not entitled to qualified immunity for this obvious violation of the Fourth Amendment and the attorney-client privilege.

United States v. Glover, 736 F.3d 509 (D.C. Cir. 2013)

The D.C. Circuit holds that a judge in one district has no authority to authorize the installation of an electronic listening device in another district. Additionally, this is a “core concern” of the Wiretap statutes and therefore suppression is the appropriate remedy. Finally, there is no good faith exception to the exclusionary rule for violations of this jurisdictional limitation on a judge’s authority.

United States v. North, 735 F.3d 212 (5th Cir. 2013)

In the initial panel opinion, the court held that if neither the cell phone, nor the listening post is within a particular district, that district court may not authorize a wiretap warrant. Later, the court withdrew that opinion and authored a new decision (10/24/13) suppressing the wiretap evidence on the basis that there was insufficient minimization.

United States v. Lomeli, 676 F.3d 734 (8th Cir. 2012)

The failure in a wiretap application to identify the DOJ official who approved the application, as well as the officer who was making the application rendered the wiretap application defective. Moreover, the good faith exception to the exclusionary rule for wiretap application defects does not apply in this case (even though the proper official at DOJ had, in fact, authorized the wiretap). The Eighth Circuit does recognize a good faith exception in some cases, though other Circuits have held that there is no good faith exception to the exclusionary rule.

United States v. Simels, 654 F.3d 161 (2d Cir. 2011)

Wiretap evidence that has been ruled inadmissible may be used by the government to impeach the defendant during cross-examination.

United States v. Amanuel, 615 F.3d 117 (2d Cir. 2010)

The state law enforcement agents failed to comply with the order that authorized wiretap intercepts of a pager. The state judge ordered that the intercepts be recorded digitally, but instead, the police simply maintained a written log of the intercepted images on the pager. The police also failed to properly seal the recorded information. Only a limited exclusionary rule applies pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 2518(8)(a), though. Just the intercepts are suppressed, not the fruits of those intercepts, including investigative leads and warrants that were based on information learned from the intercepts.

United States v. Larios, 593 F.3d 82 (1st Cir. 2010)

Agents learned that the defendant and others were intending to conduct a drug deal in a hotel room. Without a warrant, the agents installed concealed an audio/video recording device in the room. At one point, the defendant and another conspirator were in the room without any undercover agent and their conversation was recorded. The First Circuit held that the defendant did not have an expectation of privacy in the statements he made while in the hotel room and therefore Title III did not apply. 18 U.S.C. § 2510(2) defines an “oral communication” as “any communication uttered by a person exhibiting an expectation that such communication is not subject to interception under circumstances justifying such expectation.” This definition parallels the Fourth Amendment jurisprudence of expectation of privacy. Because the defendant did not have an expectation of privacy in the hotel room, which he occupied for a brief period of time for the sole purpose of dealing in drugs, he did not have an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in the conversations he had in the room during the drug deal. The court does cite several cases from other jurisdictions that held that a defendant did have an objectively reasonable expectation of privacy in this situation, but distinguished those cases. See, e.g.,

United States v. Nerber, 222 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2000); United States v. Padilla, 520 F.2d 526 (1st Cir. 1975).

United States v. Crabtree, 565 F.3d 887 (4th Cir. 2009)

If a private person unlawfully wiretaps a phone, this evidence may not be used by the government at trial. The government’s argument that it had “clean hands” does not alter the effect of the exclusionary rule, 18 U.S.C. § 2515.

United States v. Rice, 478 F.3d 704 (6th Cir. 2007)

The Leon good faith exception to the exclusionary rule does not apply to Title III wiretap cases. Because suppression is a statutory remedy, the court-made exception to the court-created exclusionary rule in other search cases, does not apply. In this case, the warrant application contained misrepresentations and recklessly-made false statements which, when corrected, negated the necessity requirement for a wiretap. The court also upheld the trial court’s finding that various boilerplate representations about alternative methods were not useful in a wiretap application.

United States v. Staffeldt, 451 F.3d 578 (9th Cir. 2006)

The wiretap statute requires that a warrant be authorized by the Attorney General or his designee and this authorization must be shown to the judge who is asked to issue the warrant. In this case, the government mistakenly presented to the court a memorandum or authorization that had no relationship to the case for which the warrant was being sought (apparently two memoranda of authorization were sent to the wrong AUSA’s in different parts of the country). Because of the facial insufficiency of the application, the evidence should have been suppressed. The court noted that the judge who issued the warrant obviously did not review the contents of the application.

United States v. Yeje-Cabrera, 430 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2005)

The First Circuit devotes several pages to a discussion of the necessity requirement of the wiretap statute, including the standard of review that the court should utilize in reviewing the issuance of the wiretap order. The court ultimately adopts a simple “unitary” standard: “Whether the facts set forth in the application were minimally adequate to support the determination that was made.”

United States v. Gonzalez, Inc., 412 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 2005)
The information in the wiretap affidavit did not satisfy the necessity requirement of the wiretap statute. In addition, the application suffered from a Franks violation. With regard to the Franks violation, the defendants offered sufficient information relating to the false statements and the materiality of the false statements in their pleadings to prompt the trial court to grant a hearing (which the district court did conduct). Regarding the necessity issue, the normal investigative techniques available to the government had not been exhausted; moreover, if traditional investigative procedures were used, there would have been no need for a wiretap. Finally, the court also held that the owners of business property have standing to contest a wiretap employed at the business, even if the owners themselves were not intercepted by the wiretap.

United States v. Coney, 407 F.3d 871 (7th Cir. 2005)

A delay of ten days prior to sealing the wiretap tapes was too long. Though the delay was not justified, it was, nevertheless, harmless and excusable so the evidence would not be suppressed.

United States v. Mora, 821 F.2d 860 (1st Cir. 1987)

The Court of Appeals for the First Circuit provides a comprehensive analysis of the “sealing” requirement of the federal wiretap statute. The Court concludes that the failure to seal the tapes is grounds for suppression unless a satisfactory explanation for the government’s failure is provided. Even if a satisfactory explanation is offered, there must be clear and convincing evidence that there has been no tampering with the tapes. Finally, the government must also prove that the satisfactory explanation illustrates a good faith failure.

In re United States, 10 F.3d 931 (2d Cir. 1993)

A Title III wiretap application may not be reviewed and considered by a Magistrate. Only a District Judge has the authority to grant such orders.

United States v. Gerena, 869 F.2d 82 (2d Cir. 1989)

Prior to utilizing wiretap evidence in a publicly filed brief, the government must give notice to the defendants. If the trial court determines that the defendants will be deprived of a fair trial or that their right to privacy will be unjustifiably infringed, the trial court may order that certain portions of the wiretapped evidence be redacted or sealed.

In re Grand Jury, 111 F.3d 1066 (3rd Cir. 1997)

Individuals who had been illegally wiretapped (by another private party) had standing to challenge the government’s effort to obtain the wiretaps to present to the grand jury. 18 U.S.C. §2515 expressly provides that no illegally obtained wiretap may be used in any proceeding – and this includes the grand jury.

United States v. Quintero, 38 F.3d 1317 (3rd Cir. 1994)

The hectic schedule of an AUSA is not a satisfactory explanation for failing to comply with the sealing requirement of 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(a). In this case, the delay was eighteen days from the expiration of the surveillance until the sealing of the tapes.

Brown v. Waddell, 50 F.3d 285 (4th Cir. 1995)

The police used a pager clone, a device which monitored the pages received by the suspect on his pager. This device was not analogous to a pen register; rather it was more akin to a wiretap and the failure to obtain a proper wiretap authorization required that the evidence be suppressed. The information received on the pager was more than simple telephone numbers. People who paged the suspect often left numeric messages, codes which provided information about the caller or his actions (such as the fact that the caller was “en route”).

United States v. Underhill, 813 F.2d 105 (6th Cir. 1987)

The defendants recorded their own phone calls which were made in connection with their gambling operation. Bets which were placed on the phone were recorded in order to head off any arguments with the bookies and bet-placers. The result was the creation of a “gambling record” which itself is forbidden by state law. The wiretap statute forbids the use of any recordings which are made in violation of the law, whether consensual or not. The Sixth Circuit holds that even though the creation of these tapes did constitute a crime, the tapes would not be suppressed at trial.

United States v. Feiste, 961 F.2d 1349 (8th Cir. 1992)

The trial court suppressed the wiretap evidence because of the failure of the police to immediately seal the tapes, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §2518(8)(a). The government’s excuse for the failure to immediately seal the tapes was more a matter of convenience and the trial court did not err in ordering the tapes suppressed.

United States v. Carneiro, 861 F.2d 1171 (9th Cir. 1988)

The drug agents failed to employ traditional forms of surveillance in this investigation of several suspected participants in a drug trafficking ring. The affidavit in support of a search warrant failed to satisfy the “necessity” requirement of the federal wiretapping statute. In this case, the government had infiltrated the drug ring, had made undercover purchases of drugs, and had identified a number of the participants in the drug conspiracy. Although wiretaps are not to be used only as a last resort, they can not be the initial step in a criminal investigation.

United States v. Simpson, 813 F.2d 1462 (9th Cir. 1987)

The affidavit which was used to obtain a wiretap failed to reveal to the judge that an informant had gained the friendship of the defendant and was able to provide substantial information to the government about the defendant’s co-conspirators. The affidavit’s failure to reveal this information withheld from the judge critical evidence about the necessity of a wiretap and constituted a Franks violation.

United States v. Castillo-Garcia, 117 F.3d 1179 (10th Cir. 1997)

Generalities or statements in the conclusory language of the statute are not sufficient to satisfy the necessity requirement of the wiretap statute. In this case, though the initial wiretap was shown to be necessary, subsequent wiretap applications did not sufficiently establish the necessity for the wiretap. A subsequent Ninth Circuit decision held that this decision applied the wrong standard of review (de novo) for assessing compliance with the necessity requirement and that an abuse of discretion is the proper standard. United States v. Ramirez-Encarnacion, 291 F.3d 1219 (10th Cir 2002).

United States v. Mondragon, 52 F.3d 291 (10th Cir. 1995)

Though the initial wiretap application contained a statement that the wiretap met the necessity requirement (and the judge found this to be the case in the order), a supplemental request omitted to include this requirement, and no finding was made by the judge. This omission rendered the supplemental wiretap defective. The appellate court would not assume that the issuing judge considered the information in the initial application and made appropriate findings.

United States v. Brown, 872 F.2d 385 (11th Cir. 1989)

A state court judge granted a wiretap order pursuant to an application by state authorities. The state law requires that the state applicant set forth a full and complete statement of the action taken by the judge on prior applications for an intercept order. Because of the state agent’s failure to comply with the state law, the federal prosecutor could not use the evidence in a federal prosecution.
WIRETAP OFFENSES (18 U.S.C. § 2511)

United States v. Christensen, 801 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 2015)

A wiretap offense is committed when a person overhears conversations through prohibited means. A wiretap offense is not committed when a person listens to a recording of those conversations that were improperly intercepted.

United States v. Simels, 654 F.3d 161 (2d Cir. 2011)

It is a federal offense to possess any electronic, mechanical, or other device, knowing or having reason to know that the design of such device renders it primarily useful for the purpose of surreptitious interception of wire, oral, or electronic communications. 18 U.S.C. § 2512. However, the device must be capable of being used. Thus, unlike a firearm, the mere fact that the device is designed to achieve this purpose, if it is inoperable the defendant is not guilty of this offense.

United States v. Councilman, 373 F.3d 197 (1st Cir. 2004)

The defendant was an employee of a company that was an intermediary in the delivery of e-mails to its customers. The company’s customers were book dealers. The defendant company was also a rare book seller. The defendant instructed his employees to intercept and review (and then deliver) all e-mails that were sent from Amazon.com to the company’s book dealer customers. The defendant would then try to gain an advantage over Amazon. The government charged the defendant with violating the Wiretap Act. A panel of the First Circuit held that this conduct did not violate the Wiretap Act. The company’s “interception” of the e-mails was not “contemporaneous” with the communication. Re-hearing en banc granted on 10/5/04 and the panel opinion was reversed 418 F.3d 67 (1st Cir. 2005): This did amount to a violation of the Wiretap Act.
WITNESSES

(Access to Government Witnesses)

United States v. Moussaoui, 382 F.3d 453 (4th Cir. 2004)

The Fourth Circuit dealt with a number of issues relating to the defendant’s right to depose and gain access to government witnesses. This case involves an alleged conspirator in the 9/11 terrorist attacks and his efforts to depose enemy combatants being held at Guantanamo Bay. The court also decided that the Compulsory Process Clause enabled the defendant to call these witnesses in his defense.

United States v. Gonzales, 164 F.3d 1285 (10th Cir. 1999)

Although the defense has no right under Rule 16 to interview a witness, it has a right to be free from prosecution interference with a witness’ freedom of choice about whether to talk to the defense. In this case, the district court directed the government to provide to the defense “face-to-face” access to its confidential witnesses. The government then misled the court about the government’s knowledge of the witness’s whereabouts. The Tenth Circuit concludes that excluding the witness’s testimony was not an appropriate remedy. Less severe sanctions, including allowing the witness to be deposed, or recommending disciplinary proceedings against the government attorneys should have been considered.

United States v. Bailey, 834 F.2d 218 (1st Cir. 1987)

The defendant was tried for bribing a juror at a prior trial. In preparing for trial, the defendant sought to interview other jurors to determine the character of the juror who made the accusation. The District Court prohibited the defendant from engaging in these interviews. The Court of Appeals reversed: Borrowing from the analysis of Roviaro v. United States, the court concludes that a balancing approach is needed, and that the interest of the government and the jurors in protecting their privacy is weak as compared with the defendant’s interest in learning what the panel members gleaned from sitting through a lengthy trial with the accuser/juror.

United States v. Carrigan, 804 F.2d 599 (10th Cir. 1986)

The prosecution improperly interfered with the defense counsel’s access to the witnesses. The trial court ordered that the witnesses be available to be deposed by defense counsel. The Tenth Circuit affirms.

Representatives of the government made statements to witnesses which substantially chilled their willingness to discuss the facts with the defense attorneys. The District Court ordered that the witnesses appear to be deposed by the defendant’s counsel.

The District Court ordered the government to provide a list of witnesses with addresses to the court so that a letter could be written over the judge’s signature that explains the witness’ rights and recommends that they cooperate with the attorneys for both the prosecution and the defense. This was necessitated by the government lawyers’ having sent letters to witnesses asking if they wanted to be added to a “list” that was to be submitted to the court of those who did not wish to be contacted by the defendant.
WITNESSES
(Attorneys)

United States v. Kliti, 156 F.3d 150 (2d Cir. 1998)

The defendant’s attorney was a witness to statements made by a key government witness (who the attorney previously represented) that exculpated the defendant. The trial court erred in failing to conduct a hearing to determine whether this “conflict” (i.e., the fact that the attorney was needed as a witness for the defendant) necessitated his removal from the case. When the witness denied making the exculpatory statement, the attorney was barred from offering impeachment evidence, thus depriving the defendant of important evidence in his defense. A remand was required to determine whether the defendant waived his right to conflict-free counsel.
WITNESSES
(Bolstering / Vouching)

SEE ALSO: CLOSING ARGUMENT (IMPROPER VOUCHING)

United States v. Groysman, 766 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2014)

The Second Circuit reversed this health care fraud conviction on the basis of several “egregious” evidentiary errors committed at trial. The defendant was charged with conspiring with a company that supplied durable medical equipment to prepare false invoices. The wholesaler was cooperating and taped many of the conversations, though many were inaudible. The government offered testimony from its case agent for several days at the start of trial. The agent (1) offered inadmissible bolstering testimony by testifying that certain transactions occurred, based only on his interviews of the cooperators – he had no personal knowledge to verify that these transactions occurred; (2) offered a summary chart which was not a summary of voluminous evidence, but simply a recitation of what he was supposedly told by the cooperators, thus violating both the hearsay rules and the bolstering rules and the rule governing the admissibility of summary charts; (3) the use of the agent to summarize the case at the outset was improper because it amounted to opinion testimony. The Second Circuit, as noted above, characterized these evidentiary errors as egregious and supported a plain error standard of review reversal.

United States v. Hill, 749 F.3d 1250 (10th Cir. 2014)

After the defendant’s statement was played in court, the government called an “expert” FBI agent who had training in determining if a person was being truthful or not and he offered his expert opinion that the defendant was not being truthful. Among other reasons, the agent found the defendant to lack credibility because he said, “I swear to God” and other statements that showed that he invoked his belief system, rather than relying on facts to support his protestations of innocence. The Tenth Circuit held that this was reversible error even in the absence of an objection by the defense attorney. Juries are tasked with making credibility decisions, not government experts.

United States v. Certified Environmental Services, Inc., 753 F.3d 72 (2d Cir. 2014)

The government is not permitted to introduce the portions of a cooperating witness’s plea agreement that bolster the witness’s credibility (e.g., the witness promises to tell the truth and will suffer consequences if he does not tell the truth and will only receive the benefit of his bargain if he tells the truth), until the defense challenges the credibility of the witness. Thus, assuming the defense does not question the credibility of the witness during opening statement, the prosecution may not raise the issue during the direct examination of the witness and the prosecution may not bolster the credibility of the witness during the opening statement.

United States v. Johnson, 529 F.3d 493 (2d Cir. 2008)

The DEA agent’s testimony was replete with improper hearsay, opinion, vouching, and argumentative testimony. The agent testified about the course of the investigation, declaring, “We found out that . . .” and “We determined that . . .” The agent related what co-conspirators told him when they were first arrested, to explain what he did next in the investigation. He then explained what “corroboration” meant and explained what he did and learned to corroborate what he was told by informants and co-conspirators. He further explained that he was skeptical of what informants told him until he corroborated what they said and he was then able to ensure that the informants told him the truth. While it may be more interesting to a jury to learn how the police conduct investigations, a substantial amount of this testimony was inadmissible. Because defense counsel did not object, the plain error standard applied and the Second Circuit held that the inadmissible evidence did not meet this standard.

United States v. Brooks, 508 F.3d 1205 (9th Cir. 2007)

Testimony from witnesses about the various steps that were taken to secure a wiretap amounted to a form of improper vouching or bolstering, particularly testimony that judges had approved the wiretap applications.

United States v. Cunningham, 462 F.3d 708 (7th Cir. 2006)

A law enforcement officer testified about all the hurdles that were satisfied in order to obtain a wiretap. This amounted to improper bolstering by implying to the jury that numerous law enforcement officials and agents believed that the defendant was guilty (and that there was probable cause to initiate the wiretap).

United States v. Harlow, 444 F.3d 1255 (10th Cir. 2006)

The prosecutor repeatedly referred to the judge’s role in reducing the co-conspirators’ sentences, thus encouraging the jury to believe that the judge believed the witnesses. This was error, but was cured by the judge’s instruction to the jury.

Earls v. McCaughtry, 379 F.3d 489 (7th Cir. 2004)

The defendant was charged with molesting a six-year old child. There were no witnesses to the events and no physical evidence corroborating the child’s statements. A social worker who interviewed the child and testified as an expert said that she believed the child. This was inadmissible evidence and the attorney’s failure to object amounted to ineffective assistance of counsel. In addition, during the videotape of the child prepared by the social worker, the social worker told the child that she believed her and the defendant should not have done that to her. The attorney’s failure to redact the tape was ineffective assistance of counsel.

Snowden v. Singletary, 135 F.3d 732 (11th Cir. 1998)

Permitting an expert witness to testify that 99.5% of children tell the truth in child abuse cases was a denial of fundamental fairness and in the circumstances of this case, where the child's credibility was the central issue, required setting aside the conviction.

United States v. Sanchez-Lima, 161 F.3d 545 (9th Cir. 1998)

One agent was asked whether he thought another agent was telling the truth. The agent whose veracity was in question was a critical witness relating to the charges in the indictment (assault on a federal officer). Even though the agent/witness’s veracity was challenged when he testified, the government erred by attempting to rehabilitate him by asking another witness whether the challenged witness was telling the truth. Reversible error.
United States v. Dwyer, 843 F.2d 60 (1st Cir. 1988)

It was improper for the trial court to instruct the jury that “although an immunized witness may not be prosecuted for past crimes revealed by his testimony, even an immunized witness is subject to prosecution for perjury if he intentionally lies under oath.” This amounts to a comment on the credibility of the unindicted co-conspirator’s testimony which was given under a grant of immunity.

United States v. Forrester, 60 F.3d 52 (2d Cir. 1995)

A witness claimed that she told the agent about the defendant’s participation in the drug conspiracy and also identified a photograph of the defendant for the agent. The agent then testified that he did not remember the witness saying this, or identifying the defendant. Nevertheless, when asked by the prosecutor, the agent gave his opinion that nothing the witness said in court was inconsistent with her statement at the time of the initial interview. The prosecutor claimed that this opinion testimony was admissible “to aid the jury” under Rule 701. This was erroneous. Far from being “helpful,” the agent’s testimony invaded the traditional province of the jury.

United States v. Fernandez, 829 F.2d 363 (2d Cir. 1987)

The credibility of a government witness was not challenged on cross-examination to the extent justifying the admissibility of a cooperation agreement between the government and a witness on re-direct examination. Only after a witness’s credibility has been challenged is a plea agreement by that witness admissible. In this case, the witness’s credibility was not sufficiently attacked to justify the admissibility of her cooperation agreement.

United States v. DiLoreto, 888 F.2d 996 (3rd Cir. 1989)

The prosecutor vouched for the credibility of one of his witnesses, relying on evidence that was not in the record. This is reversible per se. The prosecutor explained to the jury that the government “does not put liars on the stand.” This requires that the conviction be set aside. In a later opinion, the Third Circuit held that, though it was error to make this argument, such errors are not to be considered reversible per se. United States v. Zehrbach, 47 F.3d 1252 (3rd Cir. 1995).

United States v. Porter, 821 F.2d 968 (4th Cir. 1987)

It is error to admit into evidence a witness’ plea agreement which contains the witness’ agreement to take a polygraph test to verify his trial testimony.

Cooper v. Sowders, 837 F.2d 284 (6th Cir. 1988)

It was improper for an informant to testify that he had been responsible for the conviction of numerous other people.

United States v. Davis, 838 F.2d 909 (7th Cir. 1988)

A co-conspirator testified that three customers were convicted of offenses relating to the marijuana distribution conspiracy about which she was testifying. This improper bolstering testimony was harmless in this case.

Maurer v. Department of Corrections, 32 F.3d 1286 (8th Cir. 1994)

This trial pitted the defendant, charged with “date” rape against the alleged victim. The only issue was who was telling the truth about the encounter in the defendant’s trailer. The prosecutor asked each of the four prosecution witnesses (two of the victim’s friends, and two law enforcement officers) whether the victim “seemed sincere when she said she was raped.” This vouching testimony rendered the trial fundamentally unfair. The prosecutor asked these improper questions only because it was important to bolster the victim’s credibility.

United States v. Cortez, 935 F.2d 135 (8th Cir. 1991)

The government offered the opinion testimony of two police officers that the “snitch” was being truthful. While opinion testimony is admissible to support the witness’s character for truthfulness, the opinions in this case were not based on any foundation. Neither officer had spent a full day with the snitch and neither had participated in the investigation of the snitch. The trial court abused its discretion in admitting this testimony—though it was harmless error.

United States v. Azure, 801 F.2d 336 (8th Cir. 1986)

It is improper to permit an expert witness to testify that in his opinion there is no reason why an alleged victim of child sex abuse was not telling the truth. It is permissible for an expert to testify about a child’s ability to separate facts from fiction, by summarizing medical evidence and giving an opinion as to whether that evidence is consistent with sexual abuse; by discussing various patterns in child sex abuse cases and comparing them with patterns in the case at bar. But that is different from allowing an expert to state whether or not a witness is believable. The latter constitutes an improper invasion into the province of the jury.

United States v. Rudberg, 122 F.3d 1199 (9th Cir. 1997)

The prosecutor repeatedly violated the rule against vouching for his witnesses. First, he asked an FBI agent whether the agent determined that the witness was entitled to a Rule 35 reduction in light of the witness’s substantial assistance, and the agent affirmed that the witness was entitled to this benefit. Next, with regard to one witness, the prosecutor elicited testimony that the witness had previously been denied a Rule 35 because he left out some facts in his debriefing, but this time he was being entirely truthful. Finally, the prosecutor explained to the jury in closing argument that witness’s did in fact receive reduced sentences because of their truthful testimony. Each of these instances amounted to improper bolstering and vouching. The conviction was reversed.

United States v. Frederick, 78 F.3d 1370 (9th Cir. 1996)

The prosecutor improperly bolstered the testimony of a government witness when she argued in closing that the victim’s in-court testimony was consistent with what she told law enforcement agents earlier. The witness’s prior consistent statements were ruled inadmissible on hearsay grounds when they were offered at trial.

United States v. Kerr, 981 F.2d 1050 (9th Cir. 1992)

The prosecutor committed plain error in his closing remarks by repeatedly stating that “he didn’t think” the witnesses were lying; and “he didn’t think the witnesses were hoodwinking” the agents. Even absent objection, these comments necessitated reversing the conviction. The only objection which was made—and was sustained—was when the prosecutor suggested that the judge believed the witness in accepting his plea agreement. The sustained objection, however, was not sufficiently forceful and did not remove the taint of the improper argument.

United States v. Smith, 962 F.2d 923 (9th Cir. 1992)

The prosecutor’s closing argument amounted to plain error. The prosecutor argued that his job was to present the truth to the jury and that he would prosecute anybody for perjury who told a lie. He also stated that the court would not let him do anything wrong. He repeatedly stated that his job was not to secure a conviction, but only to present the truth and to turn over all favorable evidence to the defense. Because the witness for whom the prosecutor was vouching was a critical witness for the government, this was plain error – that is, reversible error, despite the absence of a contemporaneous objection.

United States v. Simtob, 901 F.2d 799 (9th Cir. 1990)

While a government witness was on the stand, the prosecutor offered to immunize the witness for any false statements he may previously have made. Because this witness’s credibility was pivotal in the case, this constituted improper vouching for the testimony of the witness and required reversal of the conviction.

United States v. Shaw, 829 F.2d 714 (9th Cir. 1987)

During opening statement, the prosecutor improperly stated that one of the government’s witnesses was also facing a robbery charge but that the government had agreed “that as long as he is truthful we will present his truthful cooperation to the local prosecutor.” Obviously, during opening statements, this was not a response to an attack on the witness’ credibility. The Ninth Circuit holds that the remark “necessarily implied that the prosecution had some method of determining whether the witness’s testimony was truthful, so that it will know whether to present the witness’s ‘truthful cooperation’ to the local authorities.”

United States v. Eyster, 948 F.2d 1196 (11th Cir. 1991)

On cross-examination, a government witness indicated that certain counts of the indictment to which he pled guilty were false – he was not guilty of the charges to which he pled guilty. On re-direct, the prosecutor suggested that there was a typographical error in the plea agreement and thus, the witness only pled guilty to the charges which he was, in fact, guilty of. This re-direct was erroneous: there was no typographical error. The prosecutor’s questions were based on evidence not in the record and amounted to improper bolstering of the witness. This was reversible error. In assessing whether this was grounds for reversal, the court noted that “the government’s reference to a typographical error was ultimately an outright falsehood designed to mitigate [the witness’] willful perjury.”

United States v. Sorondo, 845 F.2d 945 (11th Cir. 1988)

A law enforcement agent testified that the informant upon which he relied had worked on a number of cases which led to the conviction of well over 100 other defendants. The Eleventh Circuit holds that this is reversible error: “A jury had an obligation to exercise its untrammeled judgment upon the worth and weight of testimony and to bring in its verdict and not someone else’s.” Significantly, the Eleventh Circuit concludes that this testimony constituted plain error. Although the defendant had objected to this testimony, he had objected only on the grounds of relevance which was not the proper objection.

During closing argument, the prosecutor referred to military police officers (witnesses in this case) as “unbiased” and individuals who had “no reason to lie.” The prosecutor also questioned the defense attorney’s challenge of the credibility of these officers stating “I am a United States Army officer, I represent the government.” These statements in closing arguments were prejudicial and inexcusable. These statements of the prosecutor were “foul blows” and necessitated a new trial.
WITNESSES
(Competence of Witness)

Harris v. Thompson, 698 F.3d 609 (7th Cir. 2012)

The trial court’s decision to exclude a defense witness who was 6-years old based on the child’s competence as a witness violated the defendant’s Compulsory Process rights to present evidence in his defense. The child had critical exculpatory evidence and the jury should have been allowed to evaluate the credibility issue. The fact that the child believed in the tooth fairy, Santa Claus and Spiderman did not render him unfit to testify. (Part of the child’s apparent confusion about who was “real” and who was not “real” was the way that questions were posed, which drew a distinction between characters in movies that were cartoons, or animated, and characters who were played by live actors). The state trial court violated the state statute that placed the burden of proving incompetency of a witness on the state, rather than proving competence of witness on the party calling the witness, as the court did in this case. In addition, the court held that the trial attorney provided ineffective assistance of counsel in failing to properly litigate the competency issue and to interview and prepare the child to testify. This case contains an encyclopedic review of Compulsory Process cases.
WITNESSES
(Exclusion of Witness Whose Testimony Was Coerced)

United States v. Dowell, 430 F.3d 1100 (10th Cir. 2005)

In limited circumstances, a defendant may be able to rely on the Due Process Clause to bar the testimony of a witness whose testimony has been coerced improperly by the government. The defendant failed to set forth a sufficient basis for relief in this case, but the court does conclude that circumstances may exist that would entitle a defendant to this relief. The court cites United States v. Gonzales, 164 F.3d 1285 (10th Cir. 1999); People v. Badgett, 895 P.2d 877 (Cal. 1995); LaFrance v. Bohlinger, 499 F.2d 29 (1st Cir. 1974) and State v. Samuel, 643 N.W.2d 423 (Wis. 2002) in support of the principle that a defendant may bar a witness from testifying when he can show that the witness lacks the power of self-determination after having been coerced by the government.
WITNESSES
(Invoking Fifth Amendment)

De LiSi v. Crosby, 402 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 2005)

A witness who waives his Fifth Amendment privilege with regard to a topic in a judicial proceeding, may not later invoke the privilege, even in a separate legal proceeding, on the same topic. In this case, a prosecution witness previously waived his Fifth Amendment rights regarding possible charges of tax evasion. When cross-examined by the defendant at the defendant’s trial, the trial court erred in permitting the witness to invoke his Fifth Amendment rights. Harmless error.

United States v. Wilmore, 381 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2004)

The government’s introduction into evidence of a witness’s grand jury testimony, coupled with the lower court’s restriction of defendant’s cross-examination of that government witness amounted to a violation of defendant’s Confrontation Clause rights and necessitated reversal of the conviction. The witness had testified at the grand jury that she had seen the defendant (charged with being a felon in possession of a gun) in possession of a gun. At trial, she was called as a witness for the government and denied seeing the defendant in possession of the weapon. The government introduced relevant portions of the grand jury testimony and when the witness was confronted by the government with her previous grand jury testimony, she ultimately invoked her Fifth Amendment rights. The judge then instructed defense counsel to avoid asking any questions that would lead to further invocations of the Fifth Amendment. This was erroneous. Because the grand jury testimony was actually introduced in evidence by the government, the defendant could not be limited in his cross-examination of the witness regarding the circumstances of that testimony. More importantly, the introduction of the grand jury testimony amounted to testimony that was not subject to cross-examination, which violated Crawford v. Washington, 124 S.Ct. 1354 (2004).
WITNESSES
(Prosecutor)

United States v. Edwards, 154 F.3d 915 (9th Cir. 1998)

The defendant was being prosecuted for drugs that were found in a black nylon bag in the trunk of a car he was driving. The focus of the defense was that there was no link between him and the black nylon bag (the car was not registered to the defendant). During a break in the trial, the prosecutor and his case agent looked into the black nylon bag and the AUSA found a piece of paper with the defendant’s name on it. The prosecutor then relied on his case agent to present evidence that he was present when the AUSA found the “smoking gun” in the nylon bag. The Ninth Circuit holds that this was erroneous. A mistrial should have been granted and the prosecutor should have become a witness. The advocate-witness rule applies equally when a prosecutor implicitly testifies to personal knowledge or otherwise attains “witness verity” in a case in which he appears as an advocate for the government. Thus, it would be improper for a government attorney who has independent personal knowledge about facts that will be controverted at the trial to act as prosecutor (1) if he uses that inside information to testify indirectly by implying to the jury that he has special knowledge or insight, or (2) if he is selected as prosecutor when it is obvious he is the sole witness whose testimony is necessary to establish essential facts otherwise not ascertainable. Once the jury in this case learned that the prosecutor had found the receipt, it is almost certain that they attributed the authority of the prosecutor’s office to the receipt’s discovery. Reversible error.
WITNESSES
(Prosecutor or Judge Threatening Defense Witnesses)

_Earp v. Ornoski_, 431 F.3d 1158 (9th Cir. 2005)

The petitioner was entitled to an evidentiary hearing on his claim that the state intimidated and threatened a witness he wanted to call at a hearing on his Motion for New Trial. Though the Ninth Circuit made no findings regarding whether this event actually occurred, the defendant proffered an affidavit from the witness and he was at least entitled to an evidentiary hearing in support of this allegation, which, if true, might entitled him to relief. _Chambers v. Mississippi_, 410 U.S. 284 (1973); _United States v. Vavages_, 151 F.3d 1185 (9th Cir. 1998); _Webb v. Texas_, 409 U.S. 95 (1972); _Williams v. Woodford_, 384 F.3d 567 (9th Cir. 2004).

_United States v. Scroggins_, 379 F.3d 233 (5th Cir. 2004)

The court reviewed at length the law relating to threats directed at defense witnesses. Ultimately, the appellate court concluded that the trial court did not err in finding that the defendant failed to prove that his witnesses were intimidated, or induced not to testify. However, the court also held that the trial court could have granted a new trial in the interest of justice in light of the witnesses’ failure to comply with the defendant’s subpoena.

_United States v. Schlei_, 122 F.3d 944 (11th Cir. 1997)

Threats from prosecutors, judges, or law enforcement officers which deter a witness from testifying on behalf of a defendant may violate due process. When the defendant presents evidence to the district court that the government intimidated a defense witness, a trial court must grant a hearing to determine whether the allegations of intimidation are true. If the witness did not testify and the allegations of intimidation are true, no prejudice need be shown. If the witness did testify, a hearing may be necessary to determine if, as a result of a government threat, he withheld evidence favorable to the defendant.

_United States v. Blanche_, 149 F.3d 763 (8th Cir. 1998)

The court discusses the notion that in some circumstances, if a prosecutor or trial judge threatens a witness thereby inducing the witness to invoke his Fifth Amendment rights, the appropriate remedy may be to judicially immunize the witness. This was not appropriate in this case, however.

_United States v. Vavages_, 151 F.3d 1185 (9th Cir. 1998)

The defendant filed an alibi notice, revealing that his wife would support his claim that he was not in the car that contained drugs. His wife was already the subject of an unrelated criminal prosecution and had entered into a plea agreement in that case. The prosecutor called the wife’s attorney and told him that if the wife testified falsely – and he specifically stated that the alibi testimony was considered to be false – he would prosecute her for perjury and the government would withdraw from the plea agreement in her case. The Ninth Circuit held that this type of “threat” violated the defendant’s right to due process. Unnecessarily strong admonitions against perjury aimed at discouraging defense witnesses from testifying deprive a criminal defendant of his Sixth Amendment right to Compulsory Process. _See Webb v. Texas_, 409 U.S. 95 (1972); _United States v. Morrison_, 535 F.2d 223 (3rd Cir. 1976). Equally troubling was the prosecutor’s statement in closing argument that “not one adult” came forward to support the defendant’s alibi claim.

United States v. Viera, 819 F.2d 498 (5th Cir. 1987)

It was reversible error for the prosecutor to advise the defendant’s attorney that if one of the defense witnesses testifies, he would either be prosecuted for complicity or be prosecuted for perjury.

United States v. Foster, 128 F.3d 949 (6th Cir. 1997)

The prosecutor should not have contacted a witness’s attorney and warned him that if the witness testified favorable to the defense, the witness’s immunity would be revoked. The trial judge should have conducted a hearing to determine what effect this threat had on the witness (who was not located by the defense and did not appear at trial).

United States v. Arthur, 949 F.2d 211 (6th Cir. 1991)

The trial court warned a witness that anything he said could be used against him, and later stated, “I think it’s not in your best interest to testify because anything you say may be held against you in another prosecution against you for bank robbery.” The witness then refused to testify. This violated the defendant’s right to due process. While warning a witness may be acceptable, the trial judge should not encourage a witness not to testify. See Webb v. Texas, 409 U.S. 95 (1972). The error was not harmless, because this witness would have corroborated defendant’s defense of mistaken identity.

United States v. Vavages, 151 F.3d 1185 (9th Cir. 1998)

The defendant filed a notice disclosing his intention of relying on an alibi defense and identifying his witnesses. The prosecutor contacted the witness’s attorney and advised him that he did not believe the defendant’s alibi defense and that if the witness testified falsely, the government could bring perjury charges against her and withdraw from the plea agreement in the witness’s own criminal case. The prosecutor had a total of three or four face-to-face and telephone exchanges with the witness’s attorney concerning the possibility of the witness testifying. Neither the prosecutor nor the attorney suggested that any of the exchanges were unprofessional in tone, and the witness’s attorney admitted that he did not feel personally intimidated by the conversations. Nonetheless, the undisputed consequence of the exchanges was that the witness’s attorney advised his client to assert her Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination to avoid a perjury prosecution for what the prosecutor clearly believed would be false alibi testimony. This violated the defendant’s right to due process. See Webb v. Texas, 409 U.S. 95 (1972). The prosecutor’s error was compounded in this case by arguing in closing argument that no adult came forward to support the alibi and even implicitly noted that the supposed alibi witness was actually sitting in the court and never testified.

United States v. Heller, 830 F.2d 150 (11th Cir. 1987)

The government substantially interfered with the defendant’s due process rights in this tax evasion case by advising his accountant that if he did not cooperate with the government, he might find himself to be a co-defendant. Shortly after this warning was issued, the accountant advised the government that he would provide testimony against the defendant. The accountant then falsely testified that the defendant concealed facts from him, the accountant, and that the accountant had not heard of the defendant’s method of accounting and that he did not approve of this method. This was all a fabrication on the part of the accountant who had earlier made statements indicating that he was aware not only of the defendant’s accounting methods but had approved them.
WITNESSES
(Threat Evidence)

United States v. Morgan, 786 F.3d 227 (2d Cir. 2015)
Evidence that the defendant tried to hire a hitman to kill a government witness (informant) was too prejudicial to be probative and should have been excluded at trial pursuant to Rule 403.

United States v. Adams, 722 F.3d 788 (6th Cir. 2013)
The government failed to link up the intimidation of a witness in this vote-buying prosecution to any of the defendants. Admitting this testimony was an abuse of discretion.

United States v. Mayes, 370 F.3d 703 (7th Cir. 2004)
The government offered evidence that a government witness had received an anonymous threat that if he testified, he and his kids would be killed. This evidence should not have been admitted, but it was harmless error.

United States v. Vaulin, 132 F.3d 898 (3rd Cir. 1997)
An informant testified for the government and was asked whether he had ever been threatened while in jail. After objection by the defense, the prosecutor explained at sidebar that he did not mean to imply that the defendants were responsible for the threats, but when questioning resumed and the witness was asked whether the defendants had threatened him, he responded, "Not directly." The prosecutor should not have elicited this testimony in the first place. The supposed purpose -- to explain why the defendant wanted to get a reduction in sentence in exchange for testifying -- did not outweigh the unfair prejudice of this evidence. Harmless error.

United States v. Thomas, 86 F.3d 647 (7th Cir. 1996)
The trial court erred in admitting evidence of anonymous threats made against a witness. The evidence was not admitted for a lawful purpose – that is, to explain some conduct of the witness (such as coming forward late) – but was offered in general to help the jury evaluate the witness’s credibility. Such evidence, however, does not help evaluate a witness’s credibility as much as it impinges on the defendant’s right to a fair trial. Harmless error.

Dudley v. Duckworth, 854 F.2d 967 (7th Cir. 1988)
At the defendant’s state trial, the state asked a witness who was an accomplice of the defendant whether he had received any anonymous threats prior to testifying. The witness stated that he had. Because there was no way to link the anonymous threats to the defendant, this constituted unfair prejudice and required that the defendant’s conviction be set aside.
WORK PRODUCT

SEE: ATTORNEY-CLIENT ISSUES (WORK PRODUCT)
Index of Cases

Cases
A.M. v. Butler, 360 F.3d 787 (7th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 351
Abbott v. United States, 131 S. Ct. 18 (2010) ................................................................. 867
ABC, Inc. v. Stewart, 360 F.3d 90 (2d Cir. 2004) ............................................................ 1349
Abel v. Martin, 380 F.3d 915 (6th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 371
Abels v. Kaiser, 913 F.2d 821 (10th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 93
Abramski v. United States, 134 S. Ct. 2259 (2014) ......................................................... 862, 865
Abu-Jamal v. Horn, 520 F.3d 272 (3rd Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 505
Adams v. Bertrand, 453 F.3d 428 (7th Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 130
Adams v. Cathel, 633 F.3d 248 (3rd Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 401
Adkins v. Warden, Holman CF, 710 F.3d 1241 (11th Cir. 2013) ................................... 1182
Agan v. Dugger, 828 F.2d 1496 (11th Cir. 1987) ........................................................... 109
Agan v. Dugger, 835 F.2d 1337 (11th Cir. 1987) .......................................................... 332
Aguilar v. Woodford, 725 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 2013) ....................................................... 230
Ake v. Oklahoma, 470 U.S. 68 (1985) ................................................................. 918
Aki-Khuam v. Davis, 339 F.3d 521 (7th Cir. 2003) ....................................................... 1188
Alabama v. White, 496 U.S. 325 (1990) ................................................................. 1638, 1645
Alaniz v. United States, 351 F.3d 365 (8th Cir. 2003) ................................................. 147
Aldridge v. Dugger, 925 F.2d 1320 (11th Cir. 1991) ....................................................... 508
Alemann v. Village of Hanover Park, 662 F.3d 897 (7th Cir. 2011) ......................... 391
Alexander v. City and County of San Francisco, 29 F.3d 1355 (9th Cir. 1994) ........ 1368
Ali v. Hickman, 584 F.3d 1174 (9th Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 1183
Allen v. Woodford, 366 F.3d 823 (9th Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 103
Alleyne v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2151 (2013) ......................................................... 873
Alleyne v. United States, 570 U.S. 99 (2013) ................................................................. 442
Alvarez v. Ercole, 763 F.3d 223 (2d Cir. 2014) .......................................................... 482, 632, 660
Amado v. Gonzalez, 758 F.3d 1119 (9th Cir. 2014) .................................................... 224, 240
American Civil Liberties Union v. Ashcroft, 322 F.3d 240 (3rd Cir. 2003) .......... 880, 1325
American Civil Liberties Union v. Mukasey, 534 F.3d 181 (3rd Cir. 2008) ........... 880
Anderson v. Butler, 858 F.2d 16 (1st Cir. 1988) ........................................................ 151
Anderson v. Johnson, 338 F.3d 382 (5th Cir. 2003) ..................................................... 133
Anderson v. Sirmons, 476 F.3d 1131 (10th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 100
Anderson v. Terhune, 516 F.3d 781 (9th Cir. 2008) .................................................... 380
Anderson v. United States, 865 F.3d 914 (7th Cir. 2017) ........................................ 322
Antwine v. Delo, 54 F.3d 1357 (8th Cir. 1995) ............................................................. 106, 316
Application of New York Times Co., 878 F.2d 67 (2d Cir. 1989) .............................. 813
Arcoren v. United States, 929 F.2d 1235 (8th Cir. 1991) ............................................. 794

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279 (1990) ................................................................. 390
Arkansas v. Sanders, 442 U.S. 753 (1979) ............................................................ 1618
Armstrong v. Dugger, 833 F.2d 1430 (11th Cir. 1987) ....................................... 109
Armstrong v. Guccione, 470 F.3d 89 (2d Cir. 2006) .......................................... 947
Armstrong v. Kemna, 534 F.3d 857 (8th Cir. 2008) ........................................... 143
Arnold v. Runnels, 421 F.3d 859 (9th Cir. 2005) ............................................... 381
Arnold v. Secretary, Dept of Corrections, 595 F.3d 1324 (11th Cir. 2010) ........ 225
Arrieta-Agressot v. United States, 3 F.3d 525 (1st Cir. 1993) ............................. 313
Atkins v. Attorney General of Alabama, 932 F.2d 1430 (11th Cir. 1991) .......... 157
Austin v. Bell, 126 F.3d 843 (6th Cir. 1997) ...................................................... 106
Austin v. United States, 509 U.S. 602 (1993) ...................................................... 895, 897
Avery v. Prelesnik, 548 F.3d 434 (6th Cir. 2008) ................................................. 129
Ayala v. Speckard, 131 F.3d 62 (2d Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1350
Ayala v. Wong, 693 F.3d 945 (9th Cir. 2012) .................................................... 515, 1182
Ayeny v. Mottola, 35 F.3d 680 (2d Cir. 1994) ..................................................... 1468
Ayers v. Hall, 900 F.3d 829 (6th Cir. 2018) ......................................................... 192
Ayers v. Hudson, 623 F.3d 301 (6th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 369
Bagley v. Lumpkin, 798 F.2d 1297 (9th Cir. 1986) ........................................... 261
Bailey v. Rae, 339 F.3d 1107 (9th Cir. 2003) ....................................................... 253
Bailey v. Spears, 847 F.2d 695 (11th Cir. 1988) ................................................. 331, 1045
Bailey v. United States, --- S. Ct. -- (2013) ....................................................... 1586, 1616
Bailey v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 1031 (2013) .................................................. 1639
Bailey v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 1031 (2013) .................................................. 1465
Bailey v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 1031 (2013) .................................................. 1466
Baker v. Kaiser, 929 F.2d 1495 (10th Cir. 1991) .................................................. 93
Ballard v. United States, 400 F.3d 404 (6th Cir. 2005) ....................................... 89
Banks v. Reynolds, 54 F.3d 1508 (10th Cir. 1995) ............................................ 236
Barbe v. McBride, 521 F.3d 443 (4th Cir. 2008) ................................................ 402, 637, 713
Barnes v. Joyner, 751 F.3d 229 (4th Cir. 2014) ............................................... 1075
Bartlett v. Alameida, 366 F.3d 1020 (9th Cir. 2004) ....................................... 1239
Bass v. Nix, 909 F.2d 297 (8th Cir. 1990) ......................................................... 1332
Batchelor v. Cain, 682 F.3d 400 (5th Cir. 2012) ........................................... 193
Bates v. Bell, 402 F.3d 635 (6th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 311, 506
Bauder v. Department of Corrections, 619 F.3d 1272 (11th Cir. 2010). ........ 114
Baxter v. Thomas, 45 F.3d 1501 (11th Cir. 1995) ........................................ 108
Baylor v. Estelle, 94 F.3d 1321 (9th Cir. 1996) ........................................... 135
Bean v. Calderon, 163 F.3d 1073 (9th Cir. 1998) ........................................ 104, 1687
Beecham v. United States, 511 U.S. 368 (1994) ........................................... 849
Bell v. Miller, 500 F.3d 149 (2d Cir. 2007) .................................................. 143, 995
Bell v. United States, 349 U.S. 81 (1955) ................................................. 549, 853, 1236
Bemis v. United States, 30 F.3d 220 (1st Cir. 1994) .................................... 1302
Bemore v. Chappell, 788 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2015) ..................................... 96
Benitez v. United States, 521 F.3d 625 (6th Cir. 2008) ............................... 178
Benn v. Lambert, 283 F.3d 1040 (9th Cir. 2002) ......................................... 244
Bennett v. Scroggy, 793 F.2d 772 (6th Cir. 1986) ....................................... 474
Ben-Yisrayl v. Davis, 431 F.3d 1043 (7th Cir. 2005) .................................. 295
Berry v. Lockhart, 873 F.2d 1168 (8th Cir. 1989) ...................................... 186, 198
Berryman v. Morton, 100 F.3d 1089 (3rd Cir. 1996) .................................. 151
Betancourt v. Willis, 814 F.2d 1546 (11th Cir. 1987) ................................... 120
Bies v. Sheldon, 775 F.3d 386 (6th Cir. 2014) ......................................... 230
Bigby v. Dretke, 402 F.3d 551 (5th Cir. 2005) .............................................. 506
Bigelow v. Haviland, 576 F.3d 284 (6th Cir. 2009) .................................... 128
Bigford v. Taylor, 834 F.2d 1213 (5th Cir. 1988) ....................................... 1600
Black v. United States, 130 S.Ct. 2963 (2010) ........................................... 1224
Blackmon v. Williams, 823 F.3d 1088 (7th Cir. 2016) .............................. 123
Blackston v. Rapelje, 780 F.3d 340 (6th Cir. 2014) .................................... 400, 482, 775
Blanco v. Singletary, 943 F.2d 1477 (11th Cir. 1991) .................................. 108
Blankenship v. Johnson, 118 F.3d 312 (5th Cir. 1997) .............................. 91, 182
Bloate v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 1345 (2010) ......................................... 1703
Bloom v. Calderon, 132 F.3d 1267 (9th Cir. 1997) ..................................... 105
Bloomer v. United States, 162 F.3d 187 (2d Cir. 1998) .............................. 150, 1165
Blystone v. Horn, 664 F.3d 397 (3d Cir. 2011) ......................................... 97
Bobadilla v. Carlson, 575 F.3d 785 (8th Cir. 2009) ................................... 414
Boland v. Holder, 682 F.3d 531 (6th Cir. 2012) ......................................... 1322
Bond v. Beard, 539 F.3d 256 (3rd Cir. 2008) ........................................... 99
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
<th>Pages</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Bonivert v. Clarkston</td>
<td>883 F.3d 865 (9th Cir. 2018)</td>
<td>1451</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Booker v. Dugger</td>
<td>922 F.2d 633 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>508</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boria v. Keane</td>
<td>99 F.3d 492 (2d Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>118</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bostick v. Stevenson</td>
<td>589 F.3d 160 (4th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bouchillon v. Collins</td>
<td>907 F.2d 589 (5th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td>119</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bouie v. City of Columbia</td>
<td>378 U.S. 347 (1964)</td>
<td>783</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bouie v. City of Columbia</td>
<td>378 U.S. 347 (1964)</td>
<td>602, 783</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bowen v. Maynard</td>
<td>799 F.2d 593 (10th Cir. 1986)</td>
<td>237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boyde v. Brown</td>
<td>404 F.3d 1159 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boyde v. Brown</td>
<td>421 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boykin v. Webb</td>
<td>541 F.3d 638 (6th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td>66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boyle v. Million</td>
<td>201 F.3d 711 (6th Cir. 2000)</td>
<td>312, 498</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boyle v. United States</td>
<td>129 S. Ct. 2237 (2009)</td>
<td>1355</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bradley v. Duncan</td>
<td>315 F.3d 1091 (9th Cir. 2002)</td>
<td>613, 1114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bradley v. Henry</td>
<td>428 F.3d 811 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>517</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brady v. United States</td>
<td>397 U.S. 742 (1970)</td>
<td>978</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bram v. United States</td>
<td>168 U.S. 532 (1897)</td>
<td>392</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Branzburg v. Hayes</td>
<td>408 U.S. 665 (1972)</td>
<td>1336</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brazzel v. Washington</td>
<td>491 F.3d 976 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
<td>554</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breckiron v. Horn</td>
<td>642 F.3d 126 (3rd Cir. 2011)</td>
<td>141, 242</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brendlin v. California</td>
<td>127 S.Ct. 2400 (2007)</td>
<td>1402, 1493, 1520, 1621, 1663</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brewer v. Aiken</td>
<td>935 F.2d 850 (7th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brewster v. Hetzel</td>
<td>913 F.3d 1042 (11th Cir. 2019)</td>
<td>1093, 1105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brigham City, Utah v. Stuart</td>
<td>126 S.Ct. 1943 (2006)</td>
<td>1470</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brinson v. Vaughn</td>
<td>398 F.3d 225 (3rd Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>1187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brinson v. Walker</td>
<td>547 F.3d 387 (2d Cir. 2008)</td>
<td>485</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bronston v. United States</td>
<td>409 U.S. 352 (1973)</td>
<td>1272, 1285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brooks v. Dretke</td>
<td>418 F.3d 430 (5th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>1077</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brooks v. Dretke</td>
<td>444 F.3d 328 (5th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>1077</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brooks v. Jones</td>
<td>875 F.2d 30 (2d Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>1701</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brower v. Inyo County</td>
<td>489 U.S. 593 (1989)</td>
<td>1395</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Butler</td>
<td>876 F.2d 427 (5th Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>364</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Daguer</td>
<td>831 F.2d 1547 (11th Cir. 1987)</td>
<td>406, 494, 776, 1331, 1334</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Horell</td>
<td>644 F.3d 969 (9th Cir. 2011)</td>
<td>391</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Illinois</td>
<td>422 U.S. 590 (1975)</td>
<td>336, 1484, 1497, 1623</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1779
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Keane</td>
<td>355 F.3d 82 (2d Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Lynaugh</td>
<td>843 F.2d 849 (5th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Myers</td>
<td>137 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Palmer</td>
<td>441 F.3d 347 (6th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Poole</td>
<td>337 F.3d 1155 (9th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Rios</td>
<td>696 F.3d 638 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Smith</td>
<td>551 F.3d 424 (6th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Superindentent Greene SCI</td>
<td>834 F.3d 506 (3rd Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Waddell</td>
<td>50 F.3d 285 (4th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Wainwright</td>
<td>785 F.2d 1457 (11th Cir. 1986)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brown v. Trammell</td>
<td>717 F.3d 1092 (10th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brownlee v. Haley</td>
<td>306 F.3d 1043 (11th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bruce v. Beary</td>
<td>498 F.3d 1232 (11th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brunelle v. United States</td>
<td>864 F.2d 64 (8th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bryan v. Scott</td>
<td>28 F.3d 1411 (5th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buck v. Maschner</td>
<td>878 F.2d 344 (10th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buenoano v. Singleterary</td>
<td>963 F.2d 1433 (11th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bullock v. New Mexico</td>
<td>131 S. Ct. 2705 (2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buonocore v. Harris</td>
<td>65 F.3d 347 (4th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burden v. Zant</td>
<td>24 F.3d 1298 (11th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burgess v. United States</td>
<td>--- F.3d --- (11th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burkett v. Cunningham</td>
<td>826 F.2d 1208 (3rd Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burkett v. Fulcomer</td>
<td>951 F.2d 1431 (3rd Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burt v. Uchtman</td>
<td>422 F.3d 557 (7th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burton v. Davis</td>
<td>816 F.3d 1132 (9th Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Burton v. Johnson</td>
<td>948 F.2d 1150 (10th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cady v. Dombrowski</td>
<td>413 U.S. 433 (1973)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Caliendo v. Warden of California Men’s Colony</td>
<td>365 F.3d 691 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
California v. Trombetta, 467 U.S. 479 (1984) ................................................................. 530
Callahan v. Millard County, 494 F.3d 891 (10th Cir. 2007) .............................................. 1454
Campbell v. Reardon, 780 F.3d 752 (7th Cir. 2015) ...................................................... 124
Campbell v. Rice, 302 F.3d 892 (9th Cir. 2002) .............................................................. 518
Campusano v. United States, 442 F.3d 770 (2d Cir. 2006) ........................................... 88
Canaan v. McBride, 395 F.3d 376 (7th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 103, 526
Cannady v. Dugger, 931 F.2d 752 (11th Cir. 1991) ........................................................... 377
Cannedy v. Adams, 706 F.3d 1148 (9th Cir. 2013) .......................................................... 140
Caplin & Drysdale v. United States, 491 U.S. 617 (1989) ................................................. 884
Capps v. Sullivan, 921 F.2d 260 (10th Cir. 1990) .......................................................... 156
Carlson v. Jess, 526 F.3d 1018 (7th Cir. 2008) ............................................................... 178, 473
Caro v. Calderon, 165 F.3d 1223 (9th Cir. 1999) ............................................................ 105
Caro v. Woodford, 280 F.3d 1247 (9th Cir. 2002) .......................................................... 104
Caron v. United States, 118 S.Ct. 2007 (1998) ............................................................... 849
Carr v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 2229 (2010) ................................................................. 1695
Carriger v. Stewart, 132 F.3d 463 (9th Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 245
Carson v. Fischer, 421 F.3d 83 (2d Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1348
Cartalino v. Washington, 122 F.3d 8 (7th Cir. 1997) ...................................................... 1071
Carter v. Rafferty, 826 F.2d 1299 (3rd Cir. 1987) ............................................................ 246
Casiano-Jimenez v. United States, 817 F.3d 816 (1st Cir. 2016) ........................................ 526
Cassady v. Goering, 567 F.3d 628 (10th Cir. 2009) .......................................................... 1576
Castañeda v. Partida, 430 U.S. 482 (1977) ................................................................. 1091
Castellanos v. Small, 766 F.3d 1137 (9th Cir. 2014) ......................................................... 1181
Castellanos v. United States, 26 F.3d 717 (7th Cir. 1994) ............................................... 92
Castillo v. United States, 34 F.3d 443 (7th Cir. 1994) ..................................................... 76
Castro v. State of Oklahoma, 71 F.3d 1502 (10th Cir. 1995) ............................................ 918
Cates v. United States, 882 F.3d 731 (7th Cir. 2018) ...................................................... 58, 137
Cauthern v. Colson, 736 F.3d 465 (6th Cir. 2013) .......................................................... 96, 307
Cave v. Singeltary, 971 F.2d 1513 (11th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 108
Caver v. Straub, 349 F.3d 340 (6th Cir. 2003) ............................................................... 90, 148
Cervi v. Kemp, 855 F.2d 702 (11th Cir. 1988) ............................................................... 378
Chaker v. Crogan, 428 F.3d 1215 (9th Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 880
Chamberlin v. Fisher, 855 F.3d 657 (5th Cir. 2017) ......................................................... 1180
Chambers v. Armontrout, 907 F.2d 825 (8th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 135
Chambers v. McDaniel, 549 F.3d 1191 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................... 1129
Chambers v. Mississippi 410 U.S. 284 (1973) ............................................................... 629, 659
Chambers v. Mississippi, 410 U.S. 284 (1973) ............................................................... 628, 635, 636, 638, 661, 662, 799, 925, 1771
Charles v. Smith, 894 F.2d 718 (5th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 382
Chatom v. White, 858 F.2d 1479 (11th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 157
Chatwin v. United States, 326 U.S. 455 (1946) ............................................................... 1204
Chein v. Shumsky, 373 F.3d 978 (9th Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 43, 1284
Chesney v. United States, 367 F.3d 1055 (8th Cir. 2004) ................................................ 51
Chia v. Cambra, 360 F.3d 997 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 638, 662

1781

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Title</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Childers v. Floyd</td>
<td>642 F.3d 953 (11th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chism v. Washington</td>
<td>661 F.3d 380 (9th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Christie v. Hollins</td>
<td>409 F.3d 120 (2d Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Christopher v. Florida</td>
<td>824 F.2d 836 (11th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Correll v. Ryan</td>
<td>539 F.3d 938 (9th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cordova v. Baca</td>
<td>346 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cordova v. Lynaugh</td>
<td>838 F.2d 764 (5th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corley v. United States</td>
<td>129 S. Ct. 1558 (2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cornell v. Kirkpatrick</td>
<td>665 F.3d 369 (2d Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Woodford</td>
<td>358 F.3d 1117 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Scroggy</td>
<td>845 F.2d 1385 (6th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Sec’y Dept. of Corrections</td>
<td>646 F.3d 1328 (11th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Sowards</td>
<td>837 F.2d 284 (6th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corral v. United States</td>
<td>498 F.3d 470 (7th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Correll v. Ryan</td>
<td>539 F.3d 938 (9th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ciak v. United States</td>
<td>59 F.3d 296 (2d Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cinelli v. Cutillo</td>
<td>896 F.2d 650 (1st Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clabourne v. Lewis</td>
<td>64 F.3d 1328 (11th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clark v. Brown</td>
<td>450 F.3d 898 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clark v. O’Leary</td>
<td>852 F.2d 999 (7th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Class v. United States</td>
<td>138 S. Ct. 798 (2018)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Claudio v. Scully</td>
<td>982 F.2d 798 (2d Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clemmons v. Delo</td>
<td>124 F.3d 944 (8th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cleveland v. United States</td>
<td>121 S. Ct. 365 (2000)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clinkscale v. Carter</td>
<td>375 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clymore v. United States</td>
<td>164 F.3d 569 (10th Cir. 1999)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coffin v. Brandau</td>
<td>642 F.3d 999 (11th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cohen v. Senkowski</td>
<td>290 F.3d 485 (2d Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coleman v. Singletary</td>
<td>30 F.3d 1420 (11th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Collazo v. Estelle</td>
<td>940 F.2d 411 (9th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Comstock v. Humphries</td>
<td>786 F.3d 701 (9th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conaway v. Polk</td>
<td>453 F.3d 567 (4th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conklin v. Schofield</td>
<td>366 F.3d 1191 (11th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conley v. United States</td>
<td>415 F.3d 183 (1st Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cook v. LaMarque</td>
<td>593 F.3d 810 (9th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coombs v. Diguglielmo</td>
<td>616 F.3d 255 (3rd Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Dillon</td>
<td>403 F.3d 1208 (11th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Oklahoma</td>
<td>517 U.S. 348 (1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Scroggy</td>
<td>845 F.2d 1385 (6th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Sec’y Dept. of Corrections</td>
<td>646 F.3d 1328 (11th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Sowards</td>
<td>837 F.2d 284 (6th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper v. Woodford</td>
<td>358 F.3d 1117 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coppola v. Powell</td>
<td>878 F.2d 1562 (1st Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cordova v. Baca</td>
<td>346 F.3d 924 (9th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cordova v. Lynaugh</td>
<td>838 F.2d 764 (5th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corley v. United States</td>
<td>129 S. Ct. 1558 (2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cornell v. Kirkpatrick</td>
<td>665 F.3d 369 (2d Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corral v. United States</td>
<td>498 F.3d 470 (7th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Correll v. Ryan</td>
<td>539 F.3d 938 (9th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Costo v. United States, 904 F.2d 344 (6th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 566
Couch v. Booker, 632 F.3d 241 (6th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 126
Coulter v. Gilmore, 155 F.3d 912 (7th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1189
Cowley v. Stricklin, 929 F.2d 640 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 918
Cox v. Donnelly, 387 F.3d 193 (2d Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 146
Coy v. Iowa, 487 U.S. 1012 (1988) ...................................................................................... 399
Crace v. Herzog, 798 F.3d 840 (9th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 139
Crandell v. Bunnell, 144 F.3d 1213 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 182
Crandell v. Bunnell, 25 F.3d 754 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 198
Crespin v. New Mexico, 144 F.3d 641 (10th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 406, 769
Crittenden v. Chappell, 804 F.3d 998 (9th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1181
Cross v. Hardy, 632 F.3d 356 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 765
Crotts v. Smith, 73 F.3d 861 (9th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 155
Crowe v. Sowers, 864 F.2d 430 (6th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 153
Cujo v. Ayers, 698 F.3d 752 (9th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 635
Cuero v. Cate, 827 F.3d 879 (9th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1289
Cuffie v. Goldsmith, 906 F.2d 385 (9th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 929
Cumbie v. Singletary, 991 F.2d 715 (11th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 520
Cunningham v. Zant, 928 F.2d 1006 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 108, 317, 508
Currie v. McDowell, 825 F.3d 603 (9th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1180
Dando v. Yukins, 461 F.3d 791 (6th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 115, 130
Daniels v. Woodford, 428 F.3d 1181 (9th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 68, 102, 278
Dasher v. Attorney General, Florida, 574 F.3d 1310 (11th Cir. 2009) ......................................... 114
Dasseym v. Dittman, 860 F.3d 933 (7th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 390
Davis v. Greiner, 428 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 115
Davis v. Grivas, 443 F.3d 1155 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 144
Davis v. Mississippi, 394 U.S. 721 (1969) ........................................................................... 336, 1484, 1497, 1498, 1623
Davis v. Puckett, 857 F.2d 1035 (5th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 374
Davis v. Reynolds, 890 F.2d 1105 (10th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 814
Davis v. Secretary for Dept. of Corrections, 341 F.3d 1310 (11th Cir. 2003) ......................... 148
Davis v. United States, 131 S. Ct. 2419 (2011) ................................................................. 1500
Davis v. Woodford, 446 F.3d 957 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1295
Davis v. Zant, 36 F.3d 1538 (11th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 293

1783
Dawan v. Lockhart, 31 F.3d 718 (8th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 77
Dawson v. Delaware, 503 U.S. 159 (1992) ................................................................. 504, 878
De LiSi v. Crosby, 402 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 2005) ..................................................... 487, 826, 1769
Dean v. United States, 129 S.Ct. 1849 (2009) ............................................................ 867
Dean v. United States, 556 U.S. 568 (2009) ................................................................. 872
DeBruce v. Commissioner, Ala. Dept. of Corrections, 758 F.3d 1263 (11th Cir. 2014) .... 96
Deck v. Jenkins, 814 F.3d 954 (9th Cir. 2016) ............................................................. 306
Deere v. Woodford, 339 F.3d 1084 (9th Cir. 2003) .................................................... 328
DeLap v. Dugger, 890 F.2d. 285 (11th Cir. 1989) .......................................................... 508
Delaware v. Van Arsdall, 475 U.S. 673 (1986) ............................................................. 482
Delguidice v. Singletary, 84 F.3d 1359 (11th Cir. 1996) ........................................... 364
DeLuca v. Lord, 77 F.3d 578 (2d Cir. 1996) ............................................................... 151
DeMarco v. United States, 928 F.2d 1074 (11th Cir. 1991) ....................................... 254, 260
Demos v. Johnson, 835 F.2d 840 (11th Cir. 1988) .................................................... 332
Dennis v. Secretary, Pa. Dept. of Corrections, 834 F.3d 263 (3rd Cir. 2016) .......... 229, 239
Department of Rev. of Montana v. Kurth Ranch, 511 U.S. 767 (1994) ..................... 548
DePew v. Anderson, 311 F.3d 742 (6th Cir. 2002) .................................................. 296
Descamps v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2276 (2013) ................................................. 843
Detrich v. Ryan, 740 F.3d 1237 (9th Cir. 2013) ........................................................ 124
Devose v. Norris, 53 F.3d 201 (8th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 1191
Dickerson v. Bagley, 453 F.3d 690 (6th Cir. 2006) ................................................... 101
DiLosa v. Cain, 279 F.3d 259 (5th Cir. 2002) ............................................................ 234
Dispensa v. Lynaugh, 847 F.2d 211 (5th Cir. 1988) ............................................... 997
Dixon v. Houk, 627 F.3d 553 (6th Cir. 2010) ............................................................ 340, 369, 392
Dixon v. Williams, 750 F.3d 1027 (9th Cir. 2014) ................................................... 1126
Dobbs v. Turpin, 142 F.3d 1383 (11th Cir. 1998) ...................................................... 105
Dodd v. Trammell 753 F.3d 971 (10th Cir. 2013) ...................................................... 505
Doe v. Ayers, 782 F.3d 425 (9th Cir. 2015) ............................................................... 96
Doe v. Busby, 661 F.3d 1001 (9th Cir. 2011) ............................................................. 684, 702, 1165
Doe v. Groody, 361 F.3d 232 (3rd Cir. 2003) ........................................................... 1467, 1577
Doe v. United States, 383 F.3d 905 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 827, 947
Dolphy v. Mantello, 552 F.3d 236 (2d Cir. 2009) ....................................................... 1184
Dood v. Ryan, 649 F.3d 986 (9th Cir. 2011) ............................................................. 345, 393
Doody v. Schriro, 596 F.3d 620 (9th Cir. 2010) ........................................................ 344, 392
Doral Produce Corp. v. Paul Steinberg Associates, Inc., 347 F.3d 36 (2d Cir. 2003) .... 463
Dorcy v. Jones, 398 F.3d 783 (6th Cir. 2005) ............................................................. 416
Douglas v. California, 372 U.S. 353 (1963) ............................................................... 93, 180
Douglas v. Workman, 560 F.3d 1156 (10th Cir. 2009) ............................................ 258
Dow v. Virga, 729 F.3d 1041 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................................. 251
Dowell v. United States, 694 F.3d 898 (7th Cir. 2012). ..................................................... 48, 86
Dowling v. United States, 493 U.S. 342 (1990) ............................................................. 542, 682
Doyle v. Ohio, 426 U.S. 610 (1976) ................................................................. 355, 380, 1111, 1144, 1330, 1331
Drake v. Portuondo, 553 F.3d 230 (2d Cir. 2009) .................................................. 243
Draughon v. Dretke, 427 F.3d 286 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................... 101, 130
Driscoll v. Delo, 71 F.3d 701 (8th Cir. 1995) ............................................................. 135
Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162 (1975) ............................................................. 328
Dudley v. Duckworth, 854 F.2d 967 (7th Cir. 1988) .......................................... 1774
Duest v. Singletary, 967 F.2d 472 (11th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 508
Dugas v. Coplan, 428 F.3d 317 (1st Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 131
Duncan v. Ornoski, 528 F.3d 1222 (9th Cir. 2008) .............................................. 99
Duren v. Missouri, 439 U.S. 357 (1979) ............................................................. 1091
Dye v. Frank, 355 F.3d 1102 (7th Cir. 2004) ........................................................... 549
Dyer v. Bowlen, 465 F.3d 280 (6th Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 783
Dyer v. Calderon, 151 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 1998) ....................................................... 1080, 1082, 1200
Eagle v. Linahan, 279 F.3d 926 (11th Cir. 2001) ...................................................... 149, 1188
Earhart v. Konteh, 589 F.3d 337 (6th Cir. 2009) ..................................................... 402
Earls v. McCaughtry, 379 F.3d 489 (7th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 147, 801, 1763
Earp v. Ornoski, 431 F.3d 1158 (9th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 925, 1771
Earp v. Stokes, 423 F.3d 1024 (9th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 102
East v. Johnson, 123 F.3d 235 (5th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 245, 247
Eberhart v. United States, 126 S.Ct. 403 (2005) ......................................................... 1264
Edens v. Hammigan, 87 F.3d 1109 (10th Cir. 1996) .............................................. 78
Ege v. Yukins, 485 F.3d 364 (6th Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 798
Ellis v. U.S. District Court, 356 F.3d 1198 (9th Cir. 2004) (en banc) ............. 974, 1063
Elmore v. Ozmint, 661 F.3d 783 (4th Cir. 2011) ...................................................... 126
Emerson v. Gramley, 91 F.3d 898 (7th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 106
English v. Artuz, 164 F.3d 105 (2d Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 1349
English v. Berghuis, 900 F.3d 804 (6th Cir. 2018) .................................................. 1195
English v. Romanowski, 602 F.3d 714 (6th Cir. 2010) .......................................... 127, 142
Eslaminia v. White, 136 F.3d 1234 (9th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1089
Espinoza v. Fairman, 813 F.2d 117 (7th Cir. 1987) .................................................. 374
Estock v. Lane, 842 F.2d 184 (7th Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 980
Etherton v. Rivard, 800 F.3d 737 (6th Cir. 2015) ..................................................... 85, 139, 400, 408
Evanchyk v. Stewart, 340 F.3d 933 (9th Cir. 2003) .............................................. 1131
Evans v. Lewis, 855 F.2d 631 (9th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 107
Evitts v. Lucey, 469 U.S. 387 (1985) ................................................................. 93, 180
Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806 (1975) ............................................................. 31, 524

1785
Faretra v. California, 422 U.S. 806 (1975) ................................................................. 195, 523
Federal Trade Commission v. Trudeau, 606 F.3d 382 (7th Cir. 2010) .................. 462
Ferensic v. Birkett, 501 F.3d 469 (6th Cir. 2007) ....................................................... 537, 637
Ferrara v. United States, 456 F.3d 278 (1st Cir. 2006) .............................................. 227, 252, 925, 966
Ferrrell v. Hall, 640 F.3d 1199 (11th Cir. 2011) ......................................................... .98
Fields v. Leapley, 30 F.3d 986 (8th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 1332
Finch v. Vaughn, 67 F.3d 909 (11th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 120, 953
Fischetti v. Johnson, 384 F.3d 140 (3rd Cir. 2004) .................................................. 404
Fitzpatrick v. McCormick, 869 F.2d 1247 (9th Cir. 1989) ........................................ 78
Fleming v. Kemp, 837 F.2d 940 (11th Cir. 1988) ...................................................... 378
Fleming v. Oregon Board of Pardons and Paroles, 998 F.2d 721 (9th Cir. 1993) ....... 786
Fletcher v. Reilly, 433 F.3d 867 (D. C. Cir. 2006) ..................................................... 783
Flores-Figueroa v. United States, 129 S.Ct. 1886 (2009) ........................................... 999
Florida v. Harris, 133 S. Ct. 1050 (2013) ................................................................. 1463, 1594
Florida v. J.L., 529 U.S. 266 (2000) ................................................................. 1641
Florida v. J.L., 529 U.S. 266 (2000) ................................................................. 1648
Florida v. Jardines, 133 S. Ct. 1409 (2013) ............................................................... 1460, 1463, 1674
Florida v. Powell, 130 S.Ct. 1195 (2010) ................................................................. 344
Florida v. Wells, 495 U.S. 1 (1990) ................................................................. 1559
Floyd v. Meachum, 907 F.2d 347 (2d Cir. 1990) ................................................... 296, 314
Floyd v. United States, 860 F.2d 999 (10th Cir. 1988) ........................................... 1608
Floyd v. Vannoy, 894 F.3d 143 (5th Cir. 2018) ......................................................... 229
Fong Foo v. United States, 369 U.S. 141 (1962) ....................................................... 554
Ford v. Gaither, 953 F.2d 1296 (11th Cir. 1992) ....................................................... 918
Ford v. Norris, 67 F.3d 162 (8th Cir. 1995) ............................................................. 1191
Ford v. Wilson, 747 F.3d 944 (7th Cir. 2014) ......................................................... 295, 1329
Forn v. Hornung, 343 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 2003) ....................................................... 769
Foster v. Chatman, 136 S. Ct. 1737 (2016) ............................................................... 1178
Foster v. Wolfenbarger, 687 F.3d 702 (6th Cir. 2012) ............................................. 125
Foucha v. Louisiana, 504 U.S. 71 (1992) ................................................................. 1042
Fountain v. Kyler, 420 F.3d 267 (3d Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 89
Fountain v. United States, 357 F.3d 250 (2d Cir. 2004) ........................................... 1212
Foust v. Houk, 655 F.3d 524 (6th Cir. 2011) ........................................................... 97
Fowler v. Butts, 829 F.3d 788 (7th Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 1060
Fowler v. Sacramento County Sheriff’s Department, 421 F.3d 1027 (9th Cir. 2005) .... 487
Fowler v. United States, 131 S. Ct. 2045 (2011) ...................................................... 1133, 1269

1786

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsslaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Franco v. United States</td>
<td>762 F.3d 761 (8th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Franklin v. Anderson</td>
<td>434 F.3d 412 (6th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Franklin v. Henry</td>
<td>122 F.3d 1270 (9th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Franklin v. McCaughtry</td>
<td>398 F.3d 955 (7th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frantz v. Hazeys</td>
<td>533 F.3d 724 (9th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fratta v. Quartermaker</td>
<td>536 F.3d 485 (5th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frazer v. South Carolina</td>
<td>430 F.3d 696 (4th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frazer v. United States</td>
<td>18 F.3d 778 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frazier v. Huffman</td>
<td>343 F.3d 780 (6th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Freeman v. Class</td>
<td>95 F.3d 639 (8th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Freer v. Dugger</td>
<td>935 F.2d 213 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frey v. Fulcomer</td>
<td>132 F.3d 916 (3rd Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frierson v. Woodford</td>
<td>463 F.3d 982 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuentes v. Griffin</td>
<td>829 F.3d 233 (2d Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fullan v. New York State Corrections Commissioner</td>
<td>891 F.2d 1007 (2d Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuller v. Diesslin</td>
<td>868 F.2d 604 (3rd Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fuller v. Johnson</td>
<td>114 F.3d 491 (5th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gabaree v. Steele</td>
<td>792 F.3d 991 (8th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gagne v. Booker</td>
<td>606 F.3d 278 (6th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gaines v. Thieret</td>
<td>846 F.2d 402 (7th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gatton v. Roe</td>
<td>389 F.3d 908 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garcia v. Long</td>
<td>808 F.3d 771 (9th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garcia v. United States</td>
<td>278 F.3d 134 (2d Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garcia-Dorantes v. Warren</td>
<td>801 F.3d 584 (6th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gardner v. United States</td>
<td>680 F.3d 1006 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garmon v. Lockhart</td>
<td>938 F.2d 120 (8th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garner v. Mitchell</td>
<td>557 F.3d 257 (6th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garrett v. Morris</td>
<td>815 F.2d 509 (8th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gault v. Lewis</td>
<td>489 F.3d 993 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gaylord v. United States</td>
<td>829 F.3d 500 (7th Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Genius v. Pepe</td>
<td>50 F.3d 60 (1st Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gennusa v. Canova</td>
<td>748 F.3d 1103 (11th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gentry v. Sevier</td>
<td>597 F.3d 838 (7th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Georgia v. McCollum</td>
<td>505 U.S. 42 (1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gerald B. Lefcourt v. United States</td>
<td>125 F.3d 79 (2d Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gersten v. Senkowski</td>
<td>426 F.3d 588 (2d Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ghent v. Woodford</td>
<td>279 F.3d 1121 (9th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Gholston v. Jones, 848 F.2d 1156 (11th Cir. 1988)........................................................................... 406
Gibbons v. Savage, 555 F.3d 112 (2d Cir. 2009)........................................................................... 1347
Gibbs v. Frank, 387 F.3d 268 (3rd Cir. 2004)........................................................................... 363
Gibson v. Ortiz, 387 F.3d 812 (9th Cir. 2004)........................................................................... 684, 701, 1164, 1172
Gilbert v. Moore, 134 F.3d 642 (4th Cir. 1998)........................................................................... 1109
Gilday v. Callahan, 59 F.3d 257 (1st Cir. 1995)........................................................................... 261
Giles v. California, 554 U.S. 353 (2008).................................................................................. 773
Gilliam v. Foster, 61 F.3d 1070 (4th Cir. 1995)........................................................................... 557
Gilliam v. Foster, 75 F.3d 881 (4th Cir. 1996)........................................................................... 556
Gilmore v. Henderson, 825 F.2d 663 (2d Cir. 1987).................................................................. 642
Giraldo-Rincon v. Dugger, 707 F.Supp. 504 (M.D.Fla. 1989).................................................. 1047
Girvin v. Yanai, 501 F.3d 743 (6th Cir. 2007).......................................................................... 143, 295
Glenn v. Tate, 71 F.3d 1204 (6th Cir. 1995)............................................................................. 106
Global-Tech Appliances Inc. v. SEB S.A., 131 S. Ct. 2060 (2011)................................................. 1118
Glock v. Singletary, 36 F.3d 1014 (11th Cir. 1994), rev’d on other grounds 65 F.3d 878 (11th Cir. 1995).................................................................................................................................................. 275
Glover v. Birkett, 679 F.3d 936 (6th Cir. 2012).......................................................................... 86
Godfrey v. Kemp, 836 F.2d 1557 (11th Cir. 1988)...................................................................... 509
Godoy v. Spearman, 861 F.3d 956 (9th Cir. 2017)...................................................................... 1073
Goldsmith v. Witkowski, 981 F.2d 697 (4th Cir. 1992).................................................................. 585
Gomez-Diaz v. United States, 433 F.3d 788 (11th Cir. 2005).................................................. 50, 88
Gongora v. Thaler, 710 F.3d 267 (5th Cir. 2013).......................................................................... 295
Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1 (2005)....................................................................................... 1049
Gonzalez v. Justices of Municipal Court, 382 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2004)........................................... 564
Gonzalez v. Piler, 341 F.3d 897 (9th Cir. 2003)........................................................................... 514
Gonzalez-Rivera v. Immigration & Naturalization Service, 22 F.3d 1441 (9th Cir. 1994)..... 1415
Goodman v. Bertrand, 467 F.3d 1022 (7th Cir. 2006).................................................................. 144
Gordon v. Braxton, 780 F3d 196 (4th Cir. 2015)....................................................................... 86
Gore v. Dugger, 933 F.2d 904 (11th Cir. 1991).......................................................................... 508
Goudy v. Basinger, 604 F.3d 394 (7th Cir. 2010)........................................................................ 231
Gov’t of Virgin Islands v. Lewis, 620 F.3d 359 (3rd Cir. 2010).................................................. 852
Gov’t of Virgin Islands v. Davis, 561 F.3d 159 (3rd Cir. 2009).................................................. 1330
Gov’t. of Virgin Islands v. Rosa, 399 F.3d 283 (3rd Cir. 2005).................................................. 36
Government of the Virgin Islands v. Forte, 865 F.2d 59 (3rd Cir. 1989)................................. 152
Government of the Virgin Islands v. Mills, 821 F.3d 448 (3rd Cir. 2016)................................. 305
Government of Virgin Islands v. Vanterpool, 767 F.3d 157 (3rd Cir. 2014).............................. 124
Government of Virgin Islands v. Weatherwax, 20 F.3d 572 (3rd Cir. 1994).............................. 152
Graham v. Hoke, 946 F.2d 982 (2d Cir. 1991).......................................................................... 274
Grant v. Lockett, 709 F.3d 224 (3rd Cir. 2013).......................................................................... 140
Graves v. Dretke, 442 F.3d 334 (5th Cir. 2006).......................................................................... 233, 253
Gravley v. Mills, 87 F.3d 779 (6th Cir. 1996).......................................................................... 153, 1332
Gray v. Branker, 529 F.3d 220 (4th Cir. 2008).......................................................................... 99

1788
Gray v. Maryland, 523 U.S. 185 (1998)........................................................................................................... 270
Gray v. Mississippi, 481 U.S. 648 (1987)........................................................................................................... 1202
Gray v. Moore, 520 F.3d 616 (6th Cir. 2008). ................................................................................................. 513, 516
Gray v. Pearson, Fed.Appx. 331 (4th Cir. 2013)................................................................................................. 83
Gray v. Ercole, 691 F.3d 165 (2d Cir. 2012)..................................................................................................... 515
Green v. Arn, 809 F.2d 1257 (6th Cir. 1987)..................................................................................................... 153
Green v. Georgia, 442 U.S. 95 (1979)................................................................................................................. 506, 629, 659
Green v. Lamarge, 532 F.3d 1028 (9th Cir. 2008)............................................................................................. 1185
Green v. Nelson, 595 F.3d 1245 (11th Cir. 2010).................................................................................................. 128
Green v. United States, 355 U.S. 184 (1957)...................................................................................................... 554, 555, 565
Greene v. Brignano, 123 F.3d 917 (6th Cir. 1997)............................................................................................. 46
Greene v. Wainwright, 634 F.2d 272 (5th Cir. 1981)............................................................................................ 225, 485
Greenup v. United States, 401 F.3d 758 (6th Cir. 2005)...................................................................................... 1708
Greer v. Miller, 483 U.S. 756 (1987).................................................................................................................. 1329
Grievance Committee for the Southern District of N.Y. v. Simels, 48 F.3d 640 (2d Cir. 1995).................... 81, 183
Griffin v. California, 380 U.S. 609 (1965) ........................................................................................................... 296
Griffin v. Harrington, 727 F.3d 940 (9th Cir. 2013)............................................................................................. 140
Griffin v. Illinois, 351 U.S. 12 (1956).................................................................................................................. 46
Griffin v. McVicar, 84 F.3d 880 (7th Cir. 1996)..................................................................................................... 76
Griffin v. Pierce, 622 F.3d 831 (7th Cir. 2010)..................................................................................................... 98
Griffin v. Strong, 983 F.2d 1540 (10th Cir. 1993)............................................................................................... 397
Griffin v. United States, 109 F.3d 1217 (7th Cir. 1997)..................................................................................... 92
Griffin v. United States, 330 F.3d 733 (6th Cir. 2003)....................................................................................... 117
Griffin v. Wisconsin, 483 U.S. 868 (1987).......................................................................................................... 1603
Griffith v. Oles, 895 F.2d 1503 (5th Cir. 1990)..................................................................................................... 464
Grisby v. Blodgett, 130 F.3d 365 (9th Cir. 1997)................................................................................................. 260
Groh v. Ramirez, 540 U.S. 551 (2004)................................................................................................................. 1466, 1575
Groselose v. Bell, 130 F.3d 1161 (6th Cir. 1997)................................................................................................. 150
Grueninger v. Dir., Virginia Dept. of Corrections, 813 F.3d 517 (4th Cir. 2016).................. 123, 367
Grunewald v. United States, 353 U.S. 391 (1957)............................................................................................... 444, 746, 747, 1716
Guam v. Ngirangas, 806 F.2d 895 (9th Cir. 1986)............................................................................................... 528
Guerra v. Johnson, 90 F.3d 1075 (5th Cir. 1996)................................................................................................. 236
Guedroz v. Lynam, 852 F.2d 832 (5th Cir. 1988)................................................................................................. 314
Guidry v. Dretke, 397 F.3d 306 (5th Cir. 2005)..................................................................................................... 371
Gumm v. Mitchell, 775 F.3d 345 (6th Cir. 2014)............................................................................................... 230, 667, 922
Guzman v. Scully, 80 F.3d 772 (2d Cir. 1996)..................................................................................................... 812
Guzman v. Secretary, Dept. of Corrections, 663 F.3d 1336 (11th Cir. 2011)..................................................... 242, 251
Hadley v. Groose, 97 F.3d 1311 (8th Cir. 1996)................................................................................................. 135
Hale v. Fish, 899 F.2d 390 (5th Cir. 1990)........................................................................................................... 1490
Haley v. Ohio, 332 U.S. 596 (1948).................................................................................................................... 345, 393
Haliym v. Mitchell, 492 F.3d 680 (6th Cir. 2007)............................................................................................... 100
Hall v. Director of Corrections, 343 F.3d 976 (9th Cir. 2003).......................................................................... 234
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hall v. United States</td>
<td>371 F.3d 969 (7th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hall v. Washington</td>
<td>106 F.3d 742 (7th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hall v. Zenk</td>
<td>692 F.3d 793 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hamblin v. Mitchell</td>
<td>354 F.3d 482 (6th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hamilton v. Ayers</td>
<td>583 F.3d 1100 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hamilton v. Ford</td>
<td>969 F.2d 1006 (11th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hammon v. Ward</td>
<td>466 F.3d 919 (10th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hanson v. Phillips</td>
<td>442 F.3d 789 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hardcastle v. Horn</td>
<td>368 F.3d 246 (3rd Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harding v. Davis</td>
<td>878 F.2d 1341 (11th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hardnett v. Marshall</td>
<td>25 F.3d 875 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hardwick v. Secretary</td>
<td>803 F.3d 541 (11th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hardy v. Chappell</td>
<td>849 F.3d 803 (9th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harmon v. Marshall</td>
<td>69 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harper v. Kelly</td>
<td>916 F.2d 54 (2d Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harpster v. State of Ohio</td>
<td>128 F.3d 322 (6th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harries v. Bell</td>
<td>417 F.3d 631 (6th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harrington v. Gillis</td>
<td>456 F.3d 118 (3rd Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Alexander</td>
<td>548 F.3d 200 (2d Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Carter</td>
<td>337 F.3d 758 (6th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Cotton</td>
<td>365 F.3d 552 (7th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Dugger</td>
<td>874 F.2d 756 (11th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Hardy</td>
<td>680 F.3d 942 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Kuhlmann</td>
<td>346 F.3d 330 (2d Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Lafler</td>
<td>553 F.3d 1028 (6th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Reed</td>
<td>894 F.2d 871 (7th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Thompson</td>
<td>698 F.3d 609 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harris v. Wood</td>
<td>64 F.3d 1432 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harrison v. Jones</td>
<td>880 F.2d 1279 (11th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harrison v. Quartermann</td>
<td>496 F.3d 419 (5th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harrison v. Ryan</td>
<td>909 F.2d 84 (3rd Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harrison v. United States</td>
<td>392 U.S. 219 (1968)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hart v. Florida Attorney General</td>
<td>323 F.3d 884 (11th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hart v. Marion Correctional Institution</td>
<td>927 F.2d 256 (6th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haskell v. Superintendent Greene SCI</td>
<td>866 F.3d 139 (3rd Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hayes v. Brown</td>
<td>399 F.3d 972 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Heard v. Addison</td>
<td>728 F.3d 1170 (10th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hedlund v. Ryan</td>
<td>854 F.3d 557 (9th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1790
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case</th>
<th>Citation</th>
<th>Court</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Heiser v. Ryan</td>
<td>951 F.2d 559 (3rd Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>3rd Circuit</td>
<td>1991</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henderson v. Frank</td>
<td>155 F.3d 159 (3rd Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>3rd Circuit</td>
<td>1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hendricks v. Calderon</td>
<td>70 F.3d 1032 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
<td>1995</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hendricks v. Vasquez</td>
<td>974 F.2d 1099 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
<td>1992</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hendricks v. Zenon</td>
<td>993 F.2d 664 (9th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
<td>1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hendrix v. Palmer</td>
<td>--- F.3d --- (6th Cir. 2018)</td>
<td>6th Circuit</td>
<td>2018</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry v. Poole</td>
<td>409 F.3d 48 (2d Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>2nd Circuit</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry v. Scully</td>
<td>78 F.3d 51 (2d Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>2nd Circuit</td>
<td>1996</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hernandez v. United States</td>
<td>778 F.3d 1230 (11th Cir. 2015)</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
<td>2015</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hickman v. Taylor</td>
<td>329 U.S. 495 (1947)</td>
<td>Supreme Court</td>
<td>1947</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hicks v. Franklin</td>
<td>546 F.3d 1279 (10th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td>10th Circuit</td>
<td>2008</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Higgins v. Renico</td>
<td>470 F.3d 624 (6th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>6th Circuit</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hill v. Lockhart</td>
<td>28 F.3d 832 (8th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td>8th Circuit</td>
<td>1994</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hill v. Lockhart</td>
<td>894 F.2d 1009 (8th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td>8th Circuit</td>
<td>1990</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hill v. Turpin</td>
<td>135 F.3d 1411 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
<td>1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Himes v. Thompson</td>
<td>336 F.3d 848 (9th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
<td>2003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hirschenfeld v. Payne</td>
<td>420 F.3d 922 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hodge v. Hurly</td>
<td>426 F.3d 368 (6th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>6th Circuit</td>
<td>2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hodge v. United States</td>
<td>554 F.3d 372 (3rd Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>3rd Circuit</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hodges v. Epps</td>
<td>648 F.3d 283 (5th Cir. 2011)</td>
<td>5th Circuit</td>
<td>2011</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hodgson v. Warren</td>
<td>622 F.3d 591 (6th Cir. 2010)</td>
<td>6th Circuit</td>
<td>2010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hoffman v. Leeke</td>
<td>903 F.2d 280 (4th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td>4th Circuit</td>
<td>1990</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hoi Man Yang v. Walker</td>
<td>468 F.3d 169 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>2nd Circuit</td>
<td>2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Holland v. Scully</td>
<td>797 F.2d 57 (2d Cir. 1986)</td>
<td>2nd Circuit</td>
<td>1986</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Holley v. Yarborough</td>
<td>568 F.3d 1091 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Holley v. Yarborough</td>
<td>568 F.3d 1091 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
<td>2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hollis v. Davis</td>
<td>941 F.2d 1471 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
<td>1991</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Holloway v. Horn</td>
<td>355 F.3d 707 (3rd Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>3rd Circuit</td>
<td>2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Holsonback v. White</td>
<td>133 F.3d 1382 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
<td>1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Honeycutt v. United States</td>
<td>137 S. Ct. 1626 (2017)</td>
<td>Supreme Court</td>
<td>2017</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
In re Application of U.S. for Records From Provider of Electronic Communication Service, 620 F.3d 304 (3rd Cir. 2010)

In re Arnett, 804 F.2d 1200 (11th Cir. 1986)

In re Baltimore Sun Co., 886 F.2d 60 (4th Cir. 1989)

In re Benvin, 791 F.3d 1096 (9th Cir. 2015)

In re Betts, 927 F.2d 1983 (7th Cir. 1991)

In re Bevill, Bresler & Schulman Asset Management Corp., 805 F.2d 120, 123 (3rd Cir. 1986)

In re Bulger, 710 F.3d 42 (1st Cir. 2013)

In re Chandler, 906 F.2d 248 (6th Cir. 1990)

In re Contempt of Greenberg, 849 F.2d 1251 (9th Cir. 1988)

In re Contempt Order (Petersen), 441 F.3d 1266 (10th Cir. 2006)

In re Doe, --- F.3d --- (3rd Cir. 2017)

In re Doe, 801 F.Supp. 478 (D.N.M. 1992)

In re Faulkner, 856 F.2d 716 (5th Cir. 1988)

In re Federal Grand Jury Proceedings, 89-10 (MIA), 938 F.2d 1578 (11th Cir. 1991)

In re Finkelstein, 901 F.2d 1560 (11th Cir. 1990)

In re Gallaher, 548 F.3d 713 (9th Cir. 2008)

In re Gates, 600 F.3d 333 (4th Cir. 2010)

In re Gomez, 830 F.3d 1225 (11th Cir. 2016)

In re Goode, 821 F.3d 553 (5th Cir. 2016)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Mora v. U.S.), 71 F.3d 723 (9th Cir. 1995)

In re Grand Jury Investigation (Heller), 921 F.2d 1184 (11th Cir. 1991)

In re Grand Jury Investigation (U.S. v. Corporation), 974 F.2d 1068 (9th Cir. 1992)

In re Grand Jury Investigation (United States v. Doe), 399 F.3d 527 (2d Cir. 2005)

In re Grand Jury Investigation Concerning Solid State Devices, Inc., 130 F.3d 853 (9th Cir. 1997)

In re Grand Jury Investigation, 810 F.3d 1110 (9th Cir. 2016)

In re Grand Jury Matter #3, 847 F.3d 157 (3rd Cir. 2017)

In re Grand Jury Matter No. 91-01386, 969 F.2d 995 (11th Cir. 1992)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings (Doe), 859 F.2d 1021 (1st Cir. 1988)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings (John Doe Co.) v. United States, 350 F.3d 299 (2d Cir. 2003)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings (PHE, Inc.), 640 F.Supp. 149 (E.D.N.C. 1986)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings (U.S. v. Under Seal), 33 F.3d 342 (4th Cir. 1994)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings 88-9 (Newton), 899 F.2d 1039 (11th Cir. 1990)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings 90-2 (Garland), 946 F.2d 746 (11th Cir. 1991)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 156 F.3d 1038 (10th Cir. 1998)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 219 F.3d 175 (2d Cir. 2000)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 220 F.3d 568 (7th Cir. 2000)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 417 F.3d 18 (1st Cir. 2005)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 43 F.3d 966 (5th Cir. 1994)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 492 F.3d 976 (8th Cir. 2007)

In re Grand Jury Proceedings, Subpoenas for Documents, 41 F.3d 377 (8th Cir. 1994)

In re Grand Jury Subpoena (DeGueirin), 913 F.2d 1118 (5th Cir. 1990)

In re Grand Jury Subpoena (DeGueirin), 752 F.Supp. 239 (S.D. Tex. 1991)
In re Grand Jury Subpoena (DeGuerin), 752 F.Supp. 239 (S.D.Tex. 1991) ................................................................. 940
In re Grand Jury Subpoena (Horn), 976 F.2d 1314 (9th Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 169, 939
In re Grand Jury Subpoena (Mark Torf/Torf Environmental Management), 357 F.3d 900 (9th Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 202
In re Grand Jury Subpoena (Under Seal), 415 F.3d 333 (4th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 164
In re Grand Jury Subpoena 92-1(SJ), 31 F.3d 826 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 938
In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated April 9, 1996, 87 F.3d 1198 (11th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 943
In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated December 17, 1996, 148 F.3d 487 (5th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 943
In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated July 6, 2005, 510 F.3d 180 (2nd Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 202
In re Grand Jury Subpoena Dated November 12, 1991 (Paul), 957 F.2d 807 (11th Cir. 1992) .......................................................... 943
In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum Dated April 19, 1991 (Continental Holdings), 945 F.2d 1221 (2d Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 944
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 341 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 165
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 419 F.3d 329 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 164
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 445 F.3d 266 (3d Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 163, 935
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 571 F.3d 1200 (D. C. Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 1698
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 696 F.3d 428 (5th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 841
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 745 F.3d 681 (3rd Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 161, 934
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 870 F.3d 312 (4th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 201
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 909 F.3d 26 (1st Cir. 2018) ................................................................. 159, 934
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, Judith Miller, 438 F.3d 1131 (D. C. Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 1336
In re Grand Jury Subpoena, LK-15-029, 828 F.3d 1083 (9th Cir. 2016) .......................................................... 946
In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 04-124-03, 454 F.3d 511 (6th Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 163, 935
In re Grand Jury Subpoenas 89-3 and 89-4, 902 F.2d 244 (4th Cir. 1990) .......................................................... 168
In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Duces Tecum, 798 F.2d 32 (2d Cir. 1986) .......................................................... 937
In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 123 F.3d 695 (1st Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 165, 936
In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 144 F.3d 653 (10th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 936
In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 659 F.Supp. 628 (D.Md. 1987) ................................................................. 945
In re Grand Jury Subpoenas, 803 F.2d 493 (9th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 170
In re Grand Jury, 111 F.3d 1066 (3rd Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 944, 1755
In re Grand Jury, 111 F.3d 1083 (3rd Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 1337
In re Grand Jury, 566 F.3d 12 (1st Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 942
In re Grand Jury, 705 F.3d 133 (3rd Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 161, 934, 946
In re Hitchings, 850 F.2d 180 (4th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 828
In re Impounded Case (Law Firm), 879 F.2d 1211 (3rd Cir. 1989) .......................................................... 168
In re Johnson, 921 F.2d 585 (5th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 464
In re Keeper of Records (Grand Jury Subpoena Addressed to XYZ Corp., 348 F.3d 16 (1st Cir. 2003) .......................................................... 165
In re Kendall, 712 F.3d 814 (3rd Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 1273
In re Lott, 424 F.3d 446 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 164
In re M.H., 648 F.3d 1067 (9th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 841
In re Morgan, 506 F.3d 705 (9th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 966, 1316
In re Nettles, 394 F.3d 1001 (7th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1063
In re Newchurch, 807 F.2d 404 (5th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 1044
Jackson v. Edwards, 404 F.3d 612 (2d Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 1113
Jackson v. Giurbino, 364 F.3d 1002 (9th Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 381
Jackson v. Herring, 42 F.3d 1350 (11th Cir. 1995) .......................................................... 108
Jackson v. James, 839 F.2d 1513 (11th Cir. 1988) ........................................................... 188, 200
Jackson v. Leonardo, 162 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 91
Jackson v. Nevada, 688 F.3d 1091 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................................ 635, 721
Jackson v. United States, 859 F.3d 495 (7th Cir. 2017) .................................................. 1068
Jacobs v. Singletary, 952 F.2d 1282 (11th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 254, 354, 360, 383
James v. Brigano, 470 F.3d 636 (6th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 180, 195
James v. Ryan, 679 F.3d 780 (9th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 97
James v. Singletary, 957 F.2d 1562 (11th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 331
Jamison v. Klem, 544 F.3d 266 (3rd Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 950
Jaradat v. Williams, 591 F.3d 863 (6th Cir. 2010) ........................................................... 1330
Jaramillo v. Stewart, 340 F.3d 877 (9th Cir. 2003) .......................................................... 234
Jean v. Rice, 945 F.2d 82 (4th Cir. 1991) .................................................................. 246
Jenkins v. Bartlett, 487 F.3d 482 (7th Cir. 2007) ............................................................... 163
Jensen v. Clements, 800 F.3d 892 (7th Cir. 2015) ............................................................ 773
Jensen v. Romanowski, 590 F.3d 373 (6th Cir. 2009) ....................................................... 414
Jiminez v. Myers, 40 F.3d 976 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1108
Johnson v. Bagley, 544 F.3d 592 (6th Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 98
Johnson v. Baldwin, 114 F.3d 835 (9th Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 135
Johnson v. California, 545 U.S. 162 (2005) ................................................................. 1178
Johnson v. Finn, 665 F.3d 1063 (9th Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 34, 1182
Johnson v. Mitchell, 585 F.3d 923 (6th Cir. 2009) ........................................................... 98
Johnson v. Sec’y DOC, 643 F.3d 907 (11th Cir. 2011) .................................................... 97
Johnson v. Sherry, 586 F.3d 439 (6th Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 1347
Johnson v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 1265 (2010) ............................................................ 844
Johnson v. United States, 520 U.S. 461 (1997) ................................................................. 31, 1124
Johnson v. Uribe, 682 F.3d 1238 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................................ 113
Jones v. Basinger, 635 F.3d 1030 (7th Cir. 2011) ............................................................. 412, 650
Jones v. Cain, 600 F.3d 527 (5th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 414, 740
Jones v. Davis, 835 F.2d 835 (11th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1194
Jones v. Dugger, 867 F.2d 1277 (11th Cir. 1989) ............................................................... 509
Jones v. Harrington, 829 F.3d 1128 (9th Cir. 2016) .......................................................... 379
Jones v. Jamrog, 414 F.3d 585 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 524
Jones v. Murphy, 694 F.3d 225 (2d Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 515
Jones v. Norman, 633 F.3d 661 (8th Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 194
Jones v. Polk, 401 F.3d 257 (4th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 506
Jones v. United States, 119 S.Ct. 1215 (1999) ................................................................. 1013, 1102
Jones v. United States, 527 U.S. 373 (1999) ................................................................. 511
Jones v. United States, 529 U.S. 848 (2000) ................................................................. 56, 1049, 1055
Jones v. United States, 689 F.3d 621 (6th Cir. 2012) ......................................................... 844
Jones v. Vacco, 126 F.3d 408 (2d Cir. 1997) .................................................................. 183
Jones v. Walker, 540 F.2d 1277 (11th Cir., 2008) (en banc) .............................................. 195
Jones v. Walker, 540 F.3d 1277 (11th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 177
Jones v. West, 555 F.3d 90 (2d Cir. 2009) ................................................................... 1184
Jones v. Wood, 114 F.3d 1002 (9th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 135
Jordan v. Hepp, 831 F.3d 837 (7th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 138, 300
Joseph v. Coyle, 469 F.3d 441 (6th Cir. 2006) ............................................................... 100
Joshua v. Dewitt, 341 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 2003) ............................................................... 90, 133, 1531
Juan H. v. Allen, 408 F.3d 1262 (9th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 22
Judd v. Hoke, 250 F.3d 1308 (11th Cir. 2001) ................................................................. 1349
Julian v. Bartley, 495 F.3d 487 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 115
Julius v. Johnson, 840 F.2d 1533 (11th Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 157
Juniper v. Davis, 737 F.3d 288 (4th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 83
Juniper v. Zook, --- F.3d --- (4th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 229, 238
Justice v. Hoke, 90 F.3d 43 (2nd Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 641
Kaley v. United States, 134 S. Ct. 1090 (2014) ............................................................... 884, 891
Kann v. United States, 323 U.S. 88 (1944) .................................................................. 1219, 1220
Kansas v. Cheever, 134 S. Ct. 596 (2013) .................................................................. 363
Keller v. Petsock, 853 F.2d 1122 (3rd Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 1081
Kellogg v. Shoemaker, 46 F.3d 503 (6th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 785
Kenley v. Armontrou, 937 F.2d 1298 (8th Cir. 1991) .................................................... 107
Kennedy v. Lockyer, 379 F.3d 1041 (9th Cir. 2004) ....................................................... 1741
Kentucky v. King, 131 S. Ct. 1849 (2011) .................................................................. 1470, 1476
Kesser v. Cambra, 465 F.3d 351 (9th Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 1186
Ketchings v. Jackson, 365 F.3d 509 (6th Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 827
Killebrew v. Endicott, 992 F.2d 660 (7th Cir. 1993) ......................................................... 359
Kindler v. Horn, 542 F.3d 70 (3rd Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 99, 505
King v. United States, 595 F.3d 844 (8th Cir. 2010) ..................................................... 87
Kirby v. United States, 174 U.S. 47 (1899) ................................................................. 412
Kittelson v. Dretke, 426 F.3d 306 (5th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 404, 487
Klen v. City of Loveland, 661 F.3d 498 (10th Cir. 2011) .............................................. 1482
Knight v. Diggle, 863 F.2d 705 (11th Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 509
Knowles v. Iowa, 119 S.Ct. 484 (1998) ................................................................. 1404, 1540
Koenig v. North Dakota, 755 F.3d 636 (8th Cir. 2014) .................................................. 175
Kordenbrock v. Scroggy, 919 F.2d 1091 (6th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 382
Kovacs v. United States, 744 F.3d 44 (2d Cir. 2014) .................................................... 112

1797

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
Krasnow v. Navarro, 909 F.2d 451 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 470
Krecioch v. United States, 221 F.3d 976 (7th Cir. 2000) .................................................. 905
Krimstock v. Kelly, 306 F.3d 40 (2d Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 907
Krimstock v. Kelly, 464 F.3d 246 (2d Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1606
Krische v. Smith, 662 F.2d 177 (2d Cir. 1981) ................................................................. 518
Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U.S. 440 (1949) ............................................................. 444, 746, 1716
Kubsch v. Neal, 838 F.3d 845 (7th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 629, 659
Kyles v. Whitey, 514 U.S. 419 (1995) ................................................................. 222
Kyllo v. United States, 533 U.S. 27 (2001) ................................................................. 1674
Lacaze v. Warden Louisiana Correctional Institute for Women, 645 F.3d 728 (5th Cir. 2011) ... 258
Lafferty v. Cook, 949 F.2d 156 (10th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 331
Lafleur v. Cooper, 132 S. Ct. 1376 (2012) ................................................................. 110
LaFrance v. Bohlinger, 499 F.2d 29 (1st Cir. 1974) ............................................................ 1768
Laierd v. Horn, 414 F.3d 419 (3rd Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 22, 1145
Lakin v. Stine, 431 F.3d 959 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 514
Lambert v. Beard, 633 F.3d 126 (3rd Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 251
Lambert v. California, 355 U.S. 225 (1957) ................................................................. 1239
Lambert v. Warden Greene SCI, 861 F.3d 459 (3rd Cir. 2017) ........................................... 270, 408
Lambright v. Ryan, 698 F.3d 808 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................................... 83
Lambright v. Schriro, 490 F.3d 1103 (9th Cir. 2007) ........................................................... 100
Lancaster v. Metrish, 683 F.3d 740 (6th Cir. 2012) ........................................................... 782
Lanigan v. Maloney, 853 F.2d 40 (1st Cir. 1988) ............................................................... 1165
Lankford v. Arave, 468 F.3d 578 (9th Cir. 2006) ............................................................... 144
Larson v. Tansy, 911 F.2d 392 (10th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 520
Lawhorns v. Allen, 519 F.3d 1272 (11th Cir. 2008) ............................................................ 100
Lawlor v. Zook, 909 F.3d 614 (4th Cir. 2018) ................................................................. 504
Lawson v. Borg, 60 F.3d 608 (9th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1082
Lee v. Clarke, 781 F.3d 114 (4th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 140
Lent v. Wells, 861 F.2d 972 (6th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 297
Lewandowski v. Makel, 949 F.2d 884 (6th Cir. 1991) ....................................................... 119
Lewis v. Connecticut Com’r. of Correction, 790 F.3d 109 (2d Cir. 2015) ......................... 224
Lewis v. Dretke, 355 F.3d 364 (5th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 103
Lewis v. Johnson, 359 F.3d 646 (3rd Cir. 2004) ............................................................ 90
Lewis v. Mayle, 391 F.3d 989 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 69
Lewis v. United States, 118 S.Ct. 1135 (1998) ............................................................... 60
Lewis v. Wilkinson, 307 F.3d 413 (6th Cir. 2002) ....................................................... 405, 639, 713
Lincoln v. Sunn, 807 F.2d 805 (9th Cir. 1987) ............................................................... 297
Lindh v. Murphy, 124 F.3d 899 (7th Cir. 1997) ............................................................... 491
Lity v. United States, 510 U.S. 540 (1994) ................................................................. 1060
Little v. Armontrout, 819 F.2d 1425 (8th Cir. 1987) ......................................................... 918
Livingston v. Dept. of Justice, 759 F.2d 74 (D.C. Cir. 1985) ........................................... 806

1798
Lobbins v. United States, 900 F.3d 799 (6th Cir. 2018) .............................................................. 137, 1270
Locascio v. United States, 395 F.3d 51 (2d Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1799
Long v. Butler, 809 F.3d 299 (7th Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 85, 250
Lopez v. Scully, 58 F.3d 38 (2d Cir. 1995) ........................................................................ 73
Loughrin v. United States, 134 S. Ct. 2384 (2014) .......................................................... 211
Love v. Jones, 923 F.2d 816 (11th Cir. 1991) .............................................................. 1194
Love v. Morton, 112 F.3d 131 (3rd Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 556
Lucero v. Kerby, 133 F.3d 1299 (10th Cir. 1998) ........................................................ 565
Luchenburg v. Smith, 79 F.3d 388 (4th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 152
Ludwig v. United States, 162 F.3d 456 (6th Cir. 1998) ............................................. 91
Luis v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1083 (2016) .......................................................... 884
Lujan v. Garcia, 734 F.3d 917 (9th Cir. 2013) .......................................................... 339
Lunbery v. Hornbeak, 605 F.3d 754 (9th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 636, 661
Lyell v. United States, 344 U.S. 604 (1953) .............................................................. 444, 746, 1716
Lyell v. Renoico, 470 F.3d 1177 (6th Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 1070
Lynce v. Mathis, 519 U.S. 433, 117 S.Ct. 891 (1997) .................................................. 783, 784
Lynch v. Dolce, 789 F.3d 303 (2d Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 86
Lyons v. Johnson, 99 F.3d 499 (2d Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 641
MacDonald v. Moose, 710 F.3d 154 (4th Cir. 2013) ........................................... 602
Mach v. Stewart, 137 F.3d 630 (9th Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 1198, 1200
Madison v. Commissioner, Ala. Dept. of Corrections, 677 F.3d 1333 (11th Cir. 2012) .......... 1182
Madrigal v. Bagley, 413 F.3d 548 (6th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 273
Magill v. Dugger, 824 F.2d 879 (11th Cir. 1987) ...................................................... 109
Magwood v. Warden, Alabama Dept. of Corrections, 664 F.3d 1340 (11th Cir. 2011) ...... 602, 782
Mahaffey v. Page, 162 F.3d 481 (7th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 1189
Mahler v. Kaylo, 537 F.3d 494 (5th Cir. 2008) .......................................................... 252
Mahorner v. Wallman, 917 F.2d 469 (10th Cir. 1990) ........................................ 317
Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159 (1985) ........................................................................ 373
Malone v. Walls, 538 F.3d 744 (7th Cir. 2008) .......................................................... 143
Manlove v. Tansy, 981 F.2d 473 (10th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 474
Mann v. Dugger, 817 F.2d 1471 (11th Cir. 1987), reh’g on other grounds, 844 F.2d 1446 (11th Cir. 1988) .............................................................. 293
Mansfield v. Champion, 992 F.2d 1098 (10th Cir. 1993) ........................................ 567, 1029
Mapes v. Tate, 388 F.3d 187 (6th Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 56, 90
Maples v. Stegall, 340 F.3d 433 (6th Cir. 2003) .................................................. 117
Marino v. Vasquez, 812 F.2d 499 (9th Cir. 1987) .................................................. 1083
Mars v. Mounts, 895 F.2d 1348 (11th Cir. 1990) .......................................................... 567
Marshall v. Cathel, 428 F.3d 452 (3rd Cir. 2005) .................................................. 102
Marshall v. Dugger, 925 F.2d 374 (11th Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 199
Martin v. Grosshans, 424 F.3d 588 (7th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 145
Martin v. United States, 81 F.3d 1083 (11th Cir. 1996) ........................................ 93
Martineau v. Angelone, 25 F.3d 734 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................ 44
Martinez v. Garcia, 379 F.3d 1034 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 1131, 1172
McLain v. Calderon, 134 F.3d 1383 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 507
McMurry v. Ryan, 539 F.3d 1112 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 326
McNeely v. Blanas, 336 F.3d 822 (9th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1701
McPhearson v. United States, 675 F.3d 553 (6th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 141
Medina v. Diguglielmo, 461 F.3d 417 (3rd Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 144
Medley v. Runnels, 506 F.3d 857 (9th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 1128
Menefield v. Borg, 881 F.2d 696 (9th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 187
Merrill v. Yates, 663 F.3d 444 (9th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 411
Messer v. Florida, 834 F.2d 890 (11th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 509
Metrich v. Lancaster, 133 S. Ct. 1781 (2013) ................................................................. 782
Meyers v. Gillis, 142 F.3d 664 (3rd Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 118
Michigan Department of State Police v. Sitz, 496 U.S. 444 (1990) ................................................................. 1609
Michigan v. Mosley, 423 U.S. 96 (1975) ................................................................. 381
Middleton v. Dugger, 849 F.2d 491 (11th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 108
Midland Asphalt Corp. v. United States, 489 U.S. 794 (1989) ................................................................. 941
Miles v. Stainer, 108 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 330
Milke v. Ryan, 711 F.3d 998 (9th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 241
Miller v. Angliker, 848 F.2d 1312 (2d Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 235
Miller v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 356 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 145
Miller v. Dugger, 838 F.2d 1530 (11th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 397
Miller v. Lockhart, 65 F.3d 676 (8th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 315, 1191
Miller v. Martin, 481 F.3d 468 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 143
Miller v. Vasquez, 868 F.2d 1116 (9th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 228
Miller v. Webb, 385 F.3d 666 (6th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 146, 1197
Miller-El v. Dretke, 545 U.S. 231, 125 S. Ct. 2317 (2005) ................................................................. 1178
Milton v. Miller, 744 F.3d 660 (10th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 86
Mincey v. Arizona, 437 U.S. 385 (1978) ................................................................. 391
Minnesota v. Olson, 495 U.S. 91 (1990) ................................................................. 1621
Minnick v. Mississippi, 498 U.S. 146 (1990) ................................................................. 366
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Title</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Page Numbers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Miranda v. City of Cornelius</td>
<td>2005</td>
<td>1560</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Missouri v. Frye</td>
<td>2012</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Missouri v. Seibert</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>338, 341, 393</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mitchell v. United States</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>824</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moffett v. Kolb</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mohawk Industries Inc. v. Carpenter</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mollett v. Mullin</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>507</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monachelli v. Warden</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>656</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moncrieffe v. Holder</td>
<td>2013</td>
<td>1003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monge v. California</td>
<td>1998</td>
<td>552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montana v. Egelhoff</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>628</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montejo v. Louisiana</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>365</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montemoino v. United States</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>93, 120</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montgomery v. Petersen</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montgomery v. United States</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore v. Berghuis</td>
<td>2012</td>
<td>368</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore v. Bryant</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore v. Calderon</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>525</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore v. Haviland</td>
<td>2008</td>
<td>523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore v. Kemp</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>260, 509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore v. Knight</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>517</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moore v. Purkett</td>
<td>2001</td>
<td>182</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morales v. Mitchell</td>
<td>2007</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moran v. Burbine</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morgan v. Illinois</td>
<td>1992</td>
<td>1078, 1202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morris v. Beard</td>
<td>2011</td>
<td>66</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morris v. Ylst</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Morrissey v. Brewer</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>401, 1342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mosley v. Atchison</td>
<td>2012</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mudd v. United States</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>189, 1685</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Munchinski v. Wilson</td>
<td>2012</td>
<td>224</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murillo v. Frank</td>
<td>2005</td>
<td>273, 416</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murphy v. Puckett</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murray v. United States</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>1546, 1548, 1552, 1588</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Myers v. Johnson</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>525</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nappi v. Yelich</td>
<td>2015</td>
<td>482</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Napue v. Illinois</td>
<td>1959</td>
<td>234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nara v. Frank</td>
<td>2007</td>
<td>326</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Navarette v. California</td>
<td>2014</td>
<td>1519, 1638</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Neder v. United States</td>
<td>1999</td>
<td>211, 1124, 1131, 1207</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Neil v. Biggers</td>
<td>1972</td>
<td>996</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nelson v. Fulcomer</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>359</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New Jersey v. T.L.O.</td>
<td>1985</td>
<td>1630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New York v. Belton</td>
<td>1981</td>
<td>1402, 1539</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>New York v. Burger</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>1367</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1802
Owens v. McLaughlin, 733 F.3d 320 (11th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 1158
Owens v. United States, 387 F.3d 607 (7th Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 132
Owens v. United States, 483 F.3d 48 (1st Cir. 2007) .............................................................. 1348
Oyola v. Bowers, 947 F.2d 928 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 157
Paine v. Massie, 339 F.3d 1194 (10th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 148
Parker v. Renico, 506 F.3d 444 (6th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 855
Parker v. Singletary, 974 F.2d 1562 (11th Cir. 1992) ............................................................ 377
Parr v. United States, 363 U.S. 370 (1960) ........................................................................ 1219, 1220
Parsad v. Greiner, 337 F.3d 175 (2d Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 351
Parton v. Armontrout, 895 F.2d 1214 (8th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 785
Pasquantino v. United States, 544 U.S. 349 (2005) ............................................................. 1212
Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375 (1966) ................................................................. 328
Paters v. United States, 159 F.3d 1043 (7th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 117, 151
Patrasso v. Nelson, 121 F.3d 297 (7th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 153
Patterson v. Haskins, 470 F.3d 645 (6th Cir. 2006) .............................................................. 41
Paulino v. Castro, 371 F.3d 1083 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1187
Paulino v. Harrison, 542 F.3d 692 (9th Cir. 2008) ............................................................... 1185
Payne v. Stansberry, 760 F.3d 10 (D. C. Cir. 2014) ............................................................ 86, 1164
Pazden v. Maurer, 424 F.3d 303 (3rd Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 181, 196
Peak v. Webb, 673 F.3d 465 (6th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 410
Pennsylvania v. Munitz, 496 U.S. 582 (1990) ................................................................. 356
Peny v. Lynaugh, 492 U.S. 302 (1989) ................................................................. 504
Pensinger v. Chappell, 787 F.3d 1014 (9th Cir. 2015) ........................................................... 505
People of Territory of Guam v. Ignacio, 10 F.3d 608 (9th Cir. 1993) ..................................... 755
People of Territory of Guam v. Shymanovitz, 157 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 1998) .................... 674, 703
People of Territory of Guam v. Veloria, 136 F.3d 648 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................ 1331
People v. Badgett, 895 P.2d 877 (Cal. 1995) ................................................................. 1768
Peoples v. Lafler, 734 F.3d 503 (6th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 140
Perez v. Cain, 529 F.3d 588 (5th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1043
Perez v. Irwin, 963 F.2d 499 (2d Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 1165
Perillo v. Johnson, 79 F.3d 441 (5th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 75
Perkins v. Herbert, 596 F.3d 161 (2d Cir. 2010) ............................................................... 380, 402, 773
Perlman v. United States, 247 U.S. 7 (1918) ................................................................. 161, 162, 935, 946
Peters v. Gunn, 33 F.3d 1190 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 525
Petrocelli v. Baker, 869 F.3d 710 (9th Cir. 2017) ....................................................... 363
Pheauef v. Fraikin, 448 F.3d 591 (2d Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 1630
Phillips v. Ornoski, 673 F.3d 1168 (9th Cir. 2012) ..................................................... 258
Phillips v. White, 851 F.3d 567 (6th Cir. 2017) .......................................................... 95
Phillips v. Workman, 604 F.3d 1202 (10th Cir. 2010) ............................................. 505
Pidgeon v. Smith, 785 F.3d 1165 (7th Cir. 2015) ...................................................... 112
Poindexter v. Mitchell, 454 F.3d 564 (6th Cir. 2006) ............................................. 101
Pointer v. Texas, 380 U.S. 400 (1965) ................................................................. 482
Polanco v. U.S. DEA, 158 F.3d 647 (2d Cir. 1998) ................................................. 905
Polk v. Sandoval, 503 F.3d 903 (9th Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 1129
Pope v. Zenon, 69 F.3d 1018 (9th Cir. 1995) .............................................................. 360, 375
Porter v. Singletary, 49 F.3d 1483 (11th Cir. 1995) .................................................... 1066
Porter v. Wainwright, 805 F.2d 930 (11th Cir. 1986) ............................................... 79
Pounders v. Watson, 521 U.S. 982 (1997) ................................................................. 463, 467
Powell v. Galaza, 328 F.3d 558 (9th Cir. 2003) ......................................................... 1131
Presnell v. Zant, 959 F.2d 1524 (11th Cir. 1992) ...................................................... 317
Price v. Cain, 560 F.3d 284 (5th Cir. 2009) .............................................................. 1184
Prichard v. Lockhart, 990 F.2d 352 (8th Cir. 1993) ................................................. 155
Pruitt v. Neal, 788 F.3d 248 (7th Cir. 2015) ............................................................... 96
Puckett v. United States, 129 S. Ct. 1423 (2009) .................................................... 1289
Purcell v. United States, 908 F.2d 434 (9th Cir. 1990) .......................................... 1608
Pyler v. Moore, 129 F.3d 728 (4th Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 784
Quintero v. United States, 33 F.3d 1133 (9th Cir. 1994) ....................................... 77
Ragland v. United States, 784 F.3d 1213 (8th Cir. 2015) ....................................... 571
Ralls v. United States, 52 F.3d 223 (9th Cir. 1995) ............................................... 169, 938
Ramchair v. Conway, 601 F.3d 66 (2d Cir. 2010) ................................................... 86
Ramirez v. United States, 799 F.3d 845 (7th Cir. 2015) ......................................... 139
Ramonez v. Berghuis, 490 F.3d 482 (6th Cir. 2007) .............................................. 129
Randolph v. California, 380 F.3d 1133 (9th Cir. 2004) ....................................... 371
Rashad v. Burt, 108 F.3d 677 (6th Cir. 1997) ............................................................ 566
Ray v. Boatwright, 592 F.3d 793 (7th Cir. 2010) ................................................... 271
Ray v. Township of Warren, 626 F.3d 170 (3rd Cir. 2010) ..................................... 1421
Raygoza v. Hulick, 474 F.3d 958 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................. 129
Reagan v. Norris, 365 F.3d 616 (8th Cir. 2004) ........................................... 147, 1131
Redd v. Sowers, 809 F.2d 1266 (6th Cir. 1987) ........................................... 1702
Reed v. Quarterman, 555 F.3d 364 (5th Cir. 2009) ........................................ 1184
Reinert v. Larkins, 379 F.3d 76 (3rd Cir. 2004) ........................................... 351
Reutter v. Solem, 888 F.2d 578 (8th Cir. 1989) ........................................... 247, 316
Reves v. Ernst & Young, 113 S.Ct. 1163 (1993) ........................................... 1358
Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170 (1993) ........................................... 1356, 1357
Reyes v. Lewis, 798 F.3d 815 (9th Cir. 2015) ........................................... 338
Reynolds v. Norris, 86 F.3d 796 (8th Cir. 1996) ........................................... 330
Reynoso v. Giurbino, 462 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2006) ...................................... 144
Rhoden v. Rowland, 172 F.3d 633 (9th Cir. 1998) ...................................... 514
Rice v. White, 660 F.3d 242 (6th Cir. 2011) ........................................... 1183
Richards v. Quarterman, 566 F.3d 553 (5th Cir. 2009) ................................ 142
Richards v. Wisconsin, 520 U.S. 385 (1997) ........................................... 1564, 1565
Richardson v. Griffin, 866 F.3d 836 (7th Cir. 2017) ................................... 400, 649
Richardson v. United States, 119 S.Ct. 1707 (1999) .................................. 475, 1102, 1175
Richey v. Bradshaw, 498 F.3d 344 (6th Cir. 2007) ................................... 131
Richey v. Mitchell, 395 F.3d 660 (6th Cir. 2005) ..................................... 89, 131, 602, 783
Rickert v. Sweeney, 813 F.2d 907 (8th Cir. 1987) ................................... 1578
Rickman v. Bell, 131 F.3d 1150 (6th Cir. 1997) ....................................... 105
Riggins v. Rees, 74 F.3d 732 (6th Cir. 1996) ........................................... 1741
Riley v. California, 134 S. Ct. 2473 (2014) ........................................... 1417, 1539
Riley v. Payne, 352 F.3d 1313 (9th Cir. 2003) ........................................... 132
Riley v. Taylor, 277 F.3d 261 (3rd Cir. 2001) ........................................... 507, 1189
Ring v. Erickson, 983 F.2d 818 (8th Cir. 1992) ....................................... 755
Rivas v. Fischer, 780 F.3d 529 (2d Cir. 2015) ......................................... 140
Rivera v. Director, Department of Corrections, 915 F.2d 280 (7th Cir. 1990) 663
Rivera v. Thompson, 879 F.3d 7 (1st Cir. 2018) ....................................... 122, 347, 356
Rivers v. United States, 777 F.3d 1306 (11th Cir. 2015) .............................. 763, 777
Roberts v. Dretke, 356 F.3d 632 (5th Cir. 2004) ........................................ 103
Roberts v. State of Maine, 48 F.3d 1287 (1st Cir. 1995) ................................. 183
Robertson v. Klem, 580 F.3d 159 (3rd Cir. 2009) ........................................ 449, 1024
Robinson v. Borg, 918 F.2d 1387 (9th Cir. 1990) ......................................... 376
Robinson v. Ignacio, 360 F.3d 1044 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................... 182, 196
Sanders v. Mills, 592 F.3d 730 (6th Cir. 2010) .......................................................... 243
Sanders v. Norris, 60 F.3d 457 (8th Cir. 1995) ............................................................... 185
Sanders v. Schriro, 595 F.3d 1086 (9th Cir. 2010) ......................................................... 98, 505
Rochin v. California 342 U.S. 165 (1942) ................................................................. 1590, 1672
Rock v. Arkansas, 483 U.S. 44 (1987) ................................................................. 628
Rodgers v. Marshall, 678 F.3d 1149 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................. 175
Rodriguez v. Chandler, 382 F.3d 670 (7th Cir. 2004) ............................................ 69
Rodriguez v. McDonald, 872 F.3d 908 (9th Cir. 2017) ........................................... 367
Roe v. Delo, 160 F.3d 416 (8th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 91
Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470 (2000) ................................................................. 85, 88
Rogers v. Lynaugh, 848 F.2d 606 (5th Cir. 1988) ...................................................... 550
Rolan v. Vaughn, 445 F.3d 671 (3rd Cir. 2006) ............................................................ 130
Roller v. Cavanaugh, 984 F.2d 120 (4th Cir. 1993) ................................................... 784
Roper v. Simmons, 543 U.S. 551 (2005) ................................................................. 503
Rosario v. Kuhlman, 839 F.2d 918 (2d Cir. 1988) ..................................................... 642
Rosemond v. United States, 134 S. Ct. 1240 (2014) ................................................... 19
Roundtree v. United States, 751 F.3d 923 (8th Cir. 2014) ......................................... 112
Rubin v. Gee, 292 F.3d 396 (4th Cir. 2002) ............................................................... 71
Ruffin v. Dugger, 848 F.2d 1512 (11th Cir. 1988) ...................................................... 509
Ruimveld v. Birkett, 404 F.3d 1006 (6th Cir. 2005) ..................................................... 514
S.E.C. v. Carter, 907 F.2d 484 (5th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 464
Sable Communications of California v. F.C.C., 492 U.S. 115 (1989) ......................... 879
Salinas v. Texas, 133 S. Ct. 2174 (2013) ................................................................. 369, 824
Salinas v. United States, 522 U.S. 52 (1997) ............................................................. 1355
Sallahdin v. Gibson, 275 F.3d 1211 (10th Cir. 2002) ................................................. 104
Salman v. United States, --- S. Ct. --- (2016) .............................................................. 1680
Salts v. Epps, 676 F.3d 468 (5th Cir. 2012) ............................................................... 66
Sammons v. Taylor, 967 F.2d 1533 (11th Cir. 1992) ............................................... 1563
Sampson v. United States, 724 F.3d 150 (1st Cir. 2013) .......................................... 1195
San Jose Charter of Hells Angels Motorcycle Club v. City of San Jose, 402 F.3d 962 (9th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 1576
Sanchez v. Mondragon, 858 F.2d 1462 (10th Cir. 1988) ........................................... 188
Sanchez v. Roden, 753 F.3d 279 (1st Cir. 2014) ....................................................... 1181
Sanders v. Cotton, 398 F.3d 572 (7th Cir. 2005) ....................................................... 89, 1109, 1130
Sanders v. Lamarque, 357 F.3d 943 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................... 1079
Sanders v. Lane, 835 F.2d 1204 (7th Cir. 1987) ....................................................... 274
Sanders v. Ratelle, 21 F.3d 1446 (9th Cir. 1994) ....................................................... 155

1807

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsplaw.com
Sanders v. Sullivan, 863 F.2d 218 (2d Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 1266
Sandstrom v. Montana, 442 U.S. 510 (1979) ................................................................. 1131
Saranchak v. Secretary, Pa. Dept. of Corrections, 802 F.3d 579 (3d Cir. 2015) .......... 95
Satterlee v. Wolfenbarger, 453 F.3d 362 (6th Cir. 2006) ........................................... 115
Saylor v. Cornelius, 845 F.2d 1401 (6th Cir. 1988) ............................................... 558
Schaeffler v. United States, 806 F.3d 34 (2d Cir. 2015) ............................................ 160, 201
Scruggs v. United States, 513 F.3d 675 (7th Cir. 2008) ............................................ 87
Sears v. Upton, 130 S. Ct. 3259 (2010) ................................................................. 40, 94
Seattle Times Company v. United States District Court, 845 F.2d 1513 (9th Cir. 1988) .. 814
Sechrest v. Ignacio, 549 F.3d 789 (9th Cir. 2008) .................................................... 98, 505
Seidel v. Merkle, 146 F.3d 750 (9th Cir. 1998) ....................................................... 134
Selsor v. Kaiser, 81 F.3d 1492 (10th Cir. 1996) ...................................................... 78
Sena v. New Mexico State Prison, 109 F.3d 652 (10th Cir. 1997) ................................ 331
Sessoms v. Grounds, 776 F.3d 615 (9th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 342, 369
Sessoms v. Runnels, 691 F.3d 1054 (9th Cir. 2012) (en banc) .................................. 342, 369
Shannon v. United States, 512 U.S. 573 (1994) ..................................................... 1042
Sharp v. Rohling, 793 F.3d 1216 (10th Cir. 2015) ................................................... 390
Shaw v. United States, 137 S.Ct. 462 (2016) ........................................................... 211
Shelton v. Marshall, 796 F.3d 1075 (9th Cir. 2015) ............................................... 239
Shepard v. United States, 544 U.S. 13 (2005) ............................................................ 843
Shih Wei Su v. Filion, 335 F.3d 119 (2d Cir. 2003) ................................................. 253, 260
Shillinger v. Haworth, 70 F.3d 1132 (10th Cir. 1995) ............................................. 188
Shirley v. Yates, 807 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir. 2015) ....................................................... 1181
Showers v. Beard, 635 F.3d 625 (3rd Cir. 2011) ................................................... 126
Siddiqi v. United States, 98 F.3d 1427 (2d Cir. 1996) ........................................... 926
Siehl v. Grace, 561 F.3d 189 (3rd Cir. 2009) ......................................................... 128
Silva v. Brown, 416 F.3d 980 (9th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 244
Silva v. Woodford, 279 F.3d 825 (9th Cir. 2002) ................................................... 104, 244
Simmons v. Beard, 590 F.3d 223 (3rd Cir. 2009) .................................................. 232, 243
Simmons v. Beyer, 44 F.3d 1160 (3rd Cir. 1995) .................................................... 1701
Simmons v. United States, 390 U.S. 377 (1968) ................................................... 487, 792, 800
Simpson v. Jackson, (6th Cir. 2010) ........................................................... 392, 349
Simpson v. Jackson, 615 F.3d 421 (6th Cir. 2010) ................................................... 349
Singer v. Court of Common Pleas, Bucks County, PA, 879 F.2d 1203 (3rd Cir. 1989) ... 1477
Singh v. Prunty, 142 F.3d 1157 (9th Cir. 1998) ....................................................... 260
Sivak v. Hardison, 658 F.3d 898 (9th Cir. 2011) .................................................... 242, 251

1808

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Sizemore v. Fletcher</td>
<td>921 F.2d 667 (6th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skillling v. United States</td>
<td>130 S.Ct. 2896 (2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Slovik v. Yates</td>
<td>556 F.3d 747 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Slutzker v. Johnson</td>
<td>393 F.3d 373 (3rd Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Small v. United States</td>
<td>136 F.3d 1334 (D.C. Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smallwood v. State</td>
<td>2013 WL 1830961 (Florida 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smelcher v. Alabama</td>
<td>947 F.2d 1472 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smiley v. Thurmer</td>
<td>542 F.3d 574 (7th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. City of Chicago</td>
<td>524 F.3d 834 (7th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Curry</td>
<td>580 F.3d 1071 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Dretke</td>
<td>417 F.3d 438 (5th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Dretke</td>
<td>422 F.3d 269 (5th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Endell</td>
<td>860 F.2d 1528 (9th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Grams</td>
<td>565 F.3d 1037 (7th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Hofbauer</td>
<td>312 F.3d 809 (6th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Hollins</td>
<td>448 F.3d 533 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Horn</td>
<td>120 F.3d 400 (3rd Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Maryland</td>
<td>442 U.S. 735 (1979)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. McCormick</td>
<td>914 F.2d 1153 (9th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Mullin</td>
<td>379 F.3d 919 (10th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Ohio</td>
<td>494 U.S. 541 (1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Sec’y of New Mexico Dept. of Corrections</td>
<td>50 F.3d 801 (10th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Singletary</td>
<td>61 F.3d 815 (11th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Stewart</td>
<td>140 F.3d 1263 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. United States</td>
<td>133 S Ct. 714 (2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. United States</td>
<td>348 F.3d 545 (6th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Smith v. Zant</td>
<td>887 F.2d 1407 (11th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Abbott Labs.</td>
<td>740 F.3d 471 (9th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Snook v. Wood</td>
<td>89 F.3d 605 (9th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Snowden v. Singletary</td>
<td>135 F.3d 732 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Soffar v. Dretke</td>
<td>368 F.3d 441 (5th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Soviero v. United States</td>
<td>967 F.2d 791 (2d Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sowell v. Anderson</td>
<td>663 F.3d 783 (6th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sparks v. Sowders</td>
<td>852 F.2d 882 (6th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1809

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsslaw.com
Spears v. Mullin, 343 F.3d 1215 (10th Cir. 2003) .......................................................... 507, 1288
Splunge v. Clark, 960 F.2d 705 (7th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 1191
Stallings v. Bobby, 464 F.3d 576 (6th Cir. 2006) .............................................................. 768
Stallings v. Tansy, 28 F.3d 1018 (10th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 44
Stankewitz v. Wong, 698 F.3d 1163 (9th Cir. 2012) ......................................................... 96
Stankewitz v. Woodford, 365 F.3d 706 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................... 103
Stanley v. Bartley, 465 F.3d 810 (7th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 130, 144
Stanley v. Schriro, 598 F.3d 612 (9th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 98
Stansbury v. California, 511 U.S. 318 (1994) ....................................................................... 346
Staples v. United States, 511 U.S. 600 (1994) ................................................................. 865, 866, 1149, 1152, 1238
Stark v. Hickman, 455 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2006) ............................................................... 1158
Starr v. Lockhart, 23 F.3d 1280 (8th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 106, 154, 917
State of Texas v. Kleinert, 855 F.3d 305 (5th Cir. 2017) ................................................... 823
State v. Samuel, 643 N.W.2d 423 (Wis. 2002) .................................................................. 1768
State v. Smith, 920 N.E.2d 949 (Ohio 2009) .................................................................... 1418
Steidl v. Fermon, 494 F.3d 623 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 226
Stephens v. Kemp, 846 F.2d 642 (11th Cir. 1988) ............................................................ 109
Stephenson v. Neal, 865 F.3d 956 (7th Cir. 2017) ............................................................. 137, 513
Stevens v. McBride, 489 F.3d 883 (7th Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 100
Stevens v. Ortiz, 465 F.3d 1229 (10th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 272
Stewart v. Wolfenbarger, 468 F.3d 338 (6th Cir. 2006) .................................................... 130
Stirone v. United States, 361 U.S. 212 (1960) ............................................................... 820, 1032
Stitts v. Wilson, 713 F.3d 887 (7th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 124
Stockton v. Virginia, 852 F.2d 740 (4th Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 1081
Stoa v. United States, 22 F.3d 766 (7th Cir. 1994) ............................................................ 77
Stokes v. Singletary, 952 F.2d 1567 (11th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 377
Stone v. Dugger, 837 F.2d 1477 (11th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 509
Stow v. Murashige, 389 F.3d 880 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 554, 564
Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359 (1931) ................................................................. 447, 1129, 1132
Strouse v. Leonardo, 928 F.2d 548 (2d Cir. 1991) ............................................................ 74
Strozier v. Newsome, 871 F.2d 995 (11th Cir. 1989) ......................................................... 200
Stumpf v. Houk, 653 F.3d 426 (6th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 603
Sturgis v. Goldsmith, 796 F.2d 1103 (9th Cir. 1986) ....................................................... 520
Sulie v. Duckworth, 864 F.2d 1348 (7th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 1044
Sullivan v. Secretary, Fla. Dept. of Corrections, 837 F.3d 1195 (11th Cir. 2016) .......... 111
Summerlin v. Schriro, 427 F.3d 623 (9th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 102
Sussman v. Jenkins, 636 F.3d 329 (7th Cir. 2011) ............................................................. 126, 401, 484
Taberer v. Armstrong World Industries, Inc., 954 F.2d 888 (3rd Cir. 1992) ................. 464
Tamplin v. Muniz, 894 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2018) .............................................................. 522
Tankleff v. Senkowski, 135 F.3d 235 (2d Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 352, 1189

1810
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Tanner v. Yukins</td>
<td>867 F.3d 661 (6th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tarango v. McDaniel</td>
<td>837 F.3d 936 (9th Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tassin v. Cain</td>
<td>517 F.3d 770 (5th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tatum v. Foster</td>
<td>847 F.3d 459 (7th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tavera v. Smith</td>
<td>463 F.3d 141 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. Cain</td>
<td>545 F.3d 327 (5th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. Dawson</td>
<td>888 F.2d 1124 (6th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. Grounds</td>
<td>721 F.3d 809 (7th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. Maddox</td>
<td>366 F.3d 992 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. Singletary</td>
<td>122 F.3d 1390 (11th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. Singletary</td>
<td>148 F.3d 1276 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. United States</td>
<td>495 U.S. 575 (1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taylor v. Workman</td>
<td>554 F.3d 879 (10th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Teague v. Scott</td>
<td>60 F.3d 1167 (5th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tejeda v. Dubois</td>
<td>142 F.3d 18 (1st Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tennard v. Dretke</td>
<td>442 F.3d 240 (5th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tenney v. Dretke</td>
<td>416 F.3d 404 (5th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Terry v. Potter</td>
<td>111 F.3d 454 (6th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thigpen v. Cory</td>
<td>804 F.2d 893 (6th Cir. 1986)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. Chappell</td>
<td>678 F.3d 1086 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. Clements</td>
<td>789 F.3d 760 (7th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. Foltz</td>
<td>818 F.2d 476 (6th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. Harrelson</td>
<td>942 F.2d 1530 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. I.N.S.</td>
<td>35 F.3d 1332 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. Indiana</td>
<td>910 F.2d 1413 (7th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. O'Leary</td>
<td>856 F.2d 1011 (7th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. Varner</td>
<td>428 F.3d 491 (3rd Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas v. Westbrooks</td>
<td>849 F.3d 659 (6th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thompson v. United States,</td>
<td>111 F.3d 109 (11th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thompson v. United States</td>
<td>504 F.3d 1203 (11th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tice v. Johnson</td>
<td>647 F.3d 87 (4th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tilcock v. Budge</td>
<td>538 F.3d 1138 (9th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tiller v. Esposito</td>
<td>911 F.2d 575 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tippins v. Walker</td>
<td>77 F.3d 682 (2d Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Toliver v. McCaughtry</td>
<td>539 F.3d 766 (7th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Case</td>
<td>Decision Date</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>---------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $196,969.00 U.S. Currency</td>
<td>719 F.3d 644 (7th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $242,484, 389 F.3d 1149 (11th Cir. 2004 en banc)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $25,000, 853 F.2d 1501 (9th Cir. 1988)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $273,969.04 U.S. Currency</td>
<td>164 F.3d 462 (9th Cir. 1999)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $277,000.00, 941 F.2d 898 (9th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $28,000.00 U.S. Currency</td>
<td>802 F.3d 1100 (9th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $304,980.00, 732 F.3d 812 (7th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $31,000.00 in U.S. Currency</td>
<td>872 F.3d 342 (6th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $4,224,958.57, 392 F.3d 1002 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $45,000.00, 749 F.3d 709 (8th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $48,100.00 in U.S. Currency</td>
<td>756 F.3d 650 (8th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $500,000 in U.S. Currency (Gordin)</td>
<td>62 F.3d 59 (2d Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $515,060.42 in U.S. Currency</td>
<td>152 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $525,695.24 Seized from JPMorgan Chase, 869 F.3d 412 (6th Cir. 2017)</td>
<td>899</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $639,558, 955 F.2d 712 (D.C.Cir. 1992)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $7,850, 7 F.3d 1355 (8th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $8,221,877.16 in U.S. Currency</td>
<td>330 F.3d 141 (3rd Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $814,254.76 in U.S. Currency</td>
<td>51 F.3d 207 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $92,203, 537 F.3d 504 (5th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. $999,830.00, 704 F.3d 1042 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. 1982 Ford Pick-up (Mendoza), 873 F.2d 947 (6th Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>1009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. 20th Century Fox Film Corp., 882 F.2d 656 (2d Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>463</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. 3814 NW Thurman St., Portland, Or., 164 F.3d 1191 (9th Cir. 1999)</td>
<td>897</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. 408 Peyton Rd., S.W., 162 F.3d 644 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. 5208 Los Franciscos Way, L.A., Cal., 385 F.3d 1187 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>911</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. A.D., 28 F.3d 1353 (3rd Cir. 1994)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abair, 746 F.3d 260 (7th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abanatha, 999 F.2d 1246 (8th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abcasis, 45 F.3d 39 (2d Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abdallah, 911 F.3d 201 (4th Cir. 2018)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abdi, 142 F.3d 566 (2d Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abdulwahab, 715 F.3d 521 (4th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abernathy, 83 F.3d 17 (1st Cir. 1996)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abernathy, 843 F.3d 243 (6th Cir. 2016)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abney, 812 F.3d 1079 (D. C. Cir. 2016)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abreu, 406 F.3d 1304 (11th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abuhamra, 389 F.3d 309 (2d Cir. 2004)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Abu-Shawish, 507 F.3d 550 (7th Cir. 2007)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Accetturo, 842 F.2d 1408 (3rd Cir. 1988)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Acevedo, 141 F.3d 1421 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Acevedo, 882 F.3d 251 (1st Cir. 2018)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Acker, 52 F.3d 509 (4th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ackerman, 831 F.3d 1292 (10th Cir. 2016)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Acklen, 47 F.3d 739 (5th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Acosta-Ballaro, 8 F.3d 1532 (10th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1813

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Acosta-Colon, 157 F.3d 9 (1st Cir. 1998) ........................................... 1372, 1373, 1396, 1659
United States v. Acosta-Sierra, 690 F.3d 1111 (9th Cir. 2012) .............................................. 58
United States v. Adame-Hernandez, 763 F.3d 818 (7th Cir. 2014) ........................................ 964, 970
United States v. Adams, 1 F.3d 1566 (11th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 354
United States v. Adams, 26 F.3d 702 (7th Cir. 1994) ............................................................ 1410
United States v. Adams, 432 F.3d 1092 (9th Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 951
United States v. Adams, 448 F.3d 492 (2d Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 50, 958
United States v. Adams, 583 F.3d 457 (6th Cir. 2009) ............................................................ 389, 1112
United States v. Adams, 625 F.3d 371 (7th Cir. 2010) ......................................................... 1248
United States v. Adams, 722 F.3d 788 (6th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 27, 669, 697, 1725
United States v. Adams, 74 F.3d 1093 (11th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 1280
United States v. Adefehinti, 510 F.3d 319 (D.C. Cir. 2007) .................................................... 1251
United States v. Adejumo, 772 F.3d 513 (8th Cir. 2014) ....................................................... 624
United States v. Adenihi, 31 F.3d 58 (2d Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1121
United States v. Adjani, 452 F.3d 1140 (9th Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 1431
United States v. Adkins, 842 F.2d 210 (8th Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 1692
United States v. Adkinson, 135 F.3d 1363 (11th Cir. 1998) ................................................. 39, 214, 1015
United States v. Adkinson, 158 F.3d 1147 (11th Cir. 1998) ................................................. 1728
United States v. Adlman, 134 F.3d 1194 (2d Cir. 1998) ....................................................... 202
United States v. Agosto-Vega, 617 F.3d 541 (1st Cir. 2010) ................................................. 1347
United States v. Agosto-Vega, 731 F.3d 62 (1st Cir. 2013) .................................................. 461
United States v. Aguilar, 894 F.3d 351 (D.C. Cir. 2018) ....................................................... 110
United States v. Aguilar, 384 F.3d 520 (8th Cir. 2004) ....................................................... 341, 393
United States v. Aguilar, 645 F.3d 319 (5th Cir. 2011) ....................................................... 308
United States v. Aguilar, 80 F.3d 329 (9th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 1122
United States v. Aguilar-Aranceta, 58 F.3d 796 (1st Cir. 1995) ........................................... 675
United States v. Aguilera-Rios, 769 F.3d 626 (9th Cir. 2014) .............................................. 1003
United States v. Aguirre, 605 F.3d 351 (6th Cir. 2010) ......................................................... 176, 190
United States v. Ahmad, 101 F.3d 386 (5th Cir. 1996) ....................................................... 1153, 1162
United States v. Ajayi, 808 F.3d 1113 (7th Cir. 2015) ......................................................... 211, 1024
United States v. Akinsade, 686 F.3d 248 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................... 949
United States v. Akrawi, 920 F.2d 418 (6th Cir. 1990) ....................................................... 1614
United States v. Alanis, 335 F.3d 965 (9th Cir. 2003) ......................................................... 1188
United States v. Alarcon-Gonzalez, 73 F.3d 289 (10th Cir. 1996) .................................... 1652, 1670
United States v. Albers, 93 F.3d 1469 (10th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 500, 726, 742
United States v. Albertini, 830 F.2d 985 (9th Cir. 1987) ...................................................... 602, 620
United States v. Albinson, 356 F.3d 278 (3rd Cir. 2004) ..................................................... 1606
United States v. Albrechtsen, 151 F.3d 951 (9th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1385
United States v. Alcala-Sanchez, 666 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................ 1292
United States v. Alcantara, 396 F.3d 189 (2d Cir. 2005) .................................................... 1348
United States v. Alcantara-Castillo, 788 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2015) ..................................... 300, 496
United States v. Aleo, 681 F.3d 290 (6th Cir. 2012) ............................................................ 467
United States v. Al-Esawi, 560 F.3d 888 (8th Cir. 2009) .................................................... 834
United States v. Alexander, --- F.3d --- (2d Cir. 2018) ...................................................... 1460

1814
United States v. Alexander, 679 F.3d 721 (8th Cir. 2012) .................................................. 213, 817
United States v. Alexander, 741 F.3d 866 (7th Cir. 2014) .................................................. 300
United States v. Alexander, 835 F.2d 1406 (11th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 1412
United States v. Alexander, 835 F.2d 1406, 1409 n.3 (11th Cir. 1988) .................................. 1600
United States v. Alexius, 76 F.3d 642 (5th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 490
United States v. Aleynikov, 676 F.3d 71 (2d Cir. 2012) .................................................. 1733
United States v. Alferahin, 433 F.3d 1148 (9th Cir. 2006) .................................................. 145, 1129, 1232
United States v. Alford, 142 F.3d 825 (5th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1709
United States v. Ali, 557 F.3d 715 (6th Cir. 2009) .................................................. 818, 1020, 1243
United States v. Ali, 68 F.3d 1468 (2d Cir. 1995) .................................................. 352
United States v. Alikpo, 944 F.2d 206 (5th Cir. 1991) .................................................. 519
United States v. All Assets of G.P.S. Automotive Corp. (Schaffer), 66 F.3d 483 (2d Cir. 1995) 565
United States v. All Funds on Deposit in Any Accounts, 894 F.3d 121 (3d Cir. 1997), 767 F.Supp. 36 (E.D.N.Y. 1991) 889
United States v. Allen, 127 F.3d 260 (2nd Cir. 1997) .................................................. 43, 808, 1114
United States v. Allen, 129 F.3d 1159 (10th Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1132, 1254
United States v. Allen, 159 F.3d 832 (4th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1373, 1552
United States v. Allen, 357 F.3d 745 (8th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 511
United States v. Allen, 383 F.3d 644 (7th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 857
United States v. Allen, 406 F.3d 940 (8th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 511
United States v. Allen, 449 F.3d 1121 (10th Cir. 2006) .................................................. 856, 1043
United States v. Allen, 587 F.3d 246 (5th Cir. 2009) .................................................. 468
United States v. Allen, 798 F.2d 985 (7th Cir. 1986) .................................................. 1058
United States v. Allen, 813 F.3d 76 (2d Cir. 2016) .................................................. 1382
United States v. Allen, 831 F.2d 1487 (9th Cir. 1987) .................................................. 78
United States v. Allen, 864 F.3d 63 (2d Cir. 2017) .................................................. 390, 831
United States v. Allen, 892 F.2d 66 (10th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1234, 1287
United States v. Allen, 895 F.2d 1577 (10th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 199
United States v. Allen, 984 F.2d 940 (8th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 559
United States v. Allmendinger, 894 F.3d 121 (4th Cir. 2018) .................................................. 85
United States v. Almany, 598 F.3d 238 (6th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 49
United States v. Almeida, 341 F.3d 1318 (11th Cir. 2003) .................................................. 165
United States v. Al-Moayad, 545 F.3d 139 (2d Cir. 2008) .................................................. 27, 671, 740, 746
United States v. Alonzo, 991 F.2d 1422 (8th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 749
United States v. Al-Sadawi, 432 F.3d 419 (2d Cir. 2005) .................................................. 418, 881
United States v. Alston, 611 F.3d 219 (4th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 845
United States v. Alston, 77 F.3d 713 (3rd Cir. 1996) .................................................. 456
United States v. Alston-Graves, 435 F.3d 331 (D.C. Cir. 2006) .................................................. 1119
United States v. Altman, 48 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 1995) .................................................. 1220
United States v. Alvararado, 440 F.3d 191 (4th Cir. 2006) .................................................. 371
United States v. Alvararado, 817 F.2d 580 (9th Cir. 1987) .................................................. 1122
United States v. Alvararado, 923 F.2d 253 (2d Cir. 1991) .................................................. 1190
United States v. Alvararado-Valdez, 521 F.3d 337 (7th Cir. 2008) .................................................. 415
United States v. Alvararado-Zarza, 782 F.3d 246 (5th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 1502, 1523
United States v. Alvarez, 127 F.3d 372 (5th Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1490

1815

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Andujar-Basco, 488 F.3d 549 (1st Cir. 2007) .................................................. 1331
United States v. Angelos, 433 F.3d 738 (10th Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 1467, 1509, 1576
United States v. Angulo-Fernandez, 53 F.3d 1177 (10th Cir. 1995) ................................................. 1536
United States v. Ankeny, 502 F.3d 829 (9th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 855
United States v. Anigoni, 96 F.3d 1132 (9th Cir. 1996). ................................................................. 1192
United States v. Antar, 38 F.3d 1348 (3rd Cir. 1994). ................................................................. 813
United States v. Antar, 53 F.3d 568 (3rd Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1064
United States v. Antelope, 395 F.3d 1128 (9th Cir. 2005) ............................................................. 827
United States v. Anzalone, 148 F.3d 940 (8th Cir. 1998) .............................................................. 1306
United States v. Aponte, 619 F.3d 799 (8th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 579, 581
United States v. Aponte-Suarez, 905 F.2d 483 (1st Cir. 1990) ...................................................... 427
United States v. Apple MacPro Computer, 851 F.3d 238 (3rd Cir. 2017). ................................. 824, 832
United States v. Applewhite, 72 F.3d 140 (D. C. Cir. 1995) ..................................................... 596
United States v. Aquino, 674 F.3d 918 (8th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1370
United States v. Aquino, 836 F.2d 1268 (10th Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 1480
United States v. Arami, 536 F.3d 479 (5th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 972
United States v. Arbane, 446 F.3d 1223 (11th Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 423, 454
United States v. Arbelaez, 812 F.2d 530 (9th Cir. 1987) .............................................................. 1029
United States v. Arbolaez, 450 F.3d 1283 (11th Cir. 2006) ............................................................ 652, 892
United States v. Arboleda, 20 F.3d 58 (2d Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1099
United States v. Arce-Jasso, 389 F.3d 124 (5th Cir. 2004) ........................................................... 29
United States v. Archibald, 589 F.3d 289 (6th Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 1612
United States v. Arellano-Gallegos, 387 F.3d 794 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................. 51
United States v. Arellano-Gallegos, 387 F.3d 794 (9th Cir. 2003) ................................................... 978
United States v. Arenburg, 605 F.3d 164 (2d Cir. 2010) .............................................................. 325
United States v. Argentine, 814 F.2d 783 (1st Cir. 1987) ............................................................. 1099
United States v. Argomaniz, 925 F.2d 1349 (11th Cir. 1991) ..................................................... 829, 1046
United States v. Arias, 431 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 460, 710, 1717
United States v. Arias-Ordonez, 597 F.3d 972 (9th Cir. 2010) ..................................................... 1005
United States v. Armendariz-Mata, 949 F.2d 151 (5th Cir. 1991) ................................................... 803
United States v. Arnold, 106 F.3d 37 (3rd Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 373
United States v. Arnold, 117 F.3d 1308 (11th Cir. 1997) ............................................................... 254
United States v. Arnold, 533 F.3d 1003 (9th Cir. 2008) ............................................................... 1413, 1430
United States v. Arnpriester, 37 F.3d 466 (9th Cir. 1994) ............................................................ 1065
United States v. Arqueta-Ramos, 730 F.3d 1133 (9th Cir. 2013) ................................................... 964
United States v. Arredondo, 349 F.3d 310 (6th Cir. 2003) ............................................................. 466, 469
United States v. Arreguin, 735 F.3d 1168 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................................ 1452
United States v. Arroyo, 805 F.2d 589 (5th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 656, 748
United States v. Arthur, 949 F.2d 211 (6th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 1772
United States v. Artrip, 942 F.2d 1568 (11th Cir. 1991) .............................................................. 1037
United States v. Ashurov, 726 F.3d 395 (3rd Cir. 2013) ............................................................... 816, 1722
United States v. Askew, 529 F.3d 1119 (D.C. Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 1634, 1656, 1677
United States v. Assorted Jewelry Valued of $44,328.00, 833 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2016) ........... 912

1817

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Atehortva, 17 F.3d 546 (2d Cir. 1994) .................................................. 427
United States v. Atiyeh, 402 F.3d 354 (3rd Cir. 2005) .................................................... 1717
United States v. Atkins 843 F.3d 625 (6th Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 1180
United States v. Auernheimer, 748 F.3d 525 (3rd Cir. 2014) .......................................... 333, 1743
United States v. Augustin, 376 F.3d 135 (3rd Cir. 2004) .................................................. 861
United States v. Aunspaugh, 792 F.3d 1302 (11th Cir. 2015) ........................................... 1224
United States v. Avery, 719 F.3d 1080 (9th Cir. 2013) ....................................................... 1225
United States v. Avila, 733 F.3d 1258 (10th Cir. 2013) ...................................................... 949
United States v. Aviles-Colon, 536 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2008) ............................................... 232
United States v. Aviles-Reyes, 160 F.3d 258 (5th Cir. 1998) ........................................ 1064
United States v. Awadallah, 349 F.3d 42 (2d Cir. 2003) .................................................. 1388
United States v. Awadallah, 436 F.3d 125 (2d Cir. 2006) .................................................. 673, 718, 1284
United States v. Awen, 966 F.2d 1415 (11th Cir. 1992) ...................................................... 1259
United States v. Awon, 135 F.3d 96 (1st Cir. 1998) ............................................................ 666, 741
United States v. Ayala-Garcia, 574 F.3d 5 (1st Cir. 2009) .................................................. 309, 863
United States v. Ayeni, 374 F.3d 1313 (D. C. Cir. 2004) ..................................................... 1098
United States v. Ayer, 866 F.2d 571 (2d Cir. 1989) ............................................................ 464
United States v. Azubike, 504 F.3d 30 (1st Cir. 2007) ....................................................... 289
United States v. Azure, 801 F.2d 336 (8th Cir. 1986) ......................................................... 1765
United States v. Babwah, 972 F.2d 30 (2d Cir. 1992) ........................................................ 1396, 1659
United States v. Bader, 678 F.3d 858 (10th Cir. 2012) ...................................................... 1127
United States v. Bah, 574 F.3d 106 (2d Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 1250
United States v. Bahamonde, 445 F.3d 1225 (9th Cir. 2006) ......................................... 1724
United States v. Bahena-Cardenas, 70 F.3d 1071 (9th Cir. 1995) .................................. 1010
United States v. Bahr, 730 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 2013) ........................................................... 826
United States v. Bailey, 327 F.3d 1131 (10th Cir. 2003) ................................................... 710
United States v. Bailey, 419 F.3d 1208 (11th Cir. 2005) ..................................................... 886
United States v. Bailey, 553 F.3d 940 (6th Cir. 2009) ........................................................ 854, 870
United States v. Bailey, 696 F.3d 794 (9th Cir. 2012) ......................................................... 683
United States v. Bailey, 819 F.3d 92 (4th Cir. 2016) .......................................................... 277
United States v. Bailey, 834 F.2d 218 (1st Cir. 1987) .......................................................... 641, 1759
United States v. Bailey, 840 F.3d 99 (3rd Cir. 2016) ........................................................... 667
United States v. Bailin, 977 F.2d 270 (7th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 544
United States v. Bailon-Santana, 429 F.3d 1258 (9th Cir. 2005) ..................................... 1104
United States v. Bain, 874 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2017) ............................................................... 1675
United States v. Baird, 134 F.3d 1276 (6th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 822, 1132
United States v. Baird, 712 F.3d 623 (1st Cir. 2013) .......................................................... 862, 1112
United States v. Baker, 155 F.3d 392 (4th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 1043
United States v. Baker, 221 F.3d 438 (3rd Cir. 2000) ......................................................... 1410, 1605, 1625
United States v. Baker, 432 F.3d 1189 (11th Cir. 2005) ..................................................... 27, 652, 690
United States v. Baker, 489 F.3d 366 (D.C. Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 1316

1818

DONALD F. SAMUEL - GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA - 404-262-2225 - dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Baker, 508 F.3d 1321 (10th Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 855
United States v. Baker, 523 F.3d 1141 (10th Cir. 2008) ...................................................... 854
United States v. Baker, 538 F.3d 324 (5th Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 757, 760
United States v. Baker, 84 F.3d 1263 (10th Cir. 1996) ...................................................... 525
United States v. Baker, 98 F.3d 330 (8th Cir. 1996) ...................................................... 1692
United States v. Baker, 985 F.2d 1248 (4th Cir. 1993) ....................................................... 63, 428, 585, 1161, 1255
United States v. Bala, 489 F.3d 334 (8th Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 920
United States v. Baldovinos, 434 F.3d 233 (4th Cir. 2006) ................................................... 326
United States v. Baldwin, 418 F.3d 575 (6th Cir. 2005) ...................................................... 680
United States v. Ballew, 369 F.3d 450 (5th Cir. 2004) ...................................................... 54, 62
United States v. Ballinger, 312 F.3d 1264 (11th Cir. 2002) .................................................. 57, 1052
United States v. Ballinger, 395 F.3d 1218 (11th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 57, 1052
United States v. Ballivian, 819 F.2d 266 (11th Cir. 1987) .................................................... 930
United States v. Balter, 91 F.3d 427 (3rd Cir. 1996) ...................................................... 82
United States v. Banegas, 600 F.3d 342 (5th Cir. 2010) ...................................................... 513
United States v. Banks, 514 F.3d 959 (9th Cir. 2008) ............................................................ 1750
United States v. Banks, 546 F.3d 507 (7th Cir. 2008) ...................................................... 244, 1264
United States v. Banks, 942 F.2d 1576 (11th Cir. 1991) ...................................................... 605, 1116, 1278
United States v. Banks, 988 F.2d 1106 (11th Cir. 1993) ...................................................... 605, 1278
United States v. Bankston, 820 F.3d 215 (6th Cir. 2016) ..................................................... 815
United States v. Baptiste, 832 F.2d 1173 (9th Cir. 1987) .................................................... 560
United States v. Barajas-Alvarado, 655 F.3d 1077 (9th Cir. 2011) ......................................... 1004
United States v. Barajas-Chavez, 134 F.3d 1444 (10th Cir. 1998) ........................................ 1008
United States v. Barbee, 968 F.2d 1026 (10th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1123
United States v. Barel, 939 F.2d 26 (3rd Cir. 1991) ............................................................ 24
United States v. Barnes, 159 F.3d 4 (1st Cir. 1998) ............................................................. 1709
United States v. Barnes, 278 F.3d 644 (6th Cir. 2002) ...................................................... 1300
United States v. Barnes, 713 F.3d 1200 (9th Cir. 2013) ...................................................... 339
United States v. Barnes, 798 F.2d 283 (8th Cir. 1986) ...................................................... 491
United States v. Barnhart, 599 F.3d 737 (7th Cir. 2010) ..................................................... 1069
United States v. Barnhart, 979 F.2d 647 (8th Cir. 1992) .................................................... 1121
United States v. Barnwell, 477 F.3d 844 (6th Cir. 2007) .................................................... 178, 516, 1070
United States v. Baron, 860 F.2d 911 (9th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 1397
United States v. Baron, 94 F.3d 1312 (9th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 1397
United States v. Barone, 114 F.3d 1284 (1st Cir. 1997) ...................................................... 770
United States v. Barone, 71 F.3d 1442 (9th Cir. 1995) ...................................................... 1054
United States v. Barone, 968 F.2d 1378 (1st Cir. 1992) ..................................................... 382
United States v. Barragan, 871 F.3d 689 (9th Cir. 2017) ..................................................... 305
United States v. Barragan-Cepeda, 29 F.3d 1378 (9th Cir. 1994) .......................................... 545
United States v. Barragan-Devis, 133 F.3d 1287 (9th Cir. 1998) .......................................... 1098
United States v. Barraza-Ramos, 550 F.3d 1246 (10th Cir. 2008) ......................................... 1005
United States v. Barresse, 115 F.3d 610 (8th Cir. 1997) .................................................... 1306
United States v. Barrett, 111 F.3d 947 (D.C. Cir. 1997) .................................................... 1235

1819

DONALD F. SAMUEL - GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA - 404-262-2225 - dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Barrett, 870 F.2d 953 (3rd Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1161, 1748
United States v. Barrett, 982 F.2d 193 (6th Cir. 1992) .......................................................... 1305, 1317
United States v. Barrington, 806 F.2d 529 (5th Cir. 1986) .................................................. 1557, 1600
United States v. Barron, 172 F.3d 1153 (9th Cir. 1999) ......................................................... 1296
United States v. Barrow, 400 F.3d 109 (2d Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 834
United States v. Barry, 853 F.2d 1479 (8th Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 1627
United States v. Barry, 888 F.2d 1092 (6th Cir. 1989) ......................................................... 1739
United States v. Barta, 776 F.3d 931 (7th Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 610
United States v. Bartlett, 856 F.2d 1071 (8th Cir. 1988) ..................................................... 1044
United States v. Barton, 995 F.2d 931 (9th Cir. 1993) ......................................................... 236, 530, 1492
United States v. Basciano, 599 F.3d 184 (2d Cir. 2010) ....................................................... 563
United States v. Bashaw, 982 F.2d 168 (6th Cir. 1992) ....................................................... 1278
United States v. Basinski, 226 F.3d 829 (7th Cir. 2000) .................................................... 1456
United States v. Bass, 121 F.3d 1218 (8th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 1342
United States v. Bass, 310 F.3d 321 (5th Cir. 2002) .......................................................... 475
United States v. Batamula, 788 F.3d 166 (5th Cir. 2015) .................................................... 949
United States v. Bates, 84 F.3d 790 (6th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 1563
United States v. Bates, 917 F.2d 388 (9th Cir. 1990) ......................................................... 560
United States v. Batterjee, 361 F.3d 1210 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 620, 864
United States v. Battis, 589 F.3d 673 (3rd Cir. 2009) .......................................................... 1700
United States v. Battle, 836 F.2d 1084 (8th Cir. 1987) ....................................................... 1192
United States v. Bauer, 132 F.3d 504 (9th Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 166
United States v. Bautista, 362 F.3d 584 (9th Cir. 2004) ..................................................... 1439, 1624
United States v. Baxter, 889 F.2d 731 (6th Cir. 1989) .......................................................... 1491, 1513
United States v. BDO Seidman, 337 F.3d 802 (7th Cir. 2003) ............................................. 1335
United States v. Beal, 810 F.2d 574 (6th Cir. 1987) .......................................................... 1584
United States v. Beal, 961 F.2d 1512 (10th Cir. 1992) ....................................................... 619
United States v. Beale, 921 F.2d 1412 (11th Cir. 1991) ....................................................... 275
United States v. Bear Stops, 997 F.2d 451 (8th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 644, 713
United States v. Bear, 439 F.3d 565 (9th Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 1113, 1345
United States v. Beard, 161 F.3d 1190 (9th Cir. 1998) ....................................................... 1085
United States v. Beasley, 2 F.3d 1551 (11th Cir. 1993) ..................................................... 317
United States v. Beasley, 636 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1696
United States v. Beauchamp, 659 F.3d 560 (6th Cir. 2011) .............................................. 1444, 1643, 1665
United States v. Beaumont, 972 F.2d 553 (5th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1578
United States v. Becerra, 992 F.2d 960 (9th Cir. 1993) ...................................................... 618
United States v. Beck, 140 F.3d 1129 (8th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 1533
United States v. Becker, 23 F.3d 1537 (9th Cir. 1994) ....................................................... 1566
United States v. Becker, 502 F.3d 122 (2d Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 403
United States v. Beckner, 134 F.3d 714 (5th Cir. 1998) ....................................................... 1212
United States v. Beckner, 69 F.3d 1290 (5th Cir. 1995) ....................................................... 1200
United States v. Beene, --- F.3d --- (5th Cir. 2016) .......................................................... 1404
United States v. Behrens, 644 F.3d 754 (8th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1681

1820

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case</th>
<th>Volume and Page Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Berkowitz</td>
<td>936 F.2d 337 (7th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bell</td>
<td>22 F.3d 274 (11th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bell</td>
<td>585 F.3d 1045 (7th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bell</td>
<td>936 F.2d 337 (7th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bellaizac-Hurtado</td>
<td>700 F.3d 1245 (11th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Belless</td>
<td>338 F.3d 1063 (9th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bello-Bahena</td>
<td>411 F.3d 1083 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Belt</td>
<td>89 F.3d 710 (10th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Beltramea</td>
<td>785 F.3d 287 (8th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Beltran</td>
<td>917 F.2d 641 (1st Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Beltran-Ortiz</td>
<td>91 F.3d 665 (4th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benally</td>
<td>146 F.3d 1232 (10th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benard</td>
<td>680 F.3d 1206 (10th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benbow</td>
<td>539 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bendek</td>
<td>146 F.3d 1326 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bender</td>
<td>221 F.3d 265 (1st Cir. 2000)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benevento</td>
<td>836 F.2d 60 (2d Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benford</td>
<td>875 F.3d 1007 (10th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benitez-Avila</td>
<td>570 F.3d 364 (1st Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benjamin</td>
<td>711 F.3d 371 (3rd Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bennafield</td>
<td>287 F.3d 320 (4th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bennett</td>
<td>332 F.3d 1094 (7th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bennett</td>
<td>363 F.3d 947 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bennett</td>
<td>621 F.3d 1131 (9th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bennett</td>
<td>836 F.2d 1314 (11th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bennett</td>
<td>905 F.2d 931 (6th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benson</td>
<td>961 F.2d 707 (8th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Benz</td>
<td>472 F.3d 657 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Beraun-Panez</td>
<td>812 F.2d 578 (9th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bercier</td>
<td>506 F.3d 625 (8th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bergeson</td>
<td>425 F.3d 1221 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bergfeld</td>
<td>280 F.3d 486 (5th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bergman</td>
<td>599 F.3d 1142 (10th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Berkery</td>
<td>889 F.2d 1281 (3rd Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Berkowitz</td>
<td>927 F.2d 1376 (7th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bernal</td>
<td>861 F.2d 434 (5th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bernal-Obeso</td>
<td>989 F.2d 331 (9th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bernard</td>
<td>299 F.3d 467 (5th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bernhardt</td>
<td>831 F.2d 181 (9th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Beros</td>
<td>833 F.2d 455 (3rd Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Berroa</td>
<td>856 F.3d 141 (1st Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Berry</td>
<td>683 F.3d 1015 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Berry</td>
<td>911 F.3d 354 (6th Cir. 2018)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Berry, 92 F.3d 597 (7th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 1089
United States v. Bershchansky, 788 F.3d 102 (2d Cir. 2015) .................................................. 1503, 1573
United States v. Bert, 814 F.3d 70 (2d Cir. 2016) .................................................................. 1704
United States v. Best, 135 F.3d 1223 (8th Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 1561, 1625
United States v. Beuttenmuller, 29 F.3d 973 (5th Cir. 1994) ...................................................... 215, 627, 1234
United States v. Bey, 911 F.3d 139 (3rd Cir. 2018) ................................................................. 1655
United States v. Beydler, 120 F.3d 985 (9th Cir. 1997) .............................................................. 771
United States v. Biaggi, 909 F.2d 662 (2d Cir. 1990) ............................................................... 269, 641, 1358
United States v. Biberfeld, 957 F.2d 98 (3rd Cir. 1992) ............................................................ 1266
United States v. Bigford, 365 F.3d 859 (10th Cir. 2004) ............................................................. 285
United States v. Biggs, 441 F.3d 1069 (9th Cir. 2006) ............................................................... 1684
United States v. Bigler, 810 F.2d 1317 (5th Cir. 1987) .............................................................. 1711
United States v. Bigman, 906 F.2d 392 (9th Cir. 1990) ............................................................. 962
United States v. Birbal, 62 F.3d 456 (2d Cir. 1995) .................................................................. 1165
United States v. Birdwell, 887 F.2d 643 (5th Cir. 1989) ............................................................ 1305
United States v. Bishop, 959 F.2d 820 (9th Cir. 1992) .............................................................. 1193
United States v. Bissell, 866 F.2d 1343 (11th Cir. 1989) ............................................................. 887, 894, 908
United States v. Biyiiklioglu, 652 Fed.Appx. 274 (5th Cir. 2016) ................................................ 1218
United States v. Black Lance, 454 F.3d 922 (8th Cir. 2006) ....................................................... 554
United States v. Black, 707 F.3d 531 (4th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 1642
United States v. Black, 750 F.3d 1053 (9th Cir. 2014) ............................................................... 611, 922
United States v. Blackledge, 751 F.3d 188 (4th Cir. 2014) .......................................................... 65
United States v. Blackmon, 839 F.2d 900 (2d Cir. 1988) ............................................................ 459
United States v. Blackstone, 56 F.3d 1143 (9th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 804
United States v. Blagojevich, 794 F.3d 729 (7th Cir. 2015) ........................................................ 265, 988
United States v. Blair, 524 F.3d 740 (6th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1528
United States v. Blair, 661 F.3d 755 (4th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1247
United States v. Blake, 107 F.3d 651 (8th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 657
United States v. Blake, 888 F.2d 795 (11th Cir. 1989) ............................................................... 1442
United States v. Blakey, 14 F.3d 1557 (11th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 293, 317
United States v. Blakey, 960 F.2d 996 (11th Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 750
United States v. Blanchard, 542 F.3d 1133 (7th Cir. 2008) ........................................................ 716, 1070
United States v. Blanche, 149 F.3d 763 (8th Cir. 1998) ............................................................. 1771
United States v. Blanco, 392 F.3d 382 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 227, 259, 1137
United States v. Blanco, 844 F.2d 344 (6th Cir. 1988) ............................................................... 1627
United States v. Bland, 908 F.2d 471 (9th Cir. 1990) ............................................................... 678
United States v. Blankenship, 382 F.3d 1110 (11th Cir. 2004) .................................................... 820, 1252, 1691
United States v. Blankenship, 970 F.2d 283 (7th Cir. 1992) ....................................................... 431
United States v. Blanton, 476 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 2007) .............................................................. 554
United States v. Blasini-Lluberas, 144 F.3d 881 (1st Cir. 1998) .................................................. 206
United States v. Blaylock, 20 F.3d 1458 (9th Cir. 1994) ............................................................. 120, 645
United States v. Blaze, 143 F.3d 585 (10th Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 1625
United States v. Blechman, 657 F.3d 1052 (10th Cir. 2011) ........................................................ 756
United States v. Blevins, 960 F.2d 1252 (4th Cir. 1992) ............................................................ 320
United States v. Blitch, 622 F.3d 658 (7th Cir. 2010) ............................................................... 717, 1075, 1105
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Citation</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Circuit</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bloate, 655 F.3d 750</td>
<td>2011</td>
<td>8th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bloch, 718 F.3d 638</td>
<td>2013</td>
<td>7th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bloom, 149 F.3d 649</td>
<td>1998</td>
<td>7th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bolton, 890 F.2d 1079</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bohn, 807 F.2d 159</td>
<td>1986</td>
<td>10th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boidi, 568 F.3d 24</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>1st Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boitano, 796 F.3d 1160</td>
<td>2015</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bolick, 917 F.2d 135</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>10th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bolton, 893 F.2d 894</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>7th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bomski, 125 F.3d 1115</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>6th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonas, 344 F.3d 945</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonavia, 927 F.2d 565</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonds, 608 F.3d 495</td>
<td>2010</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonds, 784 F.3d 582</td>
<td>2015</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonds, 829 F.2d 1072</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boneshirt, 662 F.3d 509</td>
<td>2011</td>
<td>8th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonilla, 579 F.3d 1233</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonilla, 579 F.3d 1233</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>11th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonilla, 637 F.3d 980</td>
<td>2011</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonitz, 826 F.2d 954</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>10th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bonventre, 720 F.3d 126</td>
<td>2013</td>
<td>2d Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Booker, 684 F.3d 421</td>
<td>2012</td>
<td>3d Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Booker, 728 F.3d 535</td>
<td>2013</td>
<td>6th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boone, 951 F.2d 1526</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>9th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Booth, 432 F.3d 542</td>
<td>2005</td>
<td>3rd Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bordeaux, 121 F.3d 1187</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>8th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bordeaux, 400 F.3d 548</td>
<td>2005</td>
<td>8th Circuit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Borman, 559 F.3d 150</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>3rd Circuit</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1823
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Study</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boros</td>
<td>668 F.3d 901 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Borostowski</td>
<td>775 F.3d 851 (7th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Borrero</td>
<td>771 F.3d 973 (7th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bortnovsky</td>
<td>820 F.2d 572 (2d Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bosse</td>
<td>898 F.2d 113 (9th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Botello-Rosales</td>
<td>728 F.3d 865 (9th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bouchard</td>
<td>828 F.3d 116 (2d Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boulware</td>
<td>384 F.3d 794 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bouthot</td>
<td>878 F.2d 1506 (1st Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowen</td>
<td>799 F.3d 336 (5th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowen</td>
<td>857 F.2d 1337 (9th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowers</td>
<td>432 F.3d 518 (3rd Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowers</td>
<td>594 F.3d 522 (6th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowling</td>
<td>770 F.3d 1168 (7th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowling</td>
<td>900 F.2d 926 (6th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowman</td>
<td>341 F.3d 1228 (11th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowman</td>
<td>496 F.3d 685 (D.C. Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowman</td>
<td>634 F.3d 357 (6th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bowman</td>
<td>884 F.3d 200 (4th Cir. 2018)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Box</td>
<td>50 F.3d 345 (5th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boyce</td>
<td>351 F.3d 1102 (11th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boyce</td>
<td>849 F.2d 833 (3rd Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boyd</td>
<td>131 F.3d 951 (11th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boyd</td>
<td>54 F.3d 868 (D.C. Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boyd</td>
<td>55 F.3d 239 (7th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boykin</td>
<td>794 F.3d 939 (8th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Boyland</td>
<td>862 F.3d 279 (2d Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Brackeen</td>
<td>969 F.2d 827 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bradfield</td>
<td>113 F.3d 515 (5th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bradley</td>
<td>381 F.3d 641 (7th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bradley</td>
<td>455 F.3d 453 (4th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bradley</td>
<td>820 F.2d 3 (1st Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bradley</td>
<td>922 F.2d 1290 (6th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bradshaw</td>
<td>935 F.2d 295 (D.C. Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Brakke</td>
<td>934 F.2d 174 (8th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Brathwaite</td>
<td>458 F.3d 376 (5th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Braun</td>
<td>801 F.3d 1301 (11th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Braxton</td>
<td>784 F.3d 240 (4th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Brazel</td>
<td>102 F.3d 1120 (11th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Breckenridge</td>
<td>93 F.3d 132 (4th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Breinig</td>
<td>70 F.3d 850 (6th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Brewer</td>
<td>766 F.3d 884 (8th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Bridges</td>
<td>344 F.3d 1010 (9th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1824
United States v. Bright, 596 F.3d 683 (9th Cir. 2010)......................................................... 826
United States v. Brignoni-Ponce, 422 U.S. 873 (1975).......................................................... 1415
United States v. Briley, 770 F.3d 267 (4th Cir. 2014) ........................................................... 695
United States v. Brinkworth, 68 F.3d 633 (2d Cir. 1995)...................................................... 1064
United States v. Brisbane, 367 F.3d 910 (D. C. Cir. 2004).................................................... 600
United States v. Bristol-Martir, 570 F.3d 29 (1st Cir. 2009).................................................. 1076
United States v. Brito, 136 F.3d 397 (5th Cir. 1998)............................................................ 582
United States v. Britton, 731 F.3d 745 (7th Cir. 2013).......................................................... 461
United States v. Brobst, 558 F.3d 982 (9th Cir. 2009)............................................................ 349
United States v. Brock, 501 F.3d 762 (6th Cir. 2007)............................................................ 989
United States v. Brock, 789 F.3d 60 (2d Cir. 2015)............................................................... 440
United States v. Brodie, 742 F.3d 1058 (D.C. Cir. 2014)....................................................... 1400, 1466, 1495, 1664
United States v. Brooks, 508 F.3d 1205 (9th Cir. 2007)....................................................... 1763
United States v. Brooks, 750 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir. 2014)....................................................... 323
United States v. Brooks, 772 F.3d 1161 (9th Cir. 2014).......................................................... 400, 409, 649
United States v. Brooks, 966 F.2d 1500 (D.C.Cir. 1992)....................................................... 228, 245
United States v. Brothers Const. Co. of Ohio, 219 F.3d 300 (4th Cir. 2000)............................ 777
United States v. Brown, 108 F.3d 863 (8th Cir. 1997)............................................................ 320, 1082
United States v. Brown, 117 F.3d 471 (11th Cir. 1997)........................................................... 959
United States v. Brown, 151 F.3d 476 (6th Cir. 1998)........................................................... 822
United States v. Brown, 186 F.3d 661 (5th Cir. 1999)............................................................ 1253
United States v. Brown, 3 F.3d 673 (3d Cir. 1993)................................................................. 585
United States v. Brown, 33 F.3d 1002 (8th Cir. 1994)............................................................ 1115
United States v. Brown, 352 F.3d 654 (2d Cir. 2003)............................................................. 1187
United States v. Brown, 368 F.3d 992 (8th Cir. 2004)............................................................. 205
United States v. Brown, 401 F.3d 588 (4th Cir. 2005)............................................................ 1648
United States v. Brown, 441 F.3d 1330 (11th Cir. 2006)......................................................... 511
United States v. Brown, 448 F.3d 239 (3rd Cir. 2006)............................................................. 1646, 1667
United States v. Brown, 449 F.3d 154 (D.C. Cir. 2006)......................................................... 872
United States v. Brown, 459 F.3d 509 (5th Cir. 2006)............................................................. 42, 1210, 1227
United States v. Brown, 508 F.3d 1066 (D.C.Cir. 2007).......................................................... 301
United States v. Brown, 560 F.3d 754 (8th Cir. 2009).............................................................. 870, 1128
United States v. Brown, 595 F.3d 498 (3rd Cir. 2010).............................................................. 81
United States v. Brown, 623 F.3d 104 (2d Cir. 2010).............................................................. 83
United States v. Brown, 631 F.3d 638 (3rd Cir. 2011).............................................................. 1488
United States v. Brown, 726 F.3d 993 (7th Cir. 2013).............................................................. 440
United States v. Brown, 765 F.3d 278 (3rd Cir. 2014)............................................................. 696
United States v. Brown, 785 F.3d 1337 (9th Cir. 2015)........................................................... 174
United States v. Brown, 79 F.3d 1499 (7th Cir. 1996)............................................................. 1584
United States v. Brown, 79 F.3d 1550 (11th Cir. 1996).......................................................... 1210, 1216
United States v. Brown, 819 F.3d 800 (6th Cir. 2016)............................................................ 1703
United States v. Brown, 826 F.3d 375 (6th Cir. 2016)............................................................ 1501, 1568
United States v. Brown, 832 F.2d 128 (9th Cir. 1987)............................................................. 1090
United States v. Brown, 859 F.3d 730 (9th Cir. 2017)............................................................. 298, 1320
United States v. Brown, 872 F.2d 385 (11th Cir. 1989)............................................................ 437, 1757

1825

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Burt, 410 F.3d 1100 (9th Cir. 2005) ........................................... 1113, 1345
United States v. Burton, 425 F.3d 1008 (5th Cir. 2005) ........................................... 325
United States v. Bush, 585 F.3d 806 (4th Cir. 2009) ........................................... 1045
United States v. Bustamante, 687 F.3d 1190 (9th Cir. 2012) ................................... 54
United States v. Bustamante, 805 F.2d 201 (6th Cir. 1986) ................................... 410
United States v. Bustamante-Conchas, 850 F.3d 1130 (10th Cir. 2017) ................... 1167
United States v. Butler, 43 F.3d 531 (10th Cir. 1994) ........................................... 963
United States v. Butler, 223 F.3d 368 (6th Cir. 2000) ........................................... 1396
United States v. Butler, 41 F.3d 1435 (11th Cir. 1995) ........................................... 560
United States v. Byram, 145 F.3d 405 (1st Cir. 1998) ........................................... 538
United States v. C.M., 485 F.3d 492 (9th Cir. 2007) ........................................... 341, 352
United States v. Cabacco, 332 F.3d 622 (9th Cir. 2003) ........................................... 1203
United States v. Cabassa, 62 F.3d 470 (2d Cir. 1995) ........................................... 575
United States v. Cabell, 811 F.3d 801 (6th Cir. 2016) ........................................... 1743
United States v. Cabrera-Rivera, 583 F.3d 26 (1st Cir. 2009) .................................. 825
United States v. Cachucha, 484 F.3d 1266 (10th Cir. 2007) ................................. 271
United States v. Cacioppo, 460 F.3d 1012 (8th Cir. 2006) .................................. 1294
United States v. Cagley, 849 F.2d 924 (5th Cir. 1988) ........................................... 820, 1151
United States v. Cai, 671 F.3d 271 (2d Cir. 2012) ........................................... 1396, 1659
United States v. Calabrese, 942 F.2d 218 (3rd Cir. 1991) .................................. 1574
United States v. Calderon, 391 F.3d 370 (2d Cir. 2004) .................................. 1356
United States v. Calderon, 785 F.3d 847 (2d Cir. 2015) .................................. 1199
United States v. Caldwell, 560 F.3d 1214 (10th Cir. 2009) ................................. 1007
United States v. Caldwell, 589 F.3d 1233 (10th Cir. 12/29/09) ......................... 16
United States v. Caldwell, 760 F.3d 267 (3rd Cir. 2014) .................................. 1250
United States v. Calle, 822 F.2d 1016 (11th Cir. 1987) .................................. 668, 696, 724
United States v. Camacho, 661 F.3d 718 (1st Cir. 2011) .................................. 1374, 1448, 1649, 1669
United States v. Camacho, 955 F.2d 950 (4th Cir. 1992) .................................. 1356
United States v. Camacho-Lopez, 450 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 2006) ......................... 648
United States v. Cameron, 699 F.3d 621 (1st Cir. 2012) .................................. 1006
United States v. Cameron, 814 F.2d 403 (7th Cir. 1987) .................................. 410
United States v. Cameron, 907 F.2d 1051 (11th Cir. 1990) ............................... 726
United States v. Camick, 796 F.3d 1206 (10th Cir. 2015) ............................... 1045
United States v. Camisa, 969 F.2d 1428 (2d Cir. 1992) .................................. 999, 1209, 1232
United States v. Camou, 773 F.3d 932 (9th Cir. 2014) .................................. 74
United States v. Campbell, --- F.3d --- (11th Cir. 2019) .................................. 1417, 1471, 1504, 1540, 1548
United States v. Campbell, 775 F.3d 664 (5th Cir. 2014) .................................. 1520
United States v. Campbell, 920 F.2d 793 (11th Cir. 1991) .................................. 869
United States v. Campbell, 945 F.2d 713 (4th Cir. 1991) .................................. 1538, 1558
United States v. Canada, 960 F.2d 263 (1st Cir. 1992) .................................. 1478
United States v. Canady, 126 F.3d 352 (2d Cir. 1997) .................................. 1302
United States v. Canals-Jimenez, 943 F.2d 1284 (11th Cir. 1991) ................. 518, 875

1827

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Canan, 48 F.3d 954 (6th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 778
United States v. Cancelliere, 69 F.3d 1116 (11th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 1037
United States v. Candelario-Santana, 834 F.3d 8 (1st Cir. 2016) ........................................ 1346
United States v. Cannon, 88 F.3d 1495 (8th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 315
United States v. Cannon, 981 F.2d 785 (5th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 374
United States v. Cano, 519 F.3d 512 (5th Cir. 2008) .............................................................. 195, 523
United States v. Cano-Varela, 497 F.3d 1122 (10th Cir. 2007) ........................................... 1316
United States v. Canterbury, 985 F.2d 483 (10th Cir. 1993) ................................................ 1333
United States v. Cantu, 876 F.2d 1134 (5th Cir. 1989) ............................................................ 616, 663
United States v. Canty, 499 F.3d 729 (7th Cir. 2007) .............................................................. 479, 1345
United States v. Capers, 627 F.3d 470 (2d Cir. 12/1/10) ....................................................... 339
United States v. Capoccia, 503 F.3d 103 (2d Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 892
United States v. Caraballo-Rodriguez, 480 F.3d 62 (1st Cir. 2007) ....................................... 1237
United States v. Cardenas Alvarado, 806 F.2d 566 (5th Cir. 1986) .................................... 1280
United States v. Cardona-Sandoval, 518 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2008) ..................................... 1606
United States v. Cardona-Sandoval, 6 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 1993) ........................................... 1485, 1626
United States v. Cardwell, 680 F.2d 75 (9th Cir. 1982) ....................................................... 1576
United States v. Carey, 172 F.3d 1268 (10th Cir. 1999) ..................................................... 1431, 1467
United States v. Carey, 836 F.3d 1092 (9th Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 1582, 1752
United States v. Cargo-Vergara, 57 F.3d 993 (11th Cir. 1995) .............................................. 539
United States v. Carillo, 860 F.3d 1293 (10th Cir. 2017) ...................................................... 955
United States v. Carlson, 787 F.3d 939 (8th Cir. 2015) ......................................................... 807
United States v. Carmen, 697 F.3d 964 (9th Cir. 2012) ...................................................... 335, 635
United States v. Carneiro, 861 F.2d 1117 (9th Cir. 1988) .................................................... 1756
United States v. Carnes, 309 F.3d 950 (6th Cir. 2002) .......................................................... 1605
United States v. Caro, 997 F.2d 657 (9th Cir. 1993) ............................................................. 980, 1308
United States v. Carona, 660 F.3d 360 (9th Cir. 2011) .......................................................... 81
United States v. Caronia, 703 F.3d 149 (2d Cir. 2012) .......................................................... 598, 879
United States v. Carpenter, 360 F.3d 591 (6th Cir. 2004) ....................................................... 1571
United States v. Carpenter, 422 F.3d 738 (8th Cir. 2005) ...................................................... 595
United States v. Carpenter, 494 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2007) ....................................................... 36, 289
United States v. Carpenter, 819 F.3d 880 (6th Cir. 2016) ...................................................... 1516
United States v. Carpenter, 961 F.2d 824 (9th Cir. 1992) ...................................................... 992
United States v. Carper, 942 F.2d 1298 (8th Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 433
United States v. Carr, 761 F.3d 1068 (9th Cir. 2014) ............................................................. 53, 869
United States v. Carrasco, 381 F.3d 1237 (11th Cir. 2004) .................................................... 708
United States v. Carraway, 108 F.3d 745 (7th Cir. 1997) ...................................................... 320
United States v. Carreon-Ibarra, 673 F.3d 358 (5th Cir. 2012) ........................................... 949
United States v. Carrero, 77 F.3d 11 (1st Cir. 1996) ............................................................. 1301
United States v. Carrigan, 804 F.2d 599 (10th Cir. 1986) ..................................................... 1759
United States v. Carrillo, 435 F.3d 767 (7th Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 1119
United States v. Carrillo-Bernal, 58 F.3d 1490 (10th Cir. 1995) .......................................... 30
United States v. Carroll, 26 F.3d 1380 (6th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 303
United States v. Carson, 52 F.3d 1173 (2d Cir. 1995) ............................................................ 1360
United States v. Carter, 130 F.3d 1432 (10th Cir. 1997) ....................................................... 1745

1828
United States v. Carter, 360 F.3d 1235 (10th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 1613
United States v. Carter, 752 F.3d 8 (1st Cir. 2014) ............................................................... 851
United States v. Carter, 779 F.3d 623 (6th Cir. 2015) ............................................................ 686
United States v. Carter, 801 F.2d 78 (2d Cir. 1986) ............................................................ 663
United States v. Carter, 884 F.2d 368 (8th Cir. 1989) ......................................................... 353
United States v. Cartwright, 359 F.3d 281 (3rd Cir. 2004) .................................................. 23, 424, 874
United States v. Carucci, 364 F.3d 339 (1st Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 1253
United States v. Caruto, 532 F.3d 822 (9th Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 355, 1330
United States v. Casallas, 59 F.3d 1173 (11th Cir. 1995) ..................................................... 1311
United States v. Casamento, 887 F.2d 1141 (2d Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1691
United States v. Caseer, 399 F.3d 828 (6th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 1243
United States v. Casellas-Toro, 807 F.3d 380 (1st Cir. 2015) ............................................. 278
United States v. Caseres, 533 F.3d 1064 (9th Cir. 2008) ...................................................... 1408, 1542
United States v. Cash, 47 F.3d 1083 (11th Cir. 1995) .......................................................... 199
United States v. Casoni, 950 F.2d 893 (3rd Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 757
United States v. Cass, 127 F.3d 1218 (10th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 654
United States v. Cassel, 408 F.3d 622 (9th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 880, 1130, 1145
United States v. Cassese, 428 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 1682
United States v. Castanedo, 162 F.3d 832 (5th Cir. 1998) ..................................................... 835, 1738
United States v. Castano, 543 F.3d 826 (6th Cir. 2008) ....................................................... 870
United States v. Castelan, 219 F.3d 690 (7th Cir. 2000) ....................................................... 769
United States v. Castellanos, 518 F.3d 965 (8th Cir. 2008) .................................................. 1437
United States v. Castile, 795 F.2d 1273 (6th Cir. 1986) ....................................................... 1222
United States v. Castillo, 140 F.3d 874 (10th Cir. 1998) ..................................................... 715
United States v. Castillo, 924 F.2d 1227 (2d Cir. 1991) ..................................................... 803
United States v. Castillo-Basa, 483 F.3d 890 (9th Cir. 2007) ............................................. 543
United States v. Castillo-Garcia, 117 F.3d 1179 (10th Cir. 1997) ........................................ 1756
United States v. Castillo-Mendez, 868 F.3d 830 (9th Cir. 2017) ........................................ 1002
United States v. Castle, 825 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ...................................................... 1640, 1663
United States v. Castle, 906 F.2d 134 (5th Cir. 1990) ....................................................... 1711
United States v. Castleton, 134 S. Ct. 1405 (2014) ............................................................ 849, 858
United States v. Castro, 26 F.3d 557 (5th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 119
United States v. Castro, 704 F.3d 125 (3rd Cir. 2013) ....................................................... 48, 817
United States v. Castro, 829 F.2d 1038 (11th Cir. 1987) ..................................................... 1694
United States v. Castro-Taveras, 841 F.3d 34 (1st Cir. 2016) ............................................ 111
United States v. Catone, 769 F.3d 866 (4th Cir. 2014) ....................................................... 1126
United States v. Catton, 89 F.3d 387 (7th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 292, 928
United States v. Causevic, 636 F.3d 998 (8th Cir. 2011) ...................................................... 412
United States v. Cavallo, 790 F.3d 1202 (11th Cir. 2015) .................................................... 174
United States v. Cavanaugh, 948 F.2d 405 (8th Cir. 1991) ............................................... 559
United States v. Cavin, 39 F.3d 1299 (5th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 643, 1139
United States v. Ceballos, 340 F.3d 115 (2d Cir. 2003) ..................................................... 267, 446
United States v. Ceballos, 812 F.2d 42 (2d Cir. 1987) ....................................................... 1396
United States v. Cedano-Arellano, 332 F.3d 568 (9th Cir. 2003) ....................................... 538, 1464
United States v. Cedelle, 89 F.3d 181 (4th Cir. 1996) ....................................................... 1153

1829

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Cedeno, 644 F.3d 79 (2d Cir. 2011) ........................................ 484, 721
United States v. Cessa, 817 F.2d 595 (9th Cir. 1987) ........................................ 545
United States v. Cellitti, 387 F.3d 618 (7th Cir. 2004) .................................. 1438, 1446, 1583
United States v. Cerne, 603 F.3d 32 (2d Cir. 2010) .......................................... 1005
United States v. Certain Real Property Located at Route 1, 126 F.3d 1314 (11th Cir. 1997) .... 903
United States v. Cervantes, 703 F.3d 1135 (9th Cir. 2012) .................................. 1405, 1421, 1559
United States v. Cessa, 785 F.3d 165 (5th Cir. 2015) ...................................... 1158, 1246
United States v. Cessa, 861 F.3d 121 (5th Cir. 2017) ........................................ 229
United States v. Cha, 597 F.3d 995 (9th Cir. 2010) .......................................... 1497, 1506, 1586
United States v. Chadwick, 433 U.S. 1 (1977) .................................................. 1563
United States v. Chaidez, 919 F.2d 1193 (7th Cir. 1990) ................................... 1650
United States v. Chamberlain, 163 F.3d 499 (8th Cir. 1998) ............................ 352
United States v. Chamberlain, 867 F.3d 459 (4th Cir. 2017) ............................. 884, 906
United States v. Chambers, 395 F.3d 563 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................ 1476
United States v. Chambers, 408 F.3d 237 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................ 857, 1033, 1051
United States v. Chan-Lai, 944 F.2d 1434 (9th Cir. 1991) .................................. 749
United States v. Chan, 97 F.3d 1582 (9th Cir. 1996) ......................................... 976
United States v. Chandler, 125 F.3d 892 (5th Cir. 1997) .................................. 596
United States v. Chandler, 326 F.3d 210 (3rd Cir. 2003) .................................. 488
United States v. Chandler, 388 F.3d 796 (11th Cir. 2004) ................................ 445, 1211
United States v. Chandler, 858 F.2d 254 (5th Cir. 1988) ................................ 1036
United States v. Chan-Jimenez, 125 F.3d 1324 (9th Cir. 1997) ....................... 1447, 1449, 1668, 1670
United States v. Chantal, 902 F.2d 1018 (1st Cir. 1990) .................................. 1064
United States v. Chanthaxouxat, 342 F.3d 1271 (11th Cir. 2003) ...................... 1387, 1446, 1510, 1531
United States v. Chaplin, 25 F.3d 1373 (7th Cir. 1994) ................................... 1286
United States v. Chapman, 345 F.3d 630 (8th Cir. 2003) .................................. 653, 769
United States v. Chapman, 528 F.3d 1215 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................ 59
United States v. Chapman, 765 F.3d 720 (7th Cir. 2014) .................................. 687, 724
United States v. Chappell, 665 F.3d 1012 (8th Cir. 2012) ................................. 1151
United States v. Charleswell, 456 F.3d 347 (3rd Cir. 2006) ............................ 1006
United States v. Chase, 340 F.3d 978 (9th Cir. 2003) ...................................... 1340
United States v. Chase, 499 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2007) .................................. 190
United States v. Chatmon, 718 F.3d 369 (4th Cir. 2013) .................................. 323
United States v. Chaudhry, 630 F.3d 875 (9th Cir. 2011) .................................. 29
United States v. Chavez, 734 F.3d 1247 (10th Cir. 2013) .................................. 323
United States v. Chavez, 902 F.2d 259 (4th Cir. 1990) ................................... 82
United States v. Chavful, 781 F.3d 758 (5th Cir. 2015) ...................................... 1291
United States v. Chavira, 614 F.3d 127 (5th Cir. 2010) .................................... 349
United States v. Cheek, 94 F.3d 136 (4th Cir. 1996) ....................................... 1081
United States v. Cheely, 36 F.3d 1439 (9th Cir. 1994) .................................... 375
United States v. Chen, 439 F.3d 1037 (9th Cir. 2006) ...................................... 358
United States v. Chen, 99 F.3d 1495 (9th Cir. 1996) ....................................... 169

1830
United States v. Chenowith, 459 F.3d 635 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 856
United States v. Cherer, 513 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 284
United States v. Chi Tong Kuok, 671 F.3d 931 (9th Cir. 2012) ..................................................... 61, 1247
United States v. Chiaradio, 684 F.3d 265 (1st Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1236, 1322
United States v. Chica, 14 F.3d 1527 (11th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 561
United States v. Chilaca, 909 F.3d 289 (9th Cir. 2018) ................................................................. 1024, 1320
United States v. Childs, 277 F.3d 947 (7th Cir. 2002) (en banc) ................................................. 1532
United States v. Chin, 371 F.3d 31 (2d Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 779
United States v. Chinchilla, 874 F.2d 695 (9th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 1193
United States v. Chittenden, 848 F.3d 188 (4th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 885
United States v. Chong, 419 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1262
United States v. Choy, 309 F.3d 602 (9th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 268
United States v. Christensen, 18 F.3d 822 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1100
United States v. Christensen, 559 F.3d 1092 (9th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 846
United States v. Christensen, 801 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 334, 1758
United States v. Christian, 749 F.3d 806 (9th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 789, 1042
United States v. Christman, 509 F.3d 299 (6th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 1070
United States v. Christo, 129 F.3d 578 (11th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 1259
United States v. Christo, 614 F.2d 486 (5th Cir. 1980) ................................................................. 626
United States v. Christopher, 923 F.2d 1545 (11th Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 750
United States v. Chu Kong Yin, 935 F.2d 990 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 758
United States v. Chukwura, 101 F.3d 230 (2d Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1009
United States v. Church, 955 F.2d 688 (11th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 679, 704
United States v. Cicco, 938 F.2d 441 (3rd Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 269
United States v. Ciesiolkia, 614 F.3d 347 (7th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1119
United States v. Cintolo, 818 F.2d 980 (1st Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1277
United States v. Clagett, 3 F.3d 1355 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1608
United States v. Clardy, 819 F.2d 670 (6th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1374, 1650
United States v. Clark, 31 F.3d 831 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1579, 1601
United States v. Clark, 435 F.3d 1100 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1697
United States v. Clark, 535 F.3d 571 (7th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 310
United States v. Clark, 55 F.3d 9 (1st Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1301
United States v. Clark, 638 F.3d 89 (2d Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1573, 1597
United States v. Clark, 740 F.3d 808 (2d Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 578
United States v. Clarkson, 551 F.3d 1196 (10th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 1386, 1464, 1507
United States v. Clavis, 956 F.2d 1079 (11th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 592
United States v. Clavis, 977 F.2d 538 (11th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 436
United States v. Clay, 667 F.3d 689 (6th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 697
United States v. Clements, 655 F.3d 1028 (9th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1696
United States v. Clemmons, 843 F.2d 741 (3rd Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1190
United States v. Clenney, 434 F.3d 780 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1204, 1744
United States v. Clinton, 338 F.3d 483 (6th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1107 United States v. Clotida, 892 F.2d 1098 (1st Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 584
United States v. Cloud, 680 F.3d 396 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1247

1831
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Reference</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Contorinis</td>
<td>692 F.3d 136 (2d Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Contreras-Castro</td>
<td>825 F.2d 185 (9th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Conway</td>
<td>81 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooks</td>
<td>52 F.3d 101 (5th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooks</td>
<td>589 F.3d 173 (5th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooley</td>
<td>1 F.3d 985 (10th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooper</td>
<td>121 F.3d 130 (3d Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooper</td>
<td>133 F.3d 1394 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooper</td>
<td>353 F.3d 161 (2d Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooper</td>
<td>591 F.3d 582 (7th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooper</td>
<td>70 F.3d 563 (10th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cooper</td>
<td>983 F.2d 928 (9th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Copeland</td>
<td>143 F.3d 1439 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Copeland</td>
<td>376 F.3d 61 (2d Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Copeland</td>
<td>381 F.3d 1101 (11th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Coplan</td>
<td>703 F.3d 46 (2d Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Copple</td>
<td>24 F.3d 535 (3rd Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Corbit</td>
<td>996 F.2d 1132 (11th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cordero-Rosario</td>
<td>786 F.3d 64 (1st Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Coreas</td>
<td>419 F.3d 151 (2d Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Coreas</td>
<td>824 F.2d 931 (11th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cornelius</td>
<td>623 F.3d 486 (7th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Corona</td>
<td>108 F.3d 565 (9th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Corona</td>
<td>34 F.3d 876 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Corp</td>
<td>236 F.3d 325 (6th Cir. 2001)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cosme</td>
<td>617 F.3d 417 (6th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cortes</td>
<td>757 F.3d 850 (9th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cortes</td>
<td>949 F.2d 532 (1st Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cortez</td>
<td>935 F.2d 135 (8th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cortez</td>
<td>973 F.2d 764 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cortinas</td>
<td>142 F.3d 242 (5th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cos</td>
<td>498 F.3d 1115 (10th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cosentino</td>
<td>844 F.2d 30 (2d Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cosme</td>
<td>796 F.3d 226 (2d Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Coss</td>
<td>677 F.3d 278 (6th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Costa</td>
<td>31 F.3d 1073 (11th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Costello</td>
<td>666 F.3d 1040 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cotnam</td>
<td>88 F.3d 487 (7th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cotterman</td>
<td>637 F.3d 1068 (9th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cotterman</td>
<td>709 F.3d 952 (9th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Cotton</td>
<td>722 F.3d 271 (5th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Coughlin</td>
<td>610 F.3d 89 (D.C.Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>1833</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
United States v. Council, 973 F.2d 251 (4th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 557
United States v. Councilman, 373 F.3d 197 (1st Cir. 2004) .................................................. 1758
United States v. Councilman, 418 F.3d 67 (1st Cir. 2005) .................................................. 1758
United States v. Courtney, 816 F.3d 681 (10th Cir. 2016) ............................................. 895
United States v. Courtright, 632 F.3d 363 (7th Cir. 2011) ............................................. 715
United States v. Couto, 311 F.3d 179 (2d Cir. 2002) .......................................................... 117, 952, 974
United States v. Cowan, 674 F.3d 947 (8th Cir. 2012) .................................................. 348
United States v. Cowan, 819 F.2d 89 (5th Cir. 1987) .......................................................... 1072
United States v. Coy, 19 F.3d 629 (11th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 451
United States v. Crabtree, 565 F.3d 887 (4th Cir. 2009) .................................................. 1754
United States v. Craddock, 841 F.3d 756 (8th Cir. 2016) ............................................. 1631
United States v. Craft, 105 F.3d 1123 (6th Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1719
United States v. Craft, 484 F.3d 922 (7th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 56, 1050
United States v. Craighead, 539 F.3d 1073 (9th Cir. 2008) ............................................. 349
United States v. Crawford, 323 F.3d 700 (9th Cir. 2003) .................................................. 1605
United States v. Crawford, 533 F.3d 133 (2d Cir. 2008) .................................................. 1352
United States v. Crawford, 891 F.2d 680 (8th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1651
United States v. Crawford, 982 F.2d 199 (6th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1712
United States v. Criollo, 962 F.2d 241 (2d Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1099
United States v. Cromer, 389 F.3d 662 (6th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 417, 652
United States v. Cronic, 839 F.2d 1401 (10th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 156
United States v. Cronic, 900 F.2d 1511 (10th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 1216
United States v. Crooker, 608 F.3d 94 (1st Cir. 2010) .................................................. 863
United States v. Crosby, 75 F.3d 1343 (9th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 644
United States v. Cross, 128 F.3d 145 (3rd Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1221
United States v. Crowell, 60 F.3d 199 (5th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 1304
United States v. Crowell, 997 F.2d 146 (6th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1305
United States v. Crozier, 777 F.2d 1376 (9th Cir. 1985) .................................................. 887, 894, 908
United States v. Cruse, 805 F.3d 795 (7th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 419, 439
United States v. Crutchfield, 26 F.3d 1098 (11th Cir. 1994) ............................................. 929
United States v. Cruz, 363 F.3d 187 (2d Cir. 2004) .................................................. 424, 581, 801
United States v. Cruz, 50 F.3d 714 (9th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 1055
United States v. Cruz, 981 F.2d 659 (2d Cir. 1992) .................................................. 802
United States v. Cruz-Garcia, 344 F.3d 951 (9th Cir. 2003) ............................................. 489, 639, 707
United States v. Cudjo, 534 F.3d 1349 (10th Cir. 2008) .................................................. 1293
United States v. Cuervelo, 949 F.2d 559 (2d Cir. 1991) .................................................. 926
United States v. Cuevas-Sanchez, 821 F.2d 248 (5th Cir. 1987) ............................................. 1678
United States v. Cuffie, 80 F.3d 514 (D.C.Cir. 1996) .................................................. 249
United States v. Culbertson, 670 F.3d 183 (2d Cir. 2012) .................................................. 956
United States v. Culliver, 17 F.3d 349 (11th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 1267
United States v. Culverhouse, 507 F.3d 888 (5th Cir. 2007) ............................................. 67

1834

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsslaw.com
United States v. Cummings, 395 F.3d 392 (7th Cir. 2005) ........................................ 1356
United States v. Cummings, 858 F.3d 763 (2d Cir. 2017) ........................................ 649
United States v. Cunag, 386 F.3d 888 (9th Cir. 2004) ........................................ 1625
United States v. Cunan, 156 F.3d 110 (1st Cir. 1998) ........................................ 900
United States v. Cunningham, 133 F.3d 1070 (8th Cir. 1998) ................................ 858
United States v. Cunningham, 145 F.3d 1385 (D.C. Cir. 1998) ................................ 1089
United States v. Cunningham, 462 F.3d 708 (7th Cir. 2006) ................................ 1763
United States v. Cunningham, 517 F.3d 175 (3rd Cir. 2008) ................................ 871
United States v. Cunningham, 694 F.3d 372 (3rd Cir. 2012) ................................ 669
United States v. Cunningham, 804 F.2d 58 (6th Cir. 1986) ................................ 320
United States v. Curbello, 940 F.2d 1503 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................ 767, 771
United States v. Curbelo, 343 F.3d 273 (4th Cir. 2003) ........................................ 1088
United States v. Curley, 639 F.3d 50 (2d Cir. 2011) ........................................ 698
United States v. Curran, 20 F.3d 560 (3rd Cir. 1994) ........................................ 1147, 1244
United States v. Curry, 911 F.2d 72 (8th Cir. 1990) ........................................ 1574
United States v. Curtin, 489 F.3d 935 (9th Cir. 2007) ........................................ 672, 700
United States v. Curtis, 635 F.3d 704 (5th Cir. 2011) ........................................ 1541
United States v. Curtis, 749 F.3d 732 (8th Cir. 2014) ........................................ 323
United States v. Curzi, 867 F.2d 36 (1st Cir. 1989) ........................................ 1477, 1613
United States v. Cusumano, 67 F.3d 1497 (10th Cir. 1995) ................................ 1679
United States v. Czubinski, 106 F.3d 1069 (1st Cir. 1997) ................................ 1213
United States v. Czyprynski, 8 F.3d 1113 (6th Cir. 1993) ................................ 1601
United States v. D.F., 115 F.3d 413 (7th Cir. 1997) ........................................ 359, 395
United States v. D.F., 63 F.3d 671 (7th Cir. 1995) ........................................ 359, 395
United States v. D’Amato, 39 F.3d 1249 (2d Cir. 1994) ................................ 1213
United States v. D’Amore, 56 F.3d 1202 (9th Cir. 1995) ................................ 186
United States v. D’Andrea, 648 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2011) ........................................ 1427, 1590
United States v. Dahda, 853 F.3d 1101 (10th Cir. 2017) ................................ 1752
United States v. Damblu, 134 F.3d 490 (2d Cir. 1998) ........................................ 280
United States v. Daniel, 134 F.3d 1259 (6th Cir. 1998) ........................................ 858
United States v. Daniels, 653 F.3d 399 (6th Cir. 2011) ........................................ 283
United States v. Dapolito, 713 F.3d 141 (1st Cir. 2013) ........................................ 1642, 1656
United States v. Darby, 857 F.2d 623 (9th Cir. 1988) ........................................ 63
United States v. Darden, 688 F.3d 382 (8th Cir. 2012) ........................................ 307
United States v. Dare, 425 F.3d 634 (9th Cir. 2006) ........................................ 872
United States v. Dashney, 937 F.2d 532 (10th Cir. 1991) ................................ 1029
United States v. Davenport, 131 F.3d 604 (7th Cir. 1997) ................................ 60
United States v. Davenport, 519 F.3d 940 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................ 549, 1236, 1325
United States v. Davidoff, 845 F.2d 1151 (2d Cir. 1988) ................................ 220
United States v. Davidson, 936 F.2d 856 (6th Cir. 1991) ................................ 1692
United States v. Davies, 394 F.3d 182 (3rd Cir. 2005) ................................ 56, 1051
United States v. Davila, 133 S.Ct. 2159 (2013) ........................................ 1311, 1315
United States v. Davila, 664 F.3d 1355 (11th Cir. 2011) ................................ 1315
United States v. Davila-Ruiz, 790 F.3d 249 (1st Cir. 2015) ................................ 969

1835

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Davis, 290 F.3d 1239 (10th Cir. 2002) .......................................................... 1476
United States v. Davis, 30 F.3d 108 (11th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 992
United States v. Davis, 332 F.3d 1163 (9th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1455
United States v. Davis, 428 F.3d 802 (9th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 972
United States v. Davis, 430 F.3d 345 (6th Cir. 2005) ............................................................... 1530, 1658
United States v. Davis, 449 F.3d 842 (8th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 672
United States v. Davis, 547 F.3d 520 (6th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 690
United States v. Davis, 596 F.3d 852 (D.C. Cir. 2010) ............................................................... 710
United States v. Davis, 598 F.3d 1259 (11th Cir. 2010) ............................................................ 1407, 1506
United States v. Davis, 689 F.3d 349 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 48
United States v. Davis, 690 F.3d 127 (2d Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 58
United States v. Davis, 690 F.3d 226 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1676
United States v. Davis, 726 F.3d 434 (3rd Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 688
United States v. Davis, 735 F.3d 194 (5th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 212
United States v. Davis, 785 F.3d 498 (11th Cir. 2015) (en banc) ............................................. 1516
United States v. Davis, 799 F.2d 1490 (11th Cir. 1986) ............................................................ 550
United States v. Davis, 838 F.2d 909 (7th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1764
United States v. Davis, 854 F.3d 601 (9th Cir. 2017) ............................................................... 283, 607, 1031, 1149
United States v. Davis, 863 F.3d 894 (D.C. Cir. 2017) ............................................................. 288
United States v. Davis, 93 F.3d 1286 (6th Cir. 1996) ............................................................... 330
United States v. Davis, 94 F.3d 1465 (10th Cir. 1996) ............................................................. 1652
United States v. Dawson, 434 F.3d 956 (7th Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 722
United States v. Dawson, 587 F.3d 640 (4th Cir. 2009) .......................................................... 1293
United States v. Dawson, 857 F.2d 923 (3rd Cir. 1988) ........................................................... 134
United States v. Dayton, 981 F.2d 1200 (11th Cir. 1993) ......................................................... 1267
United States v. De Castro, 113 F.3d 176 (11th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 1234
United States v. de Francisco-Lopez, 939 F.2d 1405 (10th Cir. 1991) ....................................... 1123
United States v. de Jesus-Rios, 990 F.2d 672 (1st Cir. 1993) .................................................. 996
United States v. De La Cruz, 703 F.3d 1193 (10th Cir. 2013) .................................................... 1642
United States v. De La Cruz-Tapia, 162 F.3d 1275 (10th Cir. 1998) ....................................... 1414
United States v. De la Fuente, 8 F.3d 1333 (9th Cir. 1993) ..................................................... 1308
United States v. de la Jara, 973 F.2d 746 (9th Cir. 1992) .......................................................... 170, 375
United States v. De Leon, 728 F.3d 500 (5th Cir. 2013) .......................................................... 280, 680, 719
United States v. De Ortiz, 910 F.2d 376 (7th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 888
United States v. Dean, 629 F.3d 257 (D.C. Cir. 2011) .............................................................. 265, 988
United States v. Dean, 80 F.3d 1535 (11th Cir. 1996), modified 87 F.3d 1212 (11th Cir. 1996) ................................. 1310
United States v. Dean, 980 F.2d 1286 (9th Cir. 1992) .............................................................. 657
United States v. Dean, 989 F.2d 1205 (D.C. Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 830, 944
United States v. Dearing, 9 F.3d 1428 (9th Cir. 1993) .............................................................. 1458
United States v. DeBenedetto, 757 F.3d 547 (7th Cir. 2014) .................................................... 323
United States v. DeBusk, 976 F.2d 300 (6th Cir. 1992) ............................................................. 975, 979
United States v. Decker, 956 F.2d 773 (8th Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 1514
United States v. Deemer, 354 F.3d 1130 (9th Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 1476
United States v. Dees, 34 F.3d 838 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 492

1836
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Reference</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeFoggi</td>
<td>839 F.3d 701 (8th Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeFonte</td>
<td>441 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeFranco</td>
<td>30 F.3d 664 (6th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeFries</td>
<td>129 F.3d 1293 (D.C. Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeFries</td>
<td>129 F.3d 1293 (D.C.Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeGasso</td>
<td>369 F.3d 1139 (10th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Del Muro</td>
<td>87 F.3d 1078 (9th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delagaz-Villarreal</td>
<td>141 F.3d 133 (5th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delagzo</td>
<td>979 F.2d 761 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delgallo-Velasquez</td>
<td>856 F.2d 1292 (9th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delgado</td>
<td>350 F.3d 520 (6th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delgado</td>
<td>701 F.3d 1161 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delgado-Marrero</td>
<td>744 F.3d 167 (1st Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delgardo-Miranda</td>
<td>951 F.2d 1063 (9th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delgado-Perez</td>
<td>867 F.3d 244 (1st Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Dellosantos</td>
<td>649 F.3d 109 (1st Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Deloitte LLP</td>
<td>610 F.3d 129 (D.C.Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delpit</td>
<td>94 F.3d 1134 (8th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Delvecchio</td>
<td>816 F.2d 859 (2d Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Demarco</td>
<td>784 F.3d 388 (7th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Demmitt</td>
<td>706 F.3d -665 (5th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Demmitt</td>
<td>706 F.3d 665 (5th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Demott</td>
<td>513 F.3d 55 (11th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Denalli</td>
<td>73 F.3d 328 (11th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Denalli</td>
<td>73 F.3d 328 (11th Cir. 1996), modified at 90 F.3d 444</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Dennis</td>
<td>826 F.3d 683 (3rd Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Dennis</td>
<td>843 F.2d 652 (2d Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Dennis</td>
<td>917 F.2d 1031 (7th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Denny-Shaffer</td>
<td>2 F.3d 999 (10th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DePew</td>
<td>8 F.3d 1424 (9th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Derose</td>
<td>74 F.3d 1177 (11th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Derrick</td>
<td>163 F.3d 799 (4th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeSalvo</td>
<td>41 F.3d 505 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeSantis</td>
<td>134 F.3d 760 (6th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. DeSoto</td>
<td>950 F.2d 626 (10th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Detrich</td>
<td>865 F.2d 17 (2d Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Dewalt</td>
<td>92 F.3d 1209 (D.C. Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Dewitt</td>
<td>366 F.3d 667 (8th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Dezeler</td>
<td>81 F.3d 86 (8th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Diallo</td>
<td>40 F.3d 32 (2d Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Diaz</td>
<td>138 F.3d 1359 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Diaz</td>
<td>540 F.3d 1316 (11th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
United States v. Diaz, 592 F.3d 467 (3rd Cir. 2010) ............................................................ 563, 870
United States v. Diaz, 797 F.2d 99 (2d Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 1064
United States v. Diaz, 841 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1600
United States v. Diaz-Jiminez, 622 F.3d 692 (7th Cir. 2010) .............................................. 1293
United States v. Diaz-Rodriguez, 745 F.3d 586 (1st Cir. 2014) ........................................... 193
United States v. DiBernardo, 880 F.2d 1216 (11th Cir. 1989) .............................................. 1694
United States v. DiCarlantonio, 870 F.2d 1058 (6th Cir. 1989) ........................................... 992, 1053
United States v. Dickerson, 857 F.2d 414 (7th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 566
United States v. Didonna, 866 F.3d 40 (1st Cir. 2017) ......................................................... 808
United States v. Digiovanni, 650 F.3d 498 (4th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1526, 1656
United States v. DiLoreto, 888 F.2d 996 (3rd Cir. 1989) ......................................................... 303, 1764
United States v. Dimeck, 24 F.3d 1239 (10th Cir. 1994) ...................................................... 1258
United States v. Dimick, 990 F.2d 1164 (10th Cir. 1993) ...................................................... 1393, 1602
United States v. DiNapoli, 8 F.3d 909 (2d Cir. 1993) ......................................................... 765
United States v. DiNapoli, 8 F.3d 909 (2d Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 766
United States v. DiNome, 954 F.2d 839 (2d Cir. 1992) ....................................................... 1691
United States v. Diozzi, 807 F.2d 10 (1st Cir. 1986) .......................................................... 73
United States v. Dipentino, 242 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir. 2001) ................................................... 283, 607, 1031, 1149
United States v. DiRe, 332 U.S. 581 (1948) .............................................................. 1403
United States v. DiRico, 78 F.3d 732 (1st Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 1233
United States v. DiSla, 805 F.2d 1340 (9th Cir. 1986) ......................................................... 360
United States v. Divens, 650 F.3d 343 (4th Cir. 2011) ....................................................... 48
United States v. Dixon, 132 F.3d 192 (5th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 476
United States v. Dixon, 413 F.3d 540 (6th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 735, 995
United States v. Dixon, 913 F.2d 1305 (8th Cir. 1990) ......................................................... 559
United States v. Dixon, 921 F.2d 194 (8th Cir. 1991) ....................................................... 1028
United States v. Dixon, 998 F.2d 228 (4th Cir. 1993) ......................................................... 1304
United States v. Dobbs, 629 F.3d 1199 (10th Cir. 2011) ................................................... 1323
United States v. Dobbs, 63 F.3d 391 (5th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 1255
United States v. Dobek, 789 F.3d 698 (7th Cir. 2015) ......................................................... 1142
United States v. Dobson, 419 F.3d 231 (3rd Cir. 2005) ...................................................... 1211
United States v. Dodson, 25 F.3d 385 (6th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 185
United States v. Doe, 219 F.3d 1009 (9th Cir. 2000) ......................................................... 1203
United States v. Doe, 348 F.3d 64 (2d Cir. 2003) .............................................................. 1063
United States v. Doe, 429 F.3d 450 (3rd Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 164
United States v. Doe, 61 F.3d 107 (1st Cir. 1995) .............................................................. 1373, 1678
United States v. Doe, 63 F.3d 121 (2d Cir. 1995) .............................................................. 641, 812
United States v. Doe, 865 F.3d 1295 (10th Cir. 2017) ......................................................... 1289
United States v. Doe, 878 F.2d 1546 (1st Cir. 1989) .......................................................... 352
United States v. Doe, 903 F.2d 16 (D.C.Cir. 1990) .......................................................... 805, 931
United States v. Doig, 950 F.2d 411 (7th Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 25
United States v. Dominguez, 661 F.3d 1051 (11th Cir. 2011) .......................................... 1004
United States v. Dominguez, 835 F.2d 694 (7th Cir. 1987) ............................................. 315

1838

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Donato, 99 F.3d 426 (D.C. Cir. 1996) .................................................. 293, 1072, 1086
United States v. Donnes, 947 F.2d 1430 (10th Cir. 1991) ................................................. 1585
United States v. Dooley, 578 F.3d 582 (7th Cir. 2009) ...................................................... 1219
United States v. Dooley, 580 F.3d 682 (8th Cir. 2009) ...................................................... 579, 853
United States v. Doran, 854 F.3d 1312 (11th Cir. 2017) ..................................................... 264
United States v. Dorman, 860 F.3d 675 (D.C. Cir. 2017) ................................................... 577
United States v. Dortch, 199 F.3d 193 (5th Cir. 1999) ..................................................... 1414, 1659
United States v. Doss, 630 F.3d 1181 (9th Cir. 2011) ......................................................... 1274
United States v. Dotson, 799 F.2d 189 (5th Cir. 1986) ....................................................... 719, 737
United States v. Dotson, 821 F.2d 1034 (5th Cir. 1987) ..................................................... 741
United States v. Doucet, 994 F.2d 169 (5th Cir. 1993) ....................................................... 1035
United States v. Douglas, 818 F.2d 1317 (7th Cir. 1987) ..................................................... 432, 1115
United States v. Dowell, 430 F.3d 1100 (10th Cir. 2005) .................................................... 1768
United States v. Downer, 143 F.3d 819 (4th Cir. 1998) ..................................................... 942, 1206
United States v. Doyle, 857 F.3d 1115 (11th Cir. 2017) ....................................................... 963
United States v. Draper, 553 F.3d 174 (2d Cir. 2009) ......................................................... 1275
United States v. Dreyer, 693 F.3d 803 (9th Cir. 2012) ......................................................... 324, 1061
United States v. Dreyer, 804 F.3d 1266 (9th Cir. 2014) ....................................................... 1328
United States v. Drosten, 819 F.2d 1067 (11th Cir. 1987) .................................................. 1401, 1499
United States v. Drury, 396 F.3d 1303 (11th Cir. 2003) ....................................................... 1052
United States v. Duarte-Higareda, 113 F.3d 1000 (9th Cir. 1997) ........................................ 1100, 1104
United States v. Duarte-Higareda, 68 F.3d 369 (9th Cir. 1995) .......................................... 186
United States v. Duchini, 906 F.2d 1278 (8th Cir. 1990) ................................................... 1479
United States v. Ductan, 800 F.3d 642 (4th Cir. 2015) ...................................................... 193
United States v. Duenas, 691 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2012) ..................................................... 765
United States v. Duguay, 93 F.3d 346 (7th Cir. 1996) ....................................................... 1562
United States v. Dukagjini, 326 F.3d 45 (2d Cir. 2003) ....................................................... 801
United States v. Dumas, 94 F.3d 286 (7th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 1627
United States v. Duncan, 643 F.3d 1242 (9th Cir. 2011) .................................................... 324, 523
United States v. Duncan, 850 F.2d 1104 (6th Cir. 1988) ................................................... 1173
United States v. Dunford, 148 F.3d 385 (4th Cir. 1998) ..................................................... 859, 1026, 1027
United States v. Dunlap, 28 F.3d 823 (8th Cir. 1994) ....................................................... 589
United States v. Dunmire, 403 F.3d 722 (10th Cir. 2005) ................................................... 424, 599
United States v. Dunn, --- Fed.Appx. --- (10th Cir. 2017) ............................................... 1575
United States v. Dunne, 324 F.3d 1158 (10th Cir. 2003) ................................................... 821, 1717
United States v. Duran, 133 F.3d 1324 (10th Cir. 1998) .................................................... 614, 1098, 1167
United States v. Durham, 287 F.3d 1297 (11th Cir. 2002) .................................................. 514
United States v. Durham, 825 F.2d 716 (2d Cir. 1987) ....................................................... 455, 1114
United States v. Duron-Caldera, 737 F.3d 988 (5th Cir. 2013) .......................................... 409
United States v. Duval, 496 F.3d 64 (1st Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 226
United States v. Dvorin, 817 F.3d 438 (5th Cir. 2016) ....................................................... 239, 933
United States v. Dwyer, 843 F.2d 60 (1st Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 1764
United States v. Dzhanikyan, 808 F.3d 97 (1st Cir. 2015) ................................................. 808

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Eagle, 867 F.2d 436 (8th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 491
United States v. Eaken, 995 F.2d 740 (7th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1728
United States v. Earl, 27 F.3d 423 (9th Cir. 1994) ...................................................................... 589
United States v. Earle, 375 F.3d 1159 (D.C. Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 290
United States v. Earp, 812 F.2d 917 (4th Cir. 1987) .................................................................. 1286
United States v. Easley, 942 F.2d 405 (6th Cir. 1991) .................................................................. 1326
United States v. Eason, 920 F.2d 731 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 32, 39, 321, 930
United States v. Eaves, 877 F.2d 943 (11th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 1030
United States v. Ebens, 800 F.2d 1422 (6th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 491, 663, 677
United States v. Eccleston, 961 F.2d 955 (D.C. Cir. 1992) ........................................................... 658
United States v. Echegoyen, 799 F.2d 1271 (9th Cir. 1986) ......................................................... 1627
United States v. Echeverri, 854 F.2d 638 (3rd Cir. 1988) .............................................................. 1173
United States v. Edgerton, 438 F.3d 1043 (10th Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 1529, 1658
United States v. Edmond, 780 F.3d 1126 (11th Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 964
United States v. Edmonds, 80 F.3d 810 (3rd Cir. 1996) .............................................................. 1133, 1173
United States v. Edwarado-Franco, 885 F.2d 1002 (2d Cir. 1989) .............................................. 1072
United States v. Edwards, 103 F.3d 90 (10th Cir. 1996) .............................................................. 1660
United States v. Edwards, 154 F.3d 915 (9th Cir. 1998) ............................................................. 1770
United States v. Edwards, 162 F.3d 87 (3rd Cir. 1998) .............................................................. 784
United States v. Edwards, 303 F.3d 606 (5th Cir. 2002) .............................................................. 1087
United States v. Edwards, 632 F.3d 633 (10th Cir. 2011) ........................................................... 1406, 1560, 1622
United States v. Edwards, 666 F.3d 877 (4th Cir. 2011) ............................................................ 1541, 1629
United States v. Edwards, 792 F.3d 355 (3rd Cir. 2015) ............................................................ 1329
United States v. Edwards, 813 F.3d 953 (10th Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 1423, 1594
United States v. Edwards, 869 F.3d 490 (7th Cir. 2017) ............................................................. 1142, 1270
United States v. Edwards, 968 F.2d 1148 (11th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 1116, 1720
United States v. Eggleston, 165 F.3d 624 (8th Cir. 1999) ........................................................... 692
United States v. Eglash, 813 F.3d 882 (9th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1218
United States v. E-Gold Ltd., 521 F.3d 411 (D.C. Cir. 2008) ...................................................... 885, 891
United States v. Ehle, 640 F.3d 689 (6th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 562, 1322
United States v. Eichman, 496 U.S. 310 (1990) ............................................................................. 878
United States v. Eiland, 738 F.3d 338 (D.C. Cir. 2013) ............................................................... 475
United States v. Eisenstein, 731 F.2d 1540 (11th Cir. 1984) ....................................................... 17, 1138
United States v. El Shami, 434 F.3d 659 (4th Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 1006
United States v. Elder, 309 F.3d 519 (9th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 182
United States v. Elias, 832 F.2d 24 (3rd Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 359
United States v. Elizondo, 920 F.2d 1308 (7th Cir. 1990) ........................................................... 459, 499
United States v. Elkins, 70 F.3d 81 (10th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 500, 678
United States v. Elliot, 107 F.3d 810 (10th Cir. 1997) .............................................................. 1441
United States v. Ellis, 147 F.3d 1131 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 674, 678
United States v. Ellis, 499 F.3d 686 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 1475
United States v. Ellis, 868 F.3d 1155 (10th Cir. 2017) .............................................................. 442

1840

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Ellis, 971 F.2d 701 (11th Cir. 1992) .............................................................. 1514, 1574
United States v. Elrawy, 448 F.3d 309 (5th Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 860
United States v. Elso, 422 F.3d 1305 (11th Cir. 2005) ............................................................... 1252
United States v. Eltayib, 88 F.3d 157 (2d Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 997
United States v. El-Zoubi, 993 F.2d 442 (5th Cir. 1993) ............................................................ 748
United States v. Emanuele, 51 F.3d 1123 (3rd Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 997
United States v. Emly, 747 F.3d 974 (8th Cir. 2014) .................................................................. 1321
United States v. Encarnacion-Ruiz, 787 F.3d 581 (1st Cir. 2015) ......................................... 20, 1238, 1321
United States v. Engstrom, 7 F.3d 1423 (9th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 1712
United States v. Eniola, 893 F.2d 383 (D.C. Cir. 1990) ............................................................. 189
United States v. Enjady, 134 F.3d 1427 (10th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 715
United States v. Erenas-Luna, 560 F.3d 772 (8th Cir. 2009) ...................................................... 1700
United States v. Erickson, 991 F.2d 529 (9th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 1421
United States v. Ermoian, 752 F.3d 1165 (9th Cir. 2013) ....................................................... 1273
United States v. Erskine, 355 F.3d 1161 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................................ 196
United States v. Erwin, 793 F.2d 656 (5th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 450
United States v. Escamilla, --- F.3d ---, 16-40333 (5th Cir. 2017) ........................................... 1433
United States v. Escamilla, 975 F.2d 568 (9th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 712, 974, 1309
United States v. Escobar, 389 F.3d 781 (8th Cir. 2004) ............................................................. 1371, 1438
United States v. Escobedo, 757 F.3d 229 (5th Cir. 2014) ......................................................... 711
United States v. Esparza, 791 F.3d 1067 (9th Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 409, 756, 760
United States v. Esparza-Gonzalez, 422 F.3d 897 (9th Cir. 2005) ............................................. 1186
United States v. Esparza-Herrera, 557 F.3d 1019 (9th Cir. 2009) ............................................. 846
United States v. Espinosa-Hernandez, 918 F.2d 911 (11th Cir. 1990) ...................................... 930
United States v. Espinoza, --- F.3d --- (9th Cir. 2018) ............................................................ 628
United States v. Espinoza, 490 F.3d 41 (1st Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 1645, 1667
United States v. Espinoza-Seanez, 862 F.2d 526 (5th Cir. 1988) ............................................. 430
United States v. Esprit, 841 F.3d 1235 (11th Cir. 2016) ............................................................ 844
United States v. Esquenazi, 752 F.3d 912 (11th Cir. 2014) ....................................................... 1118
United States v. Esquivel-Ortega, 484 F.3d 1221 (9th Cir. 2007) ............................................. 423, 580
United States v. Estate of Parsons, 367 F.3d 409 (5th Cir. 2004) .......................................... 903
United States v. Estrada, 430 F.3d 606 (2d Cir. 2005) ............................................................... 725
United States v. Estrada, 849 F.2d 1304 (10th Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 981
United States v. Estrada-Fernandez, 150 F.3d 491 (5th Cir. 1998) ............................................ 1161
United States v. Estrada-Macias, 218 F.3d 1064 (9th Cir. 2000) ............................................. 21, 422, 580
United States v. Ettina, 614 F.3d 726 (7th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1473
United States v. Ethridge, 948 F.2d 1215 (11th Cir. 1991) ....................................................... 1216
United States v. Ethridge, 948 F.2d 1215 (11th Cir. 1992) ....................................................... 647
United States v. Evans, 113 F.3d 1457 (7th Cir. 1997) ............................................................. 168
United States v. Evans, 148 F.3d 477 (5th Cir. 1998) .............................................................. 1220, 1221
United States v. Evans, 344 F.3d 1131 (11th Cir. 2003) ........................................................... 267
United States v. Evans, 404 F.3d 227 (4th Cir. 2005) ............................................................... 327
United States v. Evans, 728 F.3d 953 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................................... 633, 665, 669
United States v. Evans, 786 F.3d 779 (9th Cir. 2015) ............................................................. 1523
United States v. Evans, 851 F.3d 830 (8th Cir. 2017) .............................................................. 1390

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Evans, 854 F.2d 56 (5th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 1028
United States v. Evans, 970 F.2d 663 (10th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 435
United States v. Evanston, 651 F.3d 1080 (9th Cir. 2011) ........................................... 1097
United States v. Eyster, 948 F.2d 1196 (11th Cir. 1991) ............................................. 930, 1766
United States v. Fafowora, 865 F.2d 360 (D.C.Cir. 1989) ......................................... 1545
United States v. Fagan, 996 F.2d 1009 (9th Cir. 1993) ............................................. 1308
United States v. Fagge, 101 F.3d 232 (2d Cir. 1996) ................................................. 1302
United States v. Falls, 117 F.3d 1075 (8th Cir. 1997) ............................................. 693
United States v. Falon, 959 F.2d 1143 (1st Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1577
United States v. Falso, 544 F.3d 110 (2d Cir. 2008) .................................................. 1429, 1598
United States v. Farah, 766 F.3d 599 (6th Cir. 2014) ............................................. 467
United States v. Fard, 775 F.3d 939 (7th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 955, 970
United States v. Farfan-Carreon, 935 F.2d 678 (5th Cir. 1991) .................................. 528
United States v. Farias, 618 F.3d 1049 (9th Cir. 2010) ............................................. 194
United States v. Farinella, 558 F.3d 695 (7th Cir. 2009) ............................................. 289, 310, 882, 1209
United States v. Farmer, 137 F.3d 1265 (10th Cir. 1998) ....................................... 1285
United States v. Farmer, 274 F.3d 800 (4th Cir. 2001) ............................................. 907
United States v. Farmer, 543 F.3d 363 (7th Cir. 2008) ............................................. 834
United States v. Farmer, 583 F.3d 131 (2d Cir. 2009) ............................................. 680
United States v. Farmer, 923 F.2d 1557 (11th Cir. 1991) ........................................ 546
United States v. Farnham, 791 F.2d 331 (4th Cir. 1986) ........................................ 1685
United States v. Farr, 536 F.3d 1174 (10th Cir. 2008) ............................................. 1032
United States v. Farrell, 126 F.3d 484 (3rd Cir. 1997) ............................................. 1277
United States v. Farrell, 672 F.3d 27 (1st Cir. 2012) ................................................. 845
United States v. Faulkenberry, 614 F.3d 573 (6th Cir. 2010) .................................. 1249
United States v. Faust, 850 F.2d 575 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................. 916
United States v. Fawbush, 634 F.3d 420 (8th Cir. 2011) ........................................... 698
United States v. Fawley, 137 F.3d 458 (7th Cir. 1998) ............................................ 1176
United States v. Fedroff, 874 F.2d 178 (3rd Cir. 1989) ........................................... 615
United States v. Feingold, 454 F.3d 1001 (9th Cir. 2006) ........................................ 573
United States v. Feiste, 961 F.2d 1349 (8th Cir. 1992) ............................................. 1756
United States v. Feldewerth, 982 F.2d 322 (8th Cir. 1993) ...................................... 1307
United States v. Feliz, 794 F.3d 123 (1st Cir. 2015) .................................................. 660
United States v. Fell, 360 F.3d 135 (2d Cir. 2004) .................................................... 511
United States v. Female Juvenile, A.F.S., 377 F.3d 27 (1st Cir. 2004) ......................... 1203
United States v. Fenton, 367 F.3d 14 (1st Cir. 2004) .............................................. 595, 1236
United States v. Fenzl, 670 F.3d 778 (7th Cir. 2012) ................................................. 733
United States v. Ferguson, 246 F.3d 129 (2d Cir. 2001) ......................................... 1356
United States v. Ferguson, 676 F.3d 260 (2d Cir. 2011) ......................................... 1127, 1681
United States v. Ferguson, 676 F.3d 26094 (2d Cir. 2011) ...................................... 20
United States v. Ferguson, 752 F.3d 613 (4th Cir. 2014) ........................................ 409
United States v. Fernandez, 136 F.3d 1434 (11th Cir. 1998) .................................... 234
United States v. Fernandez, 18 F.3d 874 (10th Cir. 1994) ..................................... 1450, 1537, 1661

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Fernandez, 722 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2013) ........................................ 265, 542, 1012
United States v. Fernandez, 797 F.2d 943 (11th Cir. 1986) ........................................ 438
United States v. Fernandez, 829 F.2d 363 (2d Cir. 1987) ........................................ 320, 1764
United States v. Fernandez, 892 F.2d 976 (11th Cir. 1989) ........................................ 452, 778, 1693
United States v. Fernandez-Jorge, 894 F.3d 36 (1st Cir. 2018) ........................................ 19, 862
United States v. Feroz, 848 F.2d 359 (2d Cir. 1988) ........................................ 1119
United States v. Ferrarini, 219 F.3d 145 (2d Cir. 2000) ........................................ 1120
United States v. Ferreira, 665 F.3d 701 (6th Cir. 2011) ........................................ 1699
United States v. Ferreira, 821 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1987) ........................................ 676
United States v. Fiallo-Jacome, 784 F.2d 1064 (11th Cir. 1986) ........................................ 567, 592
United States v. Fields, 113 F.3d 313 (2d Cir. 1997) ........................................ 1626
United States v. Fields, 371 F.3d 910 (7th Cir. 2004) ........................................ 1446
United States v. Fields, 500 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2007) ........................................ 285, 1145, 1151, 1238
United States v. Figueroa-Lopez, 125 F.3d 1241 (9th Cir. 1997) ........................................ 804
United States v. Figueroa-Ocasio, 805 F.3d 360 (1st Cir. 2015) ........................................ 955
United States v. Filani, 74 F.3d 378 (2d Cir. 1996) ........................................ 1072
United States v. Finch, 998 F.2d 349 (6th Cir. 1993) ........................................ 395
United States v. Finley, 301 F.3d 1000 (9th Cir. 2002) ........................................ 791, 792
United States v. Finley, 477 F.3d 250 (5th Cir. 2007) ........................................ 1623
United States v. Finn, 375 F.3d 1033 (10th Cir. 2004) ........................................ 821, 1233
United States v. Fisch, 863 F.2d 690 (9th Cir. 1988) ........................................ 1309
United States v. Fisher, 106 F.3d 622 (5th Cir. 1997) ........................................ 255, 725
United States v. Fisher, 624 F.3d 713 (5th Cir. 2010) ........................................ 553
United States v. Fisher, 711 F.3d 460 (4th Cir. 2013) ........................................ 978
United States v. Fitapelli, 786 F.2d 1461 (11th Cir. 1986) ........................................ 1017
United States v. Fitch, 964 F.2d 571 (6th Cir. 1992) ........................................ 1306
United States v. Fitzgerald, 820 F.3d 107 (4th Cir. 2016) ........................................ 954
United States v. Fitzgerald, 89 F.3d 218 (5th Cir. 1996) ........................................ 1016
United States v. Flanders, 491 F.3d 1197 (10th Cir. 2007) ........................................ 216
United States v. Flatter, 456 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 2006) ........................................ 1635
United States v. Fleck, 413 F.3d 883 (8th Cir. 2005) ........................................ 701
United States v. Flenoid, 949 F.2d 970 (8th Cir. 1991) ........................................ 767
United States v. Fletcher, 91 F.3d 48 (8th Cir. 1996) ........................................ 1375, 1513
United States v. Flitcraft, 863 F.2d 342 (5th Cir. 1988) ........................................ 1167
United States v. Flores, 404 F.3d 320 (5th Cir. 2005) ........................................ 1018
United States v. Flores, 477 F.3d 431 (6th Cir. 2007) ........................................ 847
United States v. Flores, 798 F.3d 645 (7th Cir. 2015) ........................................ 1523
United States v. Flores, 985 F.2d 770 (5th Cir. 1993) ........................................ 770
United States v. Floresca, 38 F.3d 706 (4th Cir. 1994) ........................................ 1035
United States v. Flores-Chapa, 48 F.3d 156 (5th Cir. 1995) ........................................ 314, 429
United States v. Flores-De-Jesus, 569 F.3d 8 (1st Cir. 2009) ........................................ 625, 736, 801
United States v. Flores-Lopez, 670 F.3d 803 (7th Cir. 2012) ........................................ 1418, 1425

1843

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Flores-Rivera, 787 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 240
United States v. Flowers, 336 F.3d 1222 (10th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1384
United States v. Flowers, 389 F.3d 737 (7th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 806
United States v. Flowers, 813 F.2d 1320 (4th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1286
United States v. Floyd, 428 F.3d 513 (3d Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1296
United States v. Flyer, 633 F.3d 911 (9th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1323
United States v. Flynn, 852 F.2d 1045 (8th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1054
United States v. Fontanez, 878 F.2d 33 (2d Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 519
United States v. Fontenot, 665 F.3d 640 (5th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 817
United States v. Ford, 371 F.3d 550 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 543
United States v. Ford, 435 F.3d 204 (2d Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 267, 744
United States v. Ford, 56 F.3d 265 (D.C.Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1544, 1615
United States v. Ford, 639 F.3d 718 (6th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 818
United States v. Ford, 821 F.3d 63 (1st Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 19, 851
United States v. Ford, 830 F.2d 596 (6th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 813
United States v. Ford, 993 F.2d 249 (D.C.Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 962, 977
United States v. Forester, 836 F.2d 856 (5th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 565, 1028
United States v. Forlorma, 94 F.3d 91 (2d Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 291
United States v. Formanczyk, 949 F.2d 526 (1st Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 538
United States v. Forrester, 512 F.3d 500 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 178, 195, 1430
United States v. Forrester, 60 F.3d 52 (2d Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 655, 676, 736, 741, 1764
United States v. Foster, 100 F.3d 846 (10th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1468
United States v. Foster, 128 F.3d 949 (6th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 764, 766, 1772
United States v. Foster, 634 F.3d 243 (4th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1526, 1643
United States v. Foster, 874 F.2d 491 (8th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 255
United States v. Foster, 889 F.2d 1049 (11th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 1312
United States v. Foster, 904 F.2d 551 (D.C.Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 294, 494, 730
United States v. Fountain, 993 F.2d 1136 (4th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 585
United States v. Fowler, 445 F.3d 1035 (8th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1295
United States v. Fowlkes, 804 F.3d 954 (9th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1629
United States v. Fox, 600 F.3d 1253 (10th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1444, 1666
United States v. Foy, 641 F.3d 455 (10th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 61, 1744
United States v. Frampton, 382 F.3d 213 (2d Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 23, 1262
United States v. Franco-Lopez, 312 F.3d 984 (9th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 1300
United States v. Franco-Samitago, 681 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 53, 448, 1715
United States v. Franz, 772 F.3d 134 (3rd Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 1575
United States v. Frasch, 818 F.2d 631 (7th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 677
United States v. Frazier, 387 F.3d 1244 (11th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 792, 800
United States v. Frazier, 423 F.3d 526 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1509, 1570
United States v. Frazier, 880 F.2d 878 (6th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 544
United States v. Frazier, 89 F.3d 1501 (11th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 567
United States v. Frazier, 944 F.2d 820 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 939
United States v. Frechette, 583 F.3d 374 (6th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 1428
United States v. Frederick, 78 F.3d 1370 (9th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 28, 32, 303, 316, 1765
United States v. Frederick, 835 F.2d 1211 (7th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1278, 1746

1844

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Fredericks, 857 F.2d 733 (11th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 437
United States v. Freeman, 479 F.3d 743 (10th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 1604
United States v. Freeman, 650 F.3d 673 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 251
United States v. Freeman, 730 F.3d 590 (6th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 732
United States v. Freeman, 735 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 1641, 1665
United States v. Freeman, 804 F.2d 1574 (5th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 1044
United States v. Freeman, 818 F.3d 175 (5th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 123
United States v. Friedhaber, 826 F.2d 284 (4th Cir. 1987) ............................................................... 1233
United States v. Friedman, 366 F.3d 975 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 328
United States v. Friedman, 909 F.2d 705 (2d Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 314
United States v. Fries, 725 F.3d 1286 (11th Cir. 2013) .................................................................. 40, 862
United States v. Friske, 640 F.3d 1288 (11th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1274
United States v. Frost, 125 F.3d 346 (6th Cir. 1997) ...................................................................... 792, 1212, 1220
United States v. Frost, 61 F.3d 1518, modified, 77 F.3d 1319 (11th Cir. 1996), judgment vacated on other grounds, 117 S.Ct. 1816 (1997) ................................................................. 992, 1055
United States v. Frownfelter, 626 F.3d 549 (10th Cir. 2010) .............................................................. 965
United States v. Fuccillo, 808 F.2d 173 (1st Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1511, 1578
United States v. Fuchs, 467 F.3d 889 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 573
United States v. Fuertes, 805 F.3d 485 (4th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 481, 868
United States v. Fulks, 683 F.3d 512 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 603
United States v. Fuller, 453 F.3d 274 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 847
United States v. Fulmer, 108 F.3d 1486 (1st Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 675
United States v. Fulton, 5 F.3d 605 (2d Cir. 1993) ........................................................................ 74
United States v. Fulton, 837 F.3d 281 (3rd Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 731
United States v. Fulz, 146 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1456, 1458, 1486
United States v. Funds in the Amount of $100,120.00, 730 F.3d 711 (7th Cir. 2013) .................. 912, 1463, 1596
United States v. Funds in the Amount of $239,400, 795 F.3d 639 (7th Cir. 2015) .................. 910
United States v. Funds in the Amount of $271,080, 816 F.3d 903 (7th Cir. 2016) .................. 910, 912
United States v. Funds in the Amount of $574,840, 719 F.3d 648 (7th Cir. 2013) .................. 902
United States v. Furqueron, 605 F.3d 612 (8th Cir. 2010) ............................................................. 845
United States v. Furst, 886 F.2d 558 (3rd Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 1064
United States v. Fusko, 869 F.2d 1048 (7th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 617
United States v. G.A.F., Corp., 928 F.2d 1253 (2d Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 642
United States v. Gabay, 923 F.2d 1536 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 771
United States v. Gabriel, 125 F.3d 89 (2d Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 1212
United States v. GAF, Corp., 928 F.2d 1253 (2d Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 220
United States v. Gaines, 457 F.3d 238 (2d Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1111, 1177
United States v. Gaines, 668 F.3d 170 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1405, 1495, 1643
United States v. Gainey, 111 F.3d 834 (11th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 317
United States v. Gajo, 290 F.3d 922 (7th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 739
United States v. Gallardo-Mendez, 150 F.3d 1240 (10th Cir. 1998) ................................................ 544
United States v. Gallegos, 108 F.3d 1272 (10th Cir. 1997) ............................................................. 78
United States v. Gallerani, 68 F.3d 611 (2d Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1132

1845
United States v. Galpin, 720 F.3d 436 (2d Cir. 2013) .................................................. 1424, 1575
United States v. Gamache, 156 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998) .................................................. 614
United States v. Gambino, 59 F.3d 353 (2d Cir. 1995) .................................................. 1710
United States v. Gamory, 635 F.3d 480 (11th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 670
United States v. Gandia, 424 F.3d 255 (2d Cir. 2005) .................................................. 1438, 1613
United States v. Gancias, 755 F.3d 125 (2d Cir. 2014) .................................................. 1424
United States v. Ganier, 468 F.3d 920 (6th Cir. 2006) .................................................. 799
United States v. Ganim, 510 F.3d 134 (2nd Cir. 2007) .................................................. 266
United States v. Garbett, 867 F.2d 1132 (8th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 745
United States v. Garcia, 13 F.3d 1464 (11th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 750
United States v. Garcia, 151 F.3d 1243 (9th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 447
United States v. Garcia, 23 F.3d 1331 (8th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 1535
United States v. Garcia, 291 F.3d 127 (2d Cir. 2002) .................................................. 692, 736
United States v. Garcia, 340 F.3d 1013 (9th Cir. 2003) .................................................. 205, 207
United States v. Garcia, 401 F.3d 1008 (9th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 973
United States v. Garcia, 413 F.3d 201 (2d Cir. 2005) .................................................. 735, 799
United States v. Garcia, 496 F.3d 495 (6th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 1466, 1583, 1635
United States v. Garcia, 497 F.3d 964 (9th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 422, 580
United States v. Garcia, 562 F.3d 947 (8th Cir. 2009) .................................................. 257
United States v. Garcia, 587 F.3d 509 (2d Cir. 2009) .................................................. 957, 1250
United States v. Garcia, 65 F.3d 17 (4th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 1607
United States v. Garcia, 729 F.3d 1171 (9th Cir. 2013) .................................................. 634, 706, 1261
United States v. Garcia, 752 F.3d 382 (4th Cir. 2014) .................................................. 796
United States v. Garcia, 78 F.3d 1517 (11th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 546
United States v. Garcia, 793 F.3d 1194 (10th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 795
United States v. Garcia, 893 F.2d 250 (10th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 60
United States v. Garcia, 897 F.2d 1413 (7th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 1627
United States v. Garcia, 917 F.2d 1370 (5th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 587
United States v. Garcia, 956 F.2d 41 (4th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1304
United States v. Garcia, 992 F.2d 409 (2d Cir. 1993) .................................................. 991
United States v. Garcia-Alvarez, 541 F.3d 8 (1st Cir. 2008) ........................................... 995
United States v. Garcia-Beltran, 389 F.3d 864 (9th Cir. 2004) ........................................ 1498
United States v. Garcia-Camacho, 53 F.3d 244 (9th Cir. 1995) ........................................ 1652
United States v. Garcia-Emanuel, 14 F.3d 1469 (10th Cir. 1994) ...................................... 1258
United States v. Garcia-Guzar, 160 F.3d 511 (9th Cir. 1998) ........................................... 302, 914
United States v. Garcia-Morales, 382 F.3d 12 (1st Cir. 2004) ........................................ 625
United States v. Garcia-Ortiz, 528 F.3d 74 (1st Cir. 2008) ............................................. 734, 995
United States v. Garcia-Paulin, 627 F.3d 127 (5th Cir. 2010) ......................................... 956, 1005
United States v. Garcia-Rivera, 353 F.3d 788 (9th Cir. 2003) ........................................ 1175
United States v. Garcia-Torres, 280 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2002) ............................................. 424, 454, 875
United States v. Gardenhire, 784 F.3d 1277 (9th Cir. 2015) .......................................... 1143
United States v. Gardner, 488 F.3d 700 (6th Cir. 2007) ................................................. 21, 855
United States v. Garey, 540 F.3d 1253 (11th Cir. 2008) (en banc) ................................... 177, 194
United States v. Garibay, 143 F.3d 534 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................. 394
United States v. Garland, 991 F.2d 328 (6th Cir. 1993) ................................................. 1266

1846

DONALD F. SAMUEL - GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA - 404-262-2225 - dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Gilchrist, 130 F.3d 1131 (3rd Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 1300
United States v. Gillenwater, 717 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 323, 526
United States v. Gillespie, 666 F.Supp. 1137 (N.D.Ill. 1987) .................................................... 945
United States v. Gillespie, 852 F.2d 475 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 804
United States v. Gilley, 836 F.2d 1206 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 920, 1173
United States v. Gilliam, 975 F.2d 1050 (4th Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 75
United States v. Ginyard, 444 F.3d 648 (D.C. Cir. 2006) ............................................................... 1088
United States v. Giovannetti, 945 F.2d 479 (2d Cir. 1991) ............................................................... 489
United States v. Giovannetti, 919 F.2d 1223 (7th Cir. 1990) ......................................................... 1121
United States v. Giunta, 925 F.2d 758 (4th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 429
United States v. Givens, 88 F.3d 608 (8th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 559
United States v. Gladding, 775 F.3d 1149 (9th Cir 2015) ......................................................... 1606
United States v. Gladish, 536 F.3d 646 (7th Cir. 2008) ............................................................... 62, 608, 790
United States v. Glass, 128 F.3d 1398 (10th Cir. 1997) ............................................................... 275
United States v. Glass, 133 F.3d 1356 (10th Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 1340
United States v. Glass, 361 F.3d 580 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 463
United States v. Glass, 846 F.2d 386 (7th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1166
United States v. Glenn, 152 F.3d 1047 (8th Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 1635
United States v. Glenn, 828 F.2d 855 (1st Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 427, 1035
United States v. Glinton, 154 F.3d 1245 (11th Cir. 1998) ............................................................ 450
United States v. Glover, 736 F.3d 509 (D.C. Cir. 2013) ............................................................ 1753
United States v. Glover, 755 F.3d 811 (7th Cir. 2014) ............................................................... 1488, 1556, 1595
United States v. Glover, 872 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2017) ............................................................ 731
United States v. Glover, 97 F.3d 1345 (10th Cir. 1996) ............................................................... 156
United States v. Gluk, 831 F.3d 608 (5th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 626, 630
United States v. Gobert, 139 F.3d 436 (5th Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 959
United States v. Godin, 534 F.3d 51 (1st Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1001
United States v. Goforth, 546 F.3d 712 (4th Cir. 2008) ............................................................... 205
United States v. Goldberg, 538 F.3d 280 (3rd Cir. 2008) ............................................................ 598
United States v. Goldberg, 67 F.3d 1092 (3rd Cir. 1995) ............................................................. 197
United States v. Goldberg, 862 F.2d 101 (6th Cir. 1988) ............................................................ 961
United States v. Goldfaden, 959 F.2d 1324 (5th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 1065, 1305
United States v. Goldtooth, 754 F.3d 763 (9th Cir. 2014) ............................................................. 20, 61
United States v. Gomez, 276 F.3d 694 (5th Cir. 2001) ................................................................. 1625
United States v. Gomez, 580 F.3d 1229 (11th Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 1000, 1127
United States v. Gomez, 617 F.3d 88 (2d Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 413, 651
United States v. Gomez, 763 F.3d 845 (7th Cir. 2014) (en banc) .............................................. 668, 682, 687
United States v. Gomez, 908 F.2d 809 (11th Cir. 1990) ............................................................. 1047
United States v. Gomez, 927 F.2d 1530 (11th Cir. 1991) ............................................................ 361, 378
United States v. Gomez-Gallardo, 915 F.2d 553 (9th Cir. 1990) ............................................. 729
United States v. Gomez-Lemos, 939 F.2d 326 (6th Cir. 1991) .................................................... 778
United States v. Gomez-Moreno, 479 F.3d 350 (5th Cir. 2007) ............................................. 1445, 1475
United States v. Gomez-Rodriguez, 77 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 1996) ............................................. 1009
United States v. Gonczy, 357 F.3d 50 (1st Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 1298

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Page Numbers</th>
<th>Citations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 137 F.3d 1431</td>
<td>1709</td>
<td>10th Cir. 1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 164 F.3d 1285</td>
<td>926, 1759, 1768</td>
<td>10th Cir. 1999</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 399 F.3d 1225</td>
<td>1510</td>
<td>10th Cir. 2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 841 F.3d 339</td>
<td>562, 868, 1747</td>
<td>5th Cir. 2016</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 842 F.2d 748</td>
<td>1374, 1669</td>
<td>5th Cir. 1988</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 122 F.3d 1383</td>
<td>859, 1161</td>
<td>11th Cir. 1997</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 420 F.3d 111</td>
<td>951, 958, 978</td>
<td>2d Cir. 2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 533 F.3d 1057</td>
<td>740</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2008</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 578 F.3d 1130</td>
<td>1407</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 58 F.3d 459</td>
<td>1018</td>
<td>9th Cir. 1995</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 686 F.3d 122</td>
<td>1013, 1040</td>
<td>2d Cir. 2012</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 804 F.2d 691</td>
<td>1694</td>
<td>11th Cir. 1986</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 863 F.3d 576</td>
<td>994</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2017</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 969 F.2d 999</td>
<td>1393</td>
<td>11th Cir. 1992</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, 975 F.2d 1514</td>
<td>704</td>
<td>11th Cir. 1992</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez, Inc., 412 F.3d 1102</td>
<td>1490, 1754</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Flores, 418 F.3d 1093</td>
<td>673</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Lopez, 399 F.3d 924</td>
<td>69</td>
<td>8th Cir. 2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Lopez, 403 F.3d 558</td>
<td>81, 181</td>
<td>8th Cir. 2005</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Maldonado, 115 F.3d 9</td>
<td>640, 775, 792</td>
<td>1st Cir. 1997</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Melchor, 648 F.3d 959</td>
<td>48, 1316</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2011</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Melendez, 570 F.3d 1</td>
<td>1057</td>
<td>1st Cir. 2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Rodriguez, 621 F.3d 354</td>
<td>798</td>
<td>5th Cir. 2010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Rodriguez, 966 F.2d 918</td>
<td>1256</td>
<td>5th Cir. 1992</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gonzalez-Sanchez, 825 F.2d 572</td>
<td>544</td>
<td>1st Cir. 1987</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gooch, 6 F.3d 673</td>
<td>1486</td>
<td>9th Cir. 1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Goodman, 633 F.3d 963</td>
<td>733, 1042</td>
<td>10th Cir. 2011</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Goodman, 984 F.2d 235</td>
<td>1215</td>
<td>8th Cir. 1993</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Goodpasture, 595 F.3d 670</td>
<td>846</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Goodwin, 449 F.3d 766</td>
<td>1371</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gordon, 156 F.3d 376</td>
<td>118</td>
<td>2d Cir. 1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gordon, 480 F.3d 1205</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>10th Cir. 2007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gordon, 557 F.3d 623</td>
<td>846</td>
<td>8th Cir. 2009</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gordon, 741 F.3d 64</td>
<td>1582, 1616</td>
<td>10th Cir. 2014</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gordon, 829 F.2d 119</td>
<td>521</td>
<td>D.C. Cir. 1987</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gordon, 844 F.2d 1397</td>
<td>1022, 1173</td>
<td>9th Cir. 1988</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gore, 154 F.3d 34</td>
<td>425</td>
<td>2d Cir. 1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gorman, 613 F.3d 711</td>
<td>684</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gorman, 859 F.3d 705</td>
<td>1494, 1521</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2017</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gorski, 807 F.3d 451</td>
<td>934</td>
<td>1st Cir. 2015</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gorski, 852 F.2d 692</td>
<td>1553, 1561</td>
<td>2d Cir. 1988</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gotti, 155 F.3d 144</td>
<td>893, 908, 1360</td>
<td>2d Cir. 1998</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gourde, 382 F.3d 1003</td>
<td>1431, 1510, 1570, 1599</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gourde, 440 F.3d 1065</td>
<td>1431, 1510, 1571, 1599</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2006 (en banc)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1849

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case</th>
<th>Citation</th>
<th>Court</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Goyal</td>
<td>629 F.3d 912 (9th Cir. 2010)</td>
<td>818, 1681</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grable</td>
<td>98 F.3d 251 (6th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>828</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gracia</td>
<td>522 F.3d 597 (5th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graciani</td>
<td>61 F.3d 70 (1st Cir. 1995)</td>
<td>1266</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graf</td>
<td>610 F.3d 1148 (9th Cir. 2010)</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graham</td>
<td>128 F.3d 372 (6th Cir. 1997)</td>
<td>1702</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graham</td>
<td>60 F.3d 463 (8th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td>1028</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graham</td>
<td>691 F.3d 153 (2d Cir. 2012)</td>
<td>848</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graham</td>
<td>824 F.3d 421 (4th Cir. 2016)</td>
<td>1516</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graham</td>
<td>856 F.2d 756 (6th Cir. 1988)</td>
<td>616</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graibe</td>
<td>946 F.2d 1428 (9th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>981</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grammas</td>
<td>376 F.3d 433 (5th Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>116</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grandberry</td>
<td>730 F.3d 968 (9th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td>1604</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grant</td>
<td>256 F.3d 1146 (11th Cir. 2001)</td>
<td>775</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grant</td>
<td>682 F.3d 827 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td>1505, 1569</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grant</td>
<td>920 F.2d 376 (6th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>1397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grasso</td>
<td>381 F.3d 160 (3rd Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>1254</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gravatt</td>
<td>868 F.2d 585 (3rd Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>184, 828</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graves</td>
<td>143 F.3d 1185 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>16, 1240</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graves</td>
<td>374 F.3d 80 (2d Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>1298</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Graves</td>
<td>98 F.3d 258 (7th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gray</td>
<td>491 F.3d 138 (4th Cir. 2007)</td>
<td>1381</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gray</td>
<td>521 F.3d 514 (6th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td>989</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gray</td>
<td>581 F.3d 749 (8th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>950</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gray</td>
<td>780 F.3d 458 (1st Cir. 2015)</td>
<td>1143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gray</td>
<td>878 F.2d 702 (3rd Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gray-Burriss</td>
<td>791 F.3d 50 (D.C. Cir. 2015)</td>
<td>533</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green</td>
<td>111 F.3d 515 (7th Cir. 1997)</td>
<td>1401, 1406, 1497, 1541, 1650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green</td>
<td>25 F.3d 206 (3rd Cir. 1994)</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green</td>
<td>324 F.3d 375 (5th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td>1409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green</td>
<td>52 F.3d 194 (8th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td>1375, 1651</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green</td>
<td>556 F.3d 151 (3rd Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>751</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green</td>
<td>617 F.3d 233 (3rd Cir. 2010)</td>
<td>684</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green</td>
<td>842 F.3d 1299 (11th Cir. 2016)</td>
<td>682, 963</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Green-Bowman</td>
<td>816 F.3d 958 (8th Cir. 2016)</td>
<td>305, 686</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Greene</td>
<td>704 F.3d 298 (4th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td>994</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Greene</td>
<td>834 F.2d 86 (4th Cir. 1987)</td>
<td>1089</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Greenfield</td>
<td>831 F.3d 106 (2d Cir. 2016)</td>
<td>840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Greenspan</td>
<td>26 F.3d 1001 (10th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td>1065</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Greenwood</td>
<td>812 F.2d 632 (10th Cir. 1987)</td>
<td>1310</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Greer</td>
<td>939 F.2d 1076 (5th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>748</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gregg</td>
<td>463 F.3d 160 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>1673</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Gregory</td>
<td>79 F.3d 973 (10th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>1449, 1536</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Greig</td>
<td>967 F.2d 1018 (5th Cir. 1992)</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Grenier</td>
<td>513 F.3d 632 (6th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td>1716</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1850
| United States v. Grey, 56 F.3d 1219 (10th Cir. 1995) | .......................................................... 1055 |
| United States v. Griffin, 324 F.3d 330 (5th Cir. 2003) | .......................................................... 625, 801 |
| United States v. Griffin, 389 F.3d 1100 (10th Cir. 2004) | .......................................................... 701 |
| United States v. Griffin, 510 F.3d 354 (2d Cir. 2007) | .......................................................... 1294 |
| United States v. Griffin, 524 F.3d 71 (1st Cir. 2008) | .......................................................... 1145 |
| United States v. Griffin, 684 F.3d 691 (7th Cir. 2012) | .......................................................... 852 |
| United States v. Griffin, 7 F.3d 1512 (10th Cir. 1993) | .......................................................... 354 |
| United States v. Griffin, 922 F.2d 1343 (8th Cir. 1990) | .......................................................... 353 |
| United States v. Griffith, 455 F.3d 1339 (11th Cir. 2006) | .......................................................... 854 |
| United States v. Griffith, 867 F.3d 1265 (D.C. Cir. 2017) | .......................................................... 1364, 1417, 1423, 1465, 1494, 1501, 1568 |
| United States v. Grigg, 498 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2007) | .......................................................... 1408, 1645 |
| United States v. Grigsby, 111 F.3d 806 (11th Cir. 1997) | .......................................................... 1148, 1244 |
| United States v. Grigsby, 712 F.3d 964 (6th Cir. 2013) | .......................................................... 324 |
| United States v. Grimm, 738 F.3d 498 (2d Cir. 2013) | .......................................................... 1715 |
| United States v. Grimm, 150 F.3d 958 (8th Cir. 1998) | .......................................................... 1718 |
| United States v. Grinage, 390 F.3d 746 (2d Cir. 2004) | .......................................................... 736, 800 |
| United States v. Groce, 398 F.3d 679 (4th Cir. 2005) | .......................................................... 873 |
| United States v. Groll, 992 F.2d 755 (7th Cir. 1993) | .......................................................... 976 |
| United States v. Gross, 550 F.3d 578 (6th Cir. 2008) | .......................................................... 1527 |
| United States v. Gross, 662 F.3d 393 (6th Cir. 2011) | .......................................................... 1400, 1406, 1496, 1541, 1666 |
| United States v. Grossman, 117 F.3d 255 (5th Cir. 1997) | .......................................................... 1214 |
| United States v. Groves, 470 F.3d 311 (7th Cir. 2006) | .......................................................... 856, 1050, 1454 |
| United States v. Groysman, 766 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2014) | .......................................................... 624, 649, 731, 796, 1762 |
| United States v. Grubbs, 506 F.3d 434 (6th Cir. 2007) | .......................................................... 855 |
| United States v. Grzybowicz, 747 F.3d 1296 (11th Cir. 2014) | .......................................................... 1321 |
| United States v. Guadiana, 135 F.3d 1326 (10th Cir. 1998) | .......................................................... 715 |
| United States v. Guadian-Salazar, 824 F.2d 344 (5th Cir. 1987) | .......................................................... 528, 656 |
| United States v. Guagliardo, 278 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2002) | .......................................................... 1342 |
| United States v. Guapi, 144 F.3d 1393 (11th Cir. 1998) | .......................................................... 1372, 1377, 1441 |
| United States v. Guerra-Marez, 928 F.2d 665 (5th Cir. 1991) | .......................................................... 430, 450 |
| United States v. Guerrero, 374 F.3d 584 (8th Cir. 2004) | .......................................................... 1439 |
| United States v. Guerrero, 768 F.3d 351 (5th Cir. 2014) | .......................................................... 1517 |
| United States v. Guerrero-Espinoza, 462 F.3d 1302 (10th Cir. 2006) | .......................................................... 1528 |
| United States v. Guerrero-Jasso, 752 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2014) | .......................................................... 1003 |
| United States v. Guillen-Cazares, 989 F.2d 380 (10th Cir. 1993) | .......................................................... 1415 |
| United States v. Gunera, 479 F.3d 373 (5th Cir. 2007) | .......................................................... 1006, 1717 |
| United States v. Gunn, 369 F.3d 1229 (11th Cir. 2004) | .......................................................... 857 |
| United States v. Gupta, 699 F.3d 682 (2d Cir. 2012) | .......................................................... 1347 |
| United States v. Gust, 405 F.3d 797 (9th Cir. 2005) | .......................................................... 1618 |
| United States v. Gutierrez-Farias, 294 F.3d 657 (5th Cir. 2002) | .......................................................... 802 |
| United States v. Gutierrez-Mendez, 752 F.3d 418 (5th Cir. 2014) | .......................................................... 695 |
| United States v. Guzman, 167 F.3d 1350 (11th Cir. 1999) | .......................................................... 280 |
| United States v. Guzman-Ibarra, 792 F.3d 1094 (9th Cir. 2015) | .......................................................... 1003 |

1851
United States v. Guzman-Montanez, 756 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2014) ........................................... 595
United States v. Gwathney, 465 F.3d 1133 (10th Cir. 2006) ............................................. 757
United States v. Habegger, 370 F.3d 441 (4th Cir. 2004) ................................................... 478
United States v. Haddock, 956 F.2d 1534 (10th Cir. 1992) ........................................... 1139
United States v. Haga, 821 F.2d 1036 (5th Cir. 1987) ......................................................... 1036
United States v. Hahn, 359 F.3d 1315 (10th Cir. 2004 (en banc) ....................................... 51
United States v. Hahn, 922 F.2d 243 (5th Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 1561
United States v. Hale, 685 F.3d 1211 (11th Cir. 2012) ....................................................... 863
United States v. Haines, 803 F.3d 713 (5th Cir. 2015) ......................................................... 795
United States v. Hairston, 522 F.3d 336 (4th Cir. 2008) .................................................... 950
United States v. Hairson, 64 F.3d 491 (9th Cir. 1995) ....................................................... 1115
United States v. Haïscher, 780 F.3d 1277 (9th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 604, 631
United States v. Haldar, 751 F.3d 450 (7th Cir. 2014) ........................................................ 650
United States v. Hale, 762 F.3d 1214 (10th Cir. 2014) ...................................................... 816, 1284
United States v. Hall, 113 F.3d 157 (9th Cir. 1997) .............................................................. 1492
United States v. Hall, 613 F.3d 249 (D.C. Cir. 2010) ........................................................... 1249
United States v. Hall, 805 F.2d 1410 (10th Cir. 1986) ......................................................... 1318
United States v. Hall, 858 F.3d 254 (4th Cir. 2017) .............................................................. 686
United States v. Hall, 93 F.3d 1337 (7th Cir. 1996) ............................................................. 793
United States v. Hall, 978 F.2d 616 (10th Cir. 1992) ............................................................ 1653, 1670
United States v. Hall, 989 F.2d 711 (4th Cir. 1993) ............................................................. 499, 656, 1338
United States v. Ham, 998 F.2d 1247 (4th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 676, 1214
United States v. Hamdi, 432 F.3d 115 (2d Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 35, 51
United States v. Hamilton, 391 F.3d 1066 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 131, 181
United States v. Hamilton, 46 F.3d 271 (3rd Cir. 1995) ....................................................... 1710
United States v. Hamilton, 723 F.3d 542 (5th Cir. 2013) ................................................... 697
United States v. Hammd, 846 F.2d 854 (2d Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 81, 373
United States v. Hammond, 351 F.3d 765 (6th Cir. 2003) .................................................... 1490, 1511, 1557
United States v. Hammond, 371 F.3d 776 (11th Cir. 2004) ................................................. 864
United States v. Hampton, 718 F.3d 978 (D.C. Cir. 2013) ................................................... 732, 797
United States v. Hampton, 775 F.2d 1479 (11th Cir. 1985) .................................................. 837
United States v. Handakas, 286 F.3d 92 (2d Cir. 2002) ....................................................... 1228
United States v. Hanks, 24 F.3d 1235 (10th Cir. 1994) ....................................................... 1380
United States v. Hanna, 55 F.3d 1456 (9th Cir. 1995) ........................................................... 255
United States v. Hannigan, 27 F.3d 890 (3rd Cir. 1994) ..................................................... 1221
United States v. Hansel, 70 F.3d 6 (2d Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 118, 979
United States v. Hanshaw, 686 F.3d 613 (8th Cir. 2012) ..................................................... 1291
United States v. Hanson, 41 F.3d 580 (10th Cir. 1994) ........................................................ 1215, 1222
United States v. Hanson, 994 F.2d 403 (7th Cir. 1993) ....................................................... 663
United States v. Harber, 53 F.3d 236 (9th Cir. 1995) ............................................................ 1082, 1090
United States v. Harbin, 112 F.3d 974 (8th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 778
United States v. Harden, 758 F.3d 886 (7th Cir. 2014) ....................................................... 1068
United States v. Hardin, 437 F.3d 463 (5th Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 190
United States v. Hardin, 539 F.3d 404 (6th Cir. 2008) ........................................ 1384, 1590, 1676
United States v. Hardwell, 80 F.3d 1471 (10th Cir. 1996) .................................. 188, 829
United States v. Hardwick, 544 F.3d 565 (3d Cir. 2008) ........................................ 271
United States v. Hardy, 37 F.3d 753 (1st Cir. 1994) ................................................. 296
United States v. Hardy, 895 F.2d 1331 (11th Cir. 1990) ........................................... 437
United States v. Harlow, 444 F.3d 1255 (10th Cir. 2006) ........................................... 301, 1763
United States v. Harnage, 976 F.2d 633 (11th Cir. 1992) ........................................... 546, 647
United States v. Haro-Salcedo, 107 F.3d 769 (10th Cir. 1997) ................................. 1562
United States v. Harper, 33 F.3d 1143 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................. 63
United States v. Harper, 643 F.3d 135 (5th Cir. 2011) ............................................... 833, 1292
United States v. Harrell, 530 F.3d 1051 (9th Cir. 2008) ............................................ 1731
United States v. Harrell, 751 F.3d 1235 (11th Cir. 2014) ........................................... 1314
United States v. Harrill, 877 F.2d 341 (5th Cir. 1989) .............................................. 1036
United States v. Harrington, 354 F.3d 178 (2d Cir. 2004) .......................................... 952
United States v. Harris, 27 F.3d 111 (4th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 60
United States v. Harris, 397 F.3d 404 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................ 873
United States v. Harris, 420 F.3d 467 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................ 277
United States v. Harris, 434 F.3d 767 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................ 50
United States v. Harris, 464 F.3d 733 (7th Cir. 2006) .............................................. 1489
United States v. Harris, 471 F.3d 507 (3rd Cir. 2006) ................................................ 497
United States v. Harris, 473 F.3d 222 (6th Cir. 2006) ................................................ 1295
United States v. Harris, 608 F.3d 1222 (11th Cir. 2010) ............................................ 845
United States v. Harris, 666 F.3d 905 (5th Cir. 2012) ................................................ 1247
United States v. Harris, 914 F.2d 927 (7th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 745
United States v. Harris, 942 F.2d 1125 (7th Cir. 1991) ............................................... 1728
United States v. Harris, 973 F.2d 333 (4th Cir. 1992) ................................................ 835
United States v. Harrison, 34 F.3d 886 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................. 396
United States v. Harrison, 639 F.3d 1273 (10th Cir. 2011) ......................................... 1435
United States v. Harrison, 689 F.3d 301 (3rd Cir. 2012) .......................................... 1364, 1504, 1597
United States v. Harrison, 942 F.2d 751 (10th Cir. 1991) .......................................... 451
United States v. Harrold, 796 F.2d 1275 (10th Cir. 1986) .......................................... 1333
United States v. Harting, 879 F.2d 765 (10th Cir. 1989) ............................................. 1729
United States v. Harvey, 791 F.2d 294 (4th Cir. 1986) .............................................. 1304
United States v. Harvey, 991 F.2d 981 (2d Cir. 1993) .............................................. 676
United States v. Harwick, 523 F.3d 94 (2d Cir. 2008) ................................................ 415
United States v. Hasan, 526 F.3d 653 (10th Cir. 2008) .............................................. 1047
United States v. Hashime, 734 F.3d 278 (4th Cir. 2013) ............................................. 348
United States v. Hassan, 578 F.3d 108 (2d Cir. 2008) .............................................. 453, 1128, 1145, 1251
United States v. Hassock, 631 F.3d 79 (2d Cir. 2011) ................................................ 1452, 1612
United States v. Hastings, 918 F.2d 369 (2d Cir. 1990) ............................................. 1153
United States v. Hatfield, 591 F.3d 945 (7th Cir. 2010) ............................................. 571
United States v. Hatfield, 815 F.2d 1068 (6th Cir. 1987) ............................................ 1397
United States v. Hathaway, 798 F.2d 902 (6th Cir. 1986) ......................................... 656
United States v. Havelock, 619 F.3d 1091 (9th Cir. 2010) ......................................... 1737
United States v. Havelock, 664 F.3d 1284 (9th Cir. 2012) ......................................... 807, 1230

1853
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hawkins</td>
<td>547 F.3d 66 (2d Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hawkins</td>
<td>776 F.3d 200 (4th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hawkins</td>
<td>777 F.3d 880 (7th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hayden</td>
<td>64 F.3d 126 (3rd Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Haywood</td>
<td>574 F.3d 460 (8th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Haywood</td>
<td>729 F.3d 178 (2d Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Haywood</td>
<td>526 F.3d 674 (10th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Haywood</td>
<td>155 F.3d 674 (3rd Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Haywood</td>
<td>280 F.3d 715 (6th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Haywood</td>
<td>363 F.3d 200 (3rd Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hazelett</td>
<td>32 F.3d 1313 (8th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Head</td>
<td>340 F.3d 628 (8th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Head</td>
<td>707 F.3d 1026 (8th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Headley</td>
<td>923 F.2d 1079 (3rd Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heaps</td>
<td>39 F.3d 479 (4th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hearn</td>
<td>500 F.3d 479 (6th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heath</td>
<td>259 F.3d 522 (6th Cir. 2001)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heath</td>
<td>455 F.3d 52 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heath</td>
<td>970 F.2d 1397 (5th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hebeika</td>
<td>89 F.3d 279 (6th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heckenkamp</td>
<td>482 F.3d 1142 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hector</td>
<td>474 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hector</td>
<td>577 F.3d 1099 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hedges</td>
<td>912 F.2d 1397 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heid</td>
<td>651 F.3d 850 (8th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heidebur</td>
<td>122 F.3d 577 (8th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heineman</td>
<td>767 F.3d 970 (10th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heller</td>
<td>785 F.2d 1524 (11th Cir. 1986)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heller</td>
<td>830 F.2d 150 (11th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hemphill</td>
<td>748 F.3d 666 (5th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Henderson</td>
<td>409 F.3d 1293 (11th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Henderson</td>
<td>463 F.3d 27 (1st Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Henderson</td>
<td>906 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 2018)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Henley</td>
<td>984 F.3d 1040 (9th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Henry</td>
<td>429 F.3d 603 (6th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Henry</td>
<td>538 F.3d 300 (4th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Henry</td>
<td>797 F.3d 371 (6th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hensley</td>
<td>469 U.S. 221 (1985)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heredia</td>
<td>429 F.3d 820 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heredia</td>
<td>483 F.3d 913 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Heredia</td>
<td>483 F.3d 913 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
United States v. Hermanek, 289 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 802
United States v. Hernandez, 141 F.3d 1042 (11th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 447, 1262
United States v. Hernandez, 27 F.3d 1403 (9th Cir. 1994) ..................................................................... 1099
United States v. Hernandez, 279 F.3d 302 (5th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 1371, 1401, 1439, 1498
United States v. Hernandez, 433 F.3d 1328 (11th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1265
United States v. Hernandez, 476 F.3d 791 (9th Cir. 2007) .................................................................. 1160, 1331
United States v. Hernandez, 670 F.3d 616 (5th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 336, 1400, 1495
United States v. Hernandez, 847 F.3d 1257 (10th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 1663
United States v. Hernandez, 859 F.3d 817 (9th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 1142
United States v. Hernandez, 896 F.2d 513 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 437
United States v. Hernandez-Alvarado, 891 F.2d 1414 (9th Cir. 1989) ............................................. 1652
United States v. Hernandez-Cano, 808 F.2d 779 (11th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1481
United States v. Hernandez-Estrada, 749 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 2014)(en banc) ................................. 1091
United States v. Hernandez-Meza, 720 F.3d 760 (9th Cir. 2013) ........................................... 534, 633, 1060, 1352, 1704
United States v. Hernandez-Rodriguez, 443 F.3d 138 (1st Cir. 2006) ................................................... 1265
United States v. Herndon, 156 F.3d 629 (6th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1080
United States v. Heron, 564 F.3d 879 (7th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 340, 472
United States v. Herrera, 289 F.3d 311 (5th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 861
United States v. Herrera, 313 F.3d 882 (5th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 861
United States v. Herrera, 412 F.3d 577 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 116
United States v. Herrera, 444 F.3d 1238 (10th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1368, 1508
United States v. Herrera, 559 F.3d 296 (5th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 1727
United States v. Herrera-Figueroa, 918 F.2d 1430 (9th Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 187
United States v. Herrera-Valdez, 826 F.3d 912 (7th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1060
United States v. Herron, 97 F.3d 234 (8th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1256
United States v. Hicks, 539 F.3d 566 (7th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1436
United States v. Hicks, 779 F.3d 1163 (10th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1704
United States v. Higgins, 557 F.3d 381 (6th Cir. 2009) ...................................................................... 1557, 1569
United States v. High, 117 F.3d 464 (11th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 455, 1172
United States v. Hill, 131 F.3d 1056 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 1389
United States v. Hill, 146 F.3d 337 (6th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1189
United States v. Hill, 649 F.3d 258 (4th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1383, 1473
United States v. Hill, 749 F.3d 1250 (10th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 796
United States v. Hill, 749 F.3d 1250 (10th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 1762
United States v. Hill, 752 F.3d 1029 (5th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 1641, 1664
United States v. Hill, 776 F.3d 243 (4th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1503, 1603
United States v. Hill, 805 F.3d 935 (10th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1616
United States v. Hill, 835 F.2d 759 (10th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1037
United States v. Hill, 901 F.2d 880 (10th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 275
United States v. Hilliard, 31 F.3d 1509 (10th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1123
United States v. Hilliard, 392 F.3d 981 (8th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 89
United States v. Hills, 618 F.3d 619 (7th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 309, 923
United States v. Hilton, 363 F.3d 58 (1st Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1326
United States v. Hilton, 386 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1326

1855

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Hilton, 701 F.3d 959 (4th Cir. 2012) .......................................................... 1000
United States v. Hines, 955 F.2d 1449 (11th Cir. 1992) .......................................................... 704
United States v. Hite, 769 F.3d 1154 (D. C. Cir. 2014) ............................................................ 789
United States v. Hite, 769 F.3d 1154 (D.C. Cir. 2014) ............................................................. 607
United States v. Hitt, 164 F.3d 1370 (11th Cir. 1999) ............................................................... 736
United States v. Ho, 94 F.3d 932 (5th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1392, 1440
United States v. Hoang, 636 F.3d 677 (7th Cir. 2011) ............................................................. 1696
United States v. Hobbs, 31 F.3d 918 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1685
United States v. Hodge, 19 F.3d 51 (D.C.Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1442
United States v. Hodge, 412 F.3d 479 (3rd Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 967, 1296
United States v. Hodge, 558 F.3d 630 (7th Cir. 2009) ............................................................ 913, 1251
United States v. Hodgkiss, 116 F.3d 116 (5th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 1057
United States v. Hodson, 543 F.3d 286 (6th Cir. 2008) ........................................................... 1430, 1507, 1570, 1598
United States v. Hoffman, 556 F.3d 871 (8th Cir. 2009) ......................................................... 266
United States v. Hogan, 25 F.3d 690 (8th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1411
United States v. Hogan, 38 F.3d 1148 (10th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 1614
United States v. Hogg, 723 F.3d 730 (6th Cir. 2013) ............................................................. 955
United States v. Holcomb, 797 F.2d 1320 (5th Cir. 1986) ................................................... 1016, 1739
United States v. Holder, 410 F.3d 651 (10th Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 146
United States v. Holley, 942 F.2d 916 (5th Cir. 1991) ............................................................. 1173, 1286
United States v. Hollingsworth, 27 F.3d 1196 (7th Cir. 1994)(en banc) .................................. 616
United States v. Hollingsworth, 9 F.3d 593 (7th Cir. 1993) .................................................... 617
United States v. Hollis, 506 F.3d 415 (5th Cir. 2007) ............................................................ 854, 1025
United States v. Holloway, 1 F.3d 307 (5th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 1687
United States v. Holloway, 1 F.3d 307 (5th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 1686
United States v. Holloway, 309 F.3d 649 (9th Cir. 2002) ...................................................... 565
United States v. Holloway, 74 F.3d 249 (11th Cir. 1996) ........................................................ 837
United States v. Holly, 488 F.3d 1298 (10th Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 1129, 1131
United States v. Holman, 314 F.3d 837 (7th Cir. 2002) ........................................................... 149
United States v. Holmes, 413 F.3d 770 (8th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 311
United States v. Holmes, 44 F.3d 1150 (2d Cir. 1995) ............................................................ 1255
United States v. Holmes, 505 F.3d 1288 (D.C. Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 1401, 1437, 1635
United States v. Holmes, 620 F.3d 836 (8th Cir. 2010) ........................................................... 413, 650
United States v. Holton, 116 F.3d 1536 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ....................................................... 1741
United States v. Holzman, 871 F.2d 1496 (9th Cir. 1989) ........................................................ 1480
United States v. Hooker, 841 F.2d 1225 (4th Cir. 1988) ........................................................ 1016
United States v. Hooker, 997 F.2d 67 (5th Cir. 1993) ............................................................ 1154
United States v. Hoover, 467 F.3d 496 (5th Cir. 2006) ............................................................ 819, 1032, 1129
United States v. Hope, 545 F.3d 293 (5th Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 564, 854
United States v. Hopkins, 824 F.3d 726 (8th Cir. 2016) .......................................................... 1461
United States v. Horak, 833 F.2d 1235 (7th Cir. 1987) ........................................................... 1360
United States v. Horn, 29 F.3d 754 (1st Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 203

1856
United States v. Hornaday, 392 F.3d 1306 (11th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 22
United States v. Hornsby, 666 F.3d 296 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1225
United States v. Horodner, 993 F.2d 191 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 550
United States v. Horse, 747 F.3d 1040 (8th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 1150, 1351
United States v. Horsley, 864 F.2d 1543 (11th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1194
United States v. Horton, 863 F.3d 1041 (8th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 1423, 1567
United States v. Horvath, 492 F.3d 1075 (9th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 819
United States v. Hoskie, 950 F.2d 1388 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 330
United States v. Hoslett, 998 F.2d 648 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1713
United States v. Hotal, 143 F.3d 1223 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1379
United States v. Hough, 803 F.3d 1181 (11th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 280
United States v. Hourihan, 936 F.2d 508 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 953
United States v. Houston, 792 F.3d 663 (6th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1737
United States v. Hove, 52 F.3d 233 (9th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 743
United States v. Hove, 848 F.2d 137 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1514, 1572, 1602
United States v. Howard, 30 F.3d 871 (7th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1735
United States v. Howard, 381 F.3d 873 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 116, 328, 967
United States v. Howard, 447 F.3d 1257 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1604
United States v. Howard, 517 F.3d 731 (5th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 454, 458, 1226
United States v. Howard, 766 F.3d 414 (5th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 61, 607
United States v. Howard, 828 F.2d 552 (9th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1480
United States v. Howard, 918 F.2d 1529 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 456, 1205
United States v. Howell, 531 F.3d 621 (8th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 854
United States v. Huang, 960 F.2d 1128 (2d Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 556, 1047
United States v. Hudson, 405 F.3d 425 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1498, 1529, 1542, 1648
United States v. Hudspeth, 518 F.3d 954 (8th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1455
United States v. Huete-Sandoval, 668 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1705
United States v. Huether, 673 F.3d 789 (8th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1322
United States v. Huey, 76 F.3d 638 (5th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1190
United States v. Hufstetler, 782 F.3d 19 (1st Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 391
United States v. Hughes, 517 F.3d 1013 (8th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1635, 1645
United States v. Hughes, 795 F.3d 800 (8th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1125, 1751
United States v. Hughes, 864 F.2d 78 (8th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1192
United States v. Hughly, 147 F.3d 423 (5th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 480
United States v. Hugs, 384 F.3d 762 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1033, 1130
United States v. Huguenin, 154 F.3d 547 (6th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1609
United States v. Hull, 456 F.3d 133 (3rd Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 481, 848
United States v. Hundley, 858 F.2d 58 (2d Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 29
United States v. Hung Thien Ly, 646 F.3d 1307 (11th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 522, 526
United States v. Hunt, 129 F.3d 739 (5th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 582
United States v. Hunt, 456 F.3d 1255 (10th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 916
United States v. Hunter, 558 F.3d 495 (6th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 870
United States v. Hunter, 708 F.3d 938 (7th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 368
United States v. Hunter, 835 F.3d 1320 (11th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1289
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Title</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Huntley</td>
<td>523 F.3d 874 (8th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Huping Zhou</td>
<td>678 F.3d 1110 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hurt</td>
<td>795 F.2d 765 (9th Cir. 1986)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hurtado</td>
<td>905 F.2d 74 (5th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hurwitz</td>
<td>459 F.3d 463 (4th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Husmann</td>
<td>765 F.3d 169 (3rd Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hussain</td>
<td>835 F.3d 307 (2d Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hussein</td>
<td>351 F.3d 9 (1st Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Husted</td>
<td>545 F.3d 1240 (10th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hyppolite</td>
<td>65 F.3d 1151 (4th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Hython</td>
<td>443 F.3d 480 (6th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. I.E.V.,</td>
<td>705 F.3d 430 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Iacaboni</td>
<td>363 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ibarra</td>
<td>493 F.3d 526 (5th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ibarra, 965 F.2d 1354 (5th Cir. 1992)</td>
<td>1457</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ibisevic, 675 F.3d 342 (4th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td>501, 635, 660, 751, 1242</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Idowu, 105 F.3d 728 (D.C.Cir. 1997)</td>
<td>976</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Idowu, 157 F.3d 265 (3rd Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>426, 455</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ignasiak, 667 F.3d 1217 (11th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td>410</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. IMM, 747 F.3d 754 (9th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td>344, 347</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ince, 21 F.3d 576 (4th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td>729</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Indelicato, 865 F.2d 1370</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Indelicato, 865 F.2d 1370 (2d Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>1356</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Infante, 404 F.3d 376 (5th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>1358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Infante-Ruiz, 13 F.3d 498 (1st Cir. 1994)</td>
<td>1364, 1410, 1457, 1485, 1552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ingle, 454 F.3d 1082 (10th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>207</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ingles, 445 F.3d 830 (5th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>1219</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ingraldi, 793 F.2d 408 (1st Cir. 1986)</td>
<td>302</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ingram, 446 F.3d 1332 (11th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>1701</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ingrao, 897 F.2d 860 (7th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td>1392</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Inigo, 925 F.2d 641 (3rd Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>991</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Introcaso, 506 F.3d 260 (3rd Cir. 2007)</td>
<td>863, 1722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Iraheta, 764 F.3d 455 (5th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td>1452, 1523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Iribe-Perez, 129 F.3d 1167 (10th Cir. 1997)</td>
<td>1201</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Irizarry-Colon, 848 F.3d 61 (1st Cir. 2017)</td>
<td>1699</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Irvin, 682 F.3d 1254 (10th Cir. 2011)</td>
<td>624</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Irvin, 87 F.3d 860 (7th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>677</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Irving, 452 F.3d 110 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>42, 389</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Isiofia, 370 F.3d 226 (2d Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>1438</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ismail, 97 F.3d 50 (4th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>1233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ismoila, 100 F.3d 380 (5th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>758</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ivy, 165 F.3d 397 (6th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>1447</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Case Title</td>
<td>Citation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>--------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Izurieta</td>
<td>710 F.3d 1176 (11th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>124 F.3d 607 (4th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>26 F.3d 999 (10th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>339 F.3d 349 (5th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>345 F.3d 59 (2d Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>368 F.3d 59 (2d Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>443 F.3d 293 (3rd Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>480 F.3d 1014 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>544 F.3d 351 (1st Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>636 F.3d 687 (5th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>818 F.2d 345 (5th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>825 F.2d 853 (5th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jackson</td>
<td>849 F.3d 540 (3rd Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jacobo Castillo</td>
<td>496 F.3d 947 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jacobs</td>
<td>431 F.3d 99 (3rd Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jacobs</td>
<td>986 F.2d 1231 (8th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jadlowe</td>
<td>628 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. James</td>
<td>169 F.3d 1210 (9th Cir. 1999)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. James</td>
<td>353 F.3d 606 (8th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. James</td>
<td>468 F.3d 245 (5th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. James</td>
<td>556 F.3d 1062 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. James</td>
<td>712 F.3d 79 (2d Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jaquez</td>
<td>421 F.3d 338 (5th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jaramillo</td>
<td>25 F.3d 1146 (2d Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jaramillo</td>
<td>69 F.3d 388 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jaras</td>
<td>86 F.3d 383 (5th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jarman</td>
<td>687 F.3d 269 (5th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jarvis</td>
<td>499 F.3d 1196 (10th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jarverson</td>
<td>409 F.3d 1221 (10th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jawara</td>
<td>474 F.3d 565 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jefferies</td>
<td>908 F.2d 1520 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jefferson</td>
<td>566 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jefferson</td>
<td>674 F.3d 332 (4th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jefferson</td>
<td>906 F.2d 346 (8th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>124 F.3d 768 (6th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>345 F.3d 928 (6th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>504 F.3d 694 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>58 F.3d 611 (11th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>593 F.3d 480 (6th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>633 F.3d 788 (9th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>849 F.3d 390 (7th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Jenkins</td>
<td>90 F.3d 814 (3rd Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
United States v. Jenkins, 92 F.3d 430 (6th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 1626
United States v. Jenkins, 938 F.2d 934 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................ 396
United States v. Jennings, 160 F.3d 1006 (4th Cir. 1998) ............................................. 268
United States v. Jennings, 842 F.2d 159 (6th Cir. 1988) ................................................ 1359
United States v. Jensen, 141 F.3d 830 (8th Cir. 1998) ................................................ 425
United States v. Jenson, 462 F.3d 399 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................... 1529, 1657
United States v. Jerez, 108 F.3d 684 (7th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 1449, 1670
United States v. Jernigan, 492 F.3d 1050 (9th Cir. 2007) .............................................. 233, 811
United States v. Jett, 908 F.3d 252 (7th Cir. 2018) ......................................................... 61
United States v. Jewell, 827 F.2d 586 (9th Cir. 1987) ...................................................... 1029
United States v. Jiang, 140 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 1998) ....................................................... 72
United States v. Jiang, 476 F.3d 1026 (9th Cir. 2007) ................................................... 819
United States v. Jimenez, 419 F.3d 34 (1st Cir. 2005) .................................................... 1455
United States v. Jimenez-Antunez, 820 F.3d 1267 (11th Cir. 2016) ......................... 174
United States v. Jimenez-Bencević, 788 F.3d 7 (1st Cir. 2015) ........................................ 832
United States v. Jimenez-Marmolejo, 104 F.3d 1083 (9th Cir. 1996) ................. 1009
United States v. Jiminez, 464 F.3d 555 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................ 486
United States v. Jimenez, 705 F.3d 1305 (11th Cir. 2013) ........................................... 1225, 1733
United States v. Jimison, 825 F.3d 260 (5th Cir. 2016) ................................................ 400
United States v. Job, 851 F.3d 889 (9th Cir. 2017) ......................................................... 1603, 1639
United States v. Johansen, 56 F.3d 347 (2d Cir. 1995) ................................................ 450
United States v. John, 597 F.3d 263 (5th Cir. 2010) ...................................................... 333
United States v. Johns, 851 F.2d 1131 (9th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 1492
United States v. Johns, 891 F.2d 243 (9th Cir. 1989) .................................................... 1499
United States v. Johnson, 120 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 1997) ........................................... 1708, 1713
United States v. Johnson, 130 F.3d 1420 (10th Cir. 1997) ........................................... 1026
United States v. Johnson, 132 F.3d 628 (11th Cir. 1998) ................................................ 1301, 1310
United States v. Johnson, 16 F.3d 69 (5th Cir. 1994), aff’d on rehearing, 18 F.3d 293 (5th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 1542
United States v. Johnson, 22 F.3d 674 (6th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 1457, 1478
United States v. Johnson, 26 F.3d 669 (7th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 320
United States v. Johnson, 29 F.3d 940 (5th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 1711
United States v. Johnson, 347 F.3d 412 (2d Cir. 2003) .................................................. 51
United States v. Johnson, 380 F.3d 1013 (7th Cir. 2004) .............................................. 1498, 1546, 1550
United States v. Johnson, 381 F.3d 506 (5th Cir. 2004) ................................................ 864, 1239
United States v. Johnson, 388 F.3d 96 (3rd Cir. 2004) .................................................. 725
United States v. Johnson, 399 F.3d 1297 (11th Cir. 2005) ........................................... 205, 207, 208
United States v. Johnson, 400 F.3d 187 (4th Cir. 2005) ................................................ 371
United States v. Johnson, 427 F.3d 1053 (7th Cir. 2005) ............................................. 1445, 1647, 1668
United States v. Johnson, 439 F.3d 884 (8th Cir. 2006) ................................................ 701
United States v. Johnson, 440 F.3d 1286 (11th Cir. 2006) ........................................... 445, 1252
United States v. Johnson, 459 F.3d 990 (9th Cir. 2006) ............................................. 856
United States v. Johnson, 529 F.3d 493 (2d Cir. 2008) ................................................ 651, 734, 1762
United States v. Johnson, 56 F.3d 947 (8th Cir. 1995) ................................................ 1054

1860

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Johnson, 592 F.3d 164 (D.C. Cir. 2010) .................................................. 232
United States v. Johnson, 592 F.3d 749 (7th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 440
United States v. Johnson, 601 F.3d 869 (8th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 845
United States v. Johnson, 617 F.3d 286 (4th Cir. 2010) ................................................. 689, 734, 798
United States v. Johnson, 620 F.3d 685 (6th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 1643, 1666
United States v. Johnson, 652 F.3d 918 (8th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1127, 1322
United States v. Johnson, 656 F.3d 375 (6th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1452
United States v. Johnson, 71 F.3d 139 (4th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 1133
United States v. Johnson, 802 F.2d 1459 (D.C. Cir. 1986) ........................................... 730, 1334
United States v. Johnson, 812 F.2d 1329 (11th Cir. 1986) ........................................... 378, 1735
United States v. Johnson, 846 F.2d 279 (5th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 353, 1396
United States v. Johnson, 850 F.3d 515 (2d Cir. 2017) .................................................. 948
United States v. Johnson, 861 F.2d 510 (8th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 1307
United States v. Johnson, 873 F.2d 1137 (8th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1191
United States v. Johnson, 874 F.3d 1078 (9th Cir. 2017) .................................................. 1270
United States v. Johnson, 885 F.3d 1313 (11th Cir. 2018) ............................................. 1631
United States v. Johnson, 889 F.3d 1120 (9th Cir. 2018) .................................................. 1559
United States v. Johnson, 909 F.2d 1517 (D.C. Cir. 1990) ........................................... 1030
United States v. Johnson, 927 F.2d 999 (7th Cir. 1991) .................................................. 749
United States v. Johnson, 936 F.2d 1082 (9th Cir. 1991) .................................................. 1562
United States v. Johnson, 954 F.2d 1015 (5th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 374
United States v. Johnson, 968 F.2d 768 (8th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 316
United States v. Johnson, 971 F.2d 562 (10th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1258
United States v. Johnson, 994 F.2d 740 (10th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1369
United States v. Johnston, 127 F.3d 380 (5th Cir. 1997) .................................................. 296, 654
United States v. Johnston, 789 F.3d 934 (9th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 549, 1236, 1325
United States v. Jones, 149 F.3d 364 (5th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1534
United States v. Jones, 159 F.3d 969 (6th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 685, 932
United States v. Jones, 160 F.3d 641 (10th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 887, 894, 909
United States v. Jones, 28 F.3d 1574 (11th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 693
United States v. Jones, 335 F.3d 527 (6th Cir. 2003) .................................................. 1455
United States v. Jones, 336 F.3d 245 (3rd Cir. 2003) .................................................. 328
United States v. Jones, 371 F.3d 363 (7th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 418, 446, 768
United States v. Jones, 389 F.3d 753 (7th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 691
United States v. Jones, 393 F.3d 107 (2d Cir. 2004) .................................................. 424
United States v. Jones, 403 F.3d 604 (8th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 131, 857, 1026
United States v. Jones, 421 F.3d 359 (5th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 180, 196, 524
United States v. Jones, 44 F.3d 860 (10th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 434, 591, 1536, 1653
United States v. Jones, 452 F.3d 223 (3rd Cir. 2006) .................................................. 180, 195
United States v. Jones, 471 F.3d 478 (3rd Cir. 2006) .................................................. 985
United States v. Jones, 484 F.3d 783 (5th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 700
United States v. Jones, 49 F.3d 628 (10th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 590
United States v. Jones, 502 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 913
United States v. Jones, 504 F.3d 1218 (11th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 1106

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Jones, 56 F.3d 581 (5th Cir. 1995) ........................................................................ 1710
United States v. Jones, 600 F.3d 847 (7th Cir 2010) ................................................................ 779
United States v. Jones, 601 F.3d 1247 (11th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1706
United States v. Jones, 606 F.3d 964 (8th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1634, 1644
United States v. Jones, 664 F.3d 966 (5th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1747
United States v. Jones, 678 F.3d 293 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1665
United States v. Jones, 808 F.2d 754 (10th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 435
United States v. Jones, 839 F.2d 1041 (5th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 314
United States v. Jones, 841 F.2d 1022 (10th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1029
United States v. Jones, 846 F.2d 358 (6th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1440
United States v. Jones, 858 F.3d 221 (4th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 448, 562
United States v. Jones, 909 F.2d 533 (D.C.Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1136, 1740
United States v. Jones, 945 F.2d 747 (4th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 586
United States v. Jones, 982 F.2d 380 (9th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 492
United States v. Jones, 998 F.2d 883 (10th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1653
United States v. Joost, 92 F.3d 7 (1st Cir. 1996) ........................................................................ 615
United States v. Jordan, 112 F.3d 14 (1st Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 1687
United States v. Jordan, 49 F.3d 152 (5th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1065
United States v. Jordan, 509 F.3d 191 (4th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 1294
United States v. Jordan, 742 F.3d 276 (7th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 401
United States v. Jordan, 915 F.2d 563 (9th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1713
United States v. Jordan, 951 F.2d 1278 (D.C. Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 1671
United States v. Joseph, 542 F.3d 13 (2nd Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 608, 789
United States v. Joshi, 896 F.2d 1303 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 743
United States v. JP Morgan Chase Bank Account, 835 F.3d 1159 (2d Cir. 2016) ...................... 910
United States v. Juarez, 672 F.3d 381 (5th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 113
United States v. Jumper, 497 F.3d 699 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 381
United States v. Jung, 473 F.3d 837 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 744
United States v. Juvenile Male, 492 F.3d 1046 (9th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 1203
United States v. Juvenile Male, 595 F.3d 885 (9th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 386
United States v. Juvenile, 347 F.3d 778 (9th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1203
United States v. Kahn, --- F.3d --- (10th Cir. 2018) ................................................................. 884, 888
United States v. Kaiser, 609 F.3d 556 (2d Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 651, 1119, 1682
United States v. Kaiser, 893 F.2d 1300 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 550, 1730
United States v. Kallin, 50 F.3d 689 (9th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 500, 678, 1332
United States v. Kaluza, 780 F.3d 647 (5th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1721
United States v. Kang, 934 F.2d 621 (5th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 291, 616
United States v. Kapeliovijny, 547 F.3d 149 (2d Cir. 2008) .................................................. 444, 1733
United States v. Kaplan, 490 F.3d 110 (2d Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 735
United States v. Kaplan, 832 F.2d 676 (1st Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 489
United States v. Karauoni, 379 F.3d 1139 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 821, 1008, 1012
United States v. Karsseboom, 881 F.2d 604 (9th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1713

1862
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Reference Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kassouf</td>
<td>144 F.3d 952 (6th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Katakas</td>
<td>800 F.3d 1017 (9th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Katz</td>
<td>582 F.3d 749 (7th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kauffman</td>
<td>109 F.3d 186 (3rd Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kayser</td>
<td>488 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kearns</td>
<td>61 F.3d 1422 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keating</td>
<td>147 F.3d 895 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keboeaux</td>
<td>687 F.3d 232 (5th Cir. 2012) (en banc)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keen</td>
<td>104 F.3d 1111 (9th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kehm</td>
<td>799 F.2d 354 (7th Cir. 1986)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keswetter</td>
<td>860 F.2d 992 (10th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keith</td>
<td>559 F.3d 499 (6th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keller</td>
<td>916 F.2d 628 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kelley</td>
<td>402 F.3d 39 (1st Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kellogg</td>
<td>510 F.3d 188 (3rd Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kelly</td>
<td>35 F.3d 929 (4th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kelly</td>
<td>529 F.2d 1365 (8th Cir. 1976)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kelly</td>
<td>888 F.2d 732 (11th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kelsey</td>
<td>951 F.2d 1196 (10th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kemper</td>
<td>908 F.2d 33 (6th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kennedy</td>
<td>372 F.3d 686 (4th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kennedy</td>
<td>427 F.3d 1136 (8th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kennell</td>
<td>15 F.3d 134 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kenyon</td>
<td>397 F.3d 1071 (8th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kenyon</td>
<td>481 F.3d 1054 (8th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kerley</td>
<td>544 F.3d 172 (2d Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kerr</td>
<td>981 F.2d 1050 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kesey</td>
<td>863 F.2d 474 (7th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kessee</td>
<td>992 F.2d 1001 (9th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keszthelyi</td>
<td>308 F.3d 557 (6th Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Keys</td>
<td>133 F.3d 1282 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Khalil</td>
<td>857 F.3d 137 (2d Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Khanani</td>
<td>502 F.3d 1281 (11th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Khoury</td>
<td>901 F.2d 948 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Khubani</td>
<td>791 F.2d 260 (2d Cir. 1986)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kilbride</td>
<td>584 F.3d 1240 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kimball</td>
<td>25 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kimball</td>
<td>884 F.2d 1274 (9th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kimbrell</td>
<td>532 F.3d 461 (6th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kimbrough</td>
<td>69 F.3d 723 (5th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kimsey</td>
<td>668 F.3d 691 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Kincaid-Chauncey</td>
<td>556 F.3d 923 (9th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. King</td>
<td>122 F.3d 808 (9th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. King</td>
<td>345 F.3d 149 (2d Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. King</td>
<td>628 F.3d 693 (4th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
United States v. King, 687 F.3d 1189 (9th Cir. 2012) (en banc) ......................................................... 1604
United States v. King, 824 F.2d 313 (4th Cir. 1987) ........................................................................... 60
United States v. King, 834 F.2d 109 (6th Cir. 1987) ........................................................................ 920
United States v. King, 849 F.2d 485 (11th Cir. 1988) ....................................................................... 209
United States v. King, 853 F.3d 267 (6th Cir. 2017) ......................................................................... 844
United States v. King, 990 F.2d 1129 (10th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1661
United States v. King-Gore, --- F.3d --- (D.C. Cir. 2017) ............................................................... 1289
United States v. Kingrea, 573 F.3d 186 (4th Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 1014
United States v. Kirk, 528 F.3d 1102 (8th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 871
United States v. Kirkland, 851 F.3d 499 (5th Cir. 2017) ............................................................... 1289
United States v. Kirschenbaum, 156 F.3d 784 (7th Cir. 1998) .................................................... 887, 893, 908
United States v. Kitchen, 57 F.3d 516 (7th Cir. 1995) .............................................................. 588
United States v. Kithcart, 134 F.3d 529 (3rd Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 1391
United States v. Klebig, 600 F.3d 700 (7th Cir. 2009) ............................................................ 288, 670, 699
United States v. Klingler, 61 F.3d 1234 (6th Cir. 1995) ............................................................. 1735
United States v. Kliti, 156 F.3d 150 (2d Cir. 1998) ....................................................................... 72, 1761
United States v. Kloehn, 620 F.3d 1122 (9th Cir. 2010) ............................................................... 472
United States v. Klubock, 832 F.2d 664 (1st Cir. 1987) ............................................................. 167, 937
United States v. Knight, 306 F.3d 534 (8th Cir. 2002) ............................................................. 1368
United States v.Knight, 800 F.3d 491 (8th Cir. 2015) ............................................................... 218, 1264
United States v. Knoll, 16 F.3d 1313 (2d Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1592, 1678, 1719
United States v. Knox, 883 F.3d 1262 (10th Cir. 2018) .............................................................. 1500
United States v. Koblan, 478 F.3d 1324 (11th Cir. 2007) ........................................................... 35
United States v. Koerber, 966 F.Supp.2d 1207 (D.Utah 2013) .................................................. 81
United States v. Kohan, 806 F.2d 18 (2d Cir. 1986) .................................................................... 663
United States v. Kohring, 637 F.3d 895 (9th Cir. 2011) ............................................................ 242, 484
United States v. Kojayan, 8 F.3d 1315 (9th Cir. 1993) ............................................................. 248, 292, 928
United States v. Kopstein, 759 F.3d 168 (2d Cir. 2014) ........................................................... 611
United States v. Kord, 836 F.2d 368 (7th Cir. 1988) .............................................................. 997
United States v. Korey, 472 F.3d 89 (3rd Cir. 2007) .............................................................. 423, 871, 1129
United States v. Kottwitz, 627 F.3d 1383 (11th Cir. 2010) ........................................................ 17, 1138
United States v. Kow, 58 F.3d 423 (9th Cir. 1995) ............................................................. 1576, 1578
United States v. Kowalczyk, 805 F.3d 847 (9th Cir. 2015) ...................................................... 193, 322
United States v. Kozeny, 541 F.3d 166 (2d Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 1717
United States v. Kraigness, 830 F.2d 842 (8th Cir. 1987) .......................................................... 1359
United States v. Kramer, 73 F.3d 1067 (11th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 1259
United States v. Kramer, 912 F.2d 1257 (11th Cir. 1990) .......................................................... 1361
United States v. Krane, 625 F.3d 568 (9th Cir. 2010) ............................................................. 161
United States v. Kratt, 579 F.3d 558 (6th Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 1249
United States v. Kraus, 137 F.3d 447 (7th Cir. 1998) ............................................................. 1317
United States v. Kravetz, 706 F.3d 47 (1st Cir. 2013) ........................................................... 812
United States v. Krueger, 809 F.3d 1109 (10th Cir. 2015) ........................................................ 1567

1864
United States v. Lankford, 955 F.2d 1545 (11th Cir. 1992).......................... 493, 647, 794, 1244, 1729
United States v. LaPierre, 998 F.2d 1460 (9th Cir. 1993)................................................. 998
United States v. Lapler, 796 F.3d 1090 (9th Cir. 2015).................................................. 448, 1175
United States v. LaPoite, 690 F.3d 434 (6th Cir. 2012).................................................. 420, 453, 1159
United States v. Lara, 541 U.S. 193 (2004)................................................................. 548
United States v. Lara, 690 F.3d 1079 (8th Cir. 2012).................................................. 1291
United States v. Lara, 815 F.3d 605 (9th Cir. 2016)................................................. 1603
United States v. Lara-Ramirez, 519 F.3d 76 (1st Cir. 2008).............................................. 553
United States v. Lara-Ruiz, 681 F.3d 914 (8th Cir. 2012)............................................. 1291
United States v. Larios, 593 F.3d 82 (1st Cir. 2010).................................................. 1483, 1753
United States v. Larson, 460 F.3d 1200 (9th Cir. 2006)...................................... 404, 486
United States v. Larson, 495 F.3d 1094 (9th Cir. 2007)............................................ 486
United States v. Larson, 627 F.3d 1198 (10th Cir. 2010)........................................ 1705
United States v. LaSalle National Bank, 437 U.S. 298 (1978)..................................... 1046
United States v. Latham, 874 F.2d 852 (1st Cir. 1989)................................................... 519
United States v. Latorre-Cacho, 874 F.3d 299 (1st Cir. 2017)................................... 1124
United States v. Latouf, 132 F.3d 320 (6th Cir. 1997).................................................. 703
United States v. Laughlin, 438 F.3d 1245 (10th Cir. 2006)...................................... 1530, 1619, 1647
United States v. Laughton, 409 F.3d 744 (6th Cir. 2005)................................. 1509, 1570
United States v. Laureys, 866 F.3d 432 (D.C. Cir. 2017)........................................... 137, 607
United States v. Law, 528 F.3d 888 (D.C. Cir. 2008)......................................................... 1251
United States v. Lawrence, 471 F.3d 135 (D.C. Cir. 2006)............................................ 41
United States v. Lawson, 494 F.3d 1046 (D.C. Cir. 2007)............................................ 298
United States v. Lawson, 677 F.3d 629 (4th Cir. 2012)............................................ 717, 1075
United States v. Lawton, 995 F.2d 290 (D.C. Cir. 1993).................................................. 1038
United States v. Lazar, 604 F.3d 230 (6th Cir. 2010)....................................................... 1466
United States v. Lazarenko, 564 F.3d 1026 (9th Cir. 2009)...................................... 1219, 1734
United States v. Leach, 918 F.2d 464 (5th Cir. 1990)............................................... 320
United States v. Leak, 123 F.3d 787 (4th Cir. 1997).................................................... 898
United States v. Leake, 95 F.3d 409 (6th Cir. 1996).................................................. 1553
United States v. Leake, 998 F.2d 1359 (6th Cir. 1993)........................................... 1512, 1558
United States v. Leal-Del Carmen, 697 F.3d 964 (9th Cir. 2012)............................ 773, 923, 1157
United States v. Leary, 846 F.2d 592 (10th Cir. 1988)......................................... 1580
United States v. Lechuga, 994 F.2d 346 (7th Cir. 1993)(en banc)........................... 431
United States v. LeCoe, 936 F.2d 398 (9th Cir. 1991).................................................. 916
United States v. Ledezma, 26 F.3d 636 (6th Cir. 1994)................................................. 25, 587
United States v. Lee, 413 F.3d 622 (7th Cir. 2005)...................................................... 370
United States v. Lee, 439 F.3d 381 (7th Cir. 2006)................................................... 479
United States v. Lee, 549 F.3d 84 (2d Cir. 2008)....................................................... 414
United States v. Lee, 558 F.3d 638 (7th Cir. 2009)..................................................... 1251
United States v. Lee, 573 F.3d 155 (3rd Cir. 2009).................................................. 536, 1089
United States v. Lee, 760 F.3d 692 (7th Cir. 2014)..................................................... 193
United States v. Leftkowitz, 125 F.3d 608 (8th Cir. 1997)...................................... 1220
United States v. Lefsh, 867 F.3d 459 (4th Cir. 2017)................................................. 1069
United States v. Leiferman, 341 F.3d 338 (4th Cir. 2003)..................................... 1026

1866
United States v. Leichtnam, 948 F.3d 370 (7th Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 1036
United States v. Lemons, 941 F.2d 309 (5th Cir. 1991) .............................................................. 1028
United States v. Lemus, 596 F.3d 512 (9th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1582
United States v. Lemus, 847 F.3d 1016 (9th Cir. 2016) ............................................................... 577
United States v. Lentz, 383 F.3d 191 (4th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1063, 1078, 1204
United States v. Leo, 792 F.3d 742 (7th Cir. 2015) .................................................................. 1632
United States v. Leonard, 138 F.3d 906 (11th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 583
United States v. Leonard-Allen, 739 F.3d 948 (7th Cir. 2013) ............................................... 660
United States v. Leonti, 326 F.3d 1111 (9th Cir. 2003) ........................................................... 149
United States v. Leos-Quijada, 107 F.3d 786 (10th Cir. 1997) ............................................... 590
United States v. Lequire, 672 F.3d 724 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................................. 606
United States v. Lequire, 943 F.2d 1554 (11th Cir. 1991) ...................................................... 704
United States v. Leslie, 103 F.3d 1093 (2d Cir. 1997) .............................................................. 1053
United States v. Lessard, 17 F.3d 303 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 618
United States v. Leventhal, 961 F.2d 936 (11th Cir. 1992) ........................................................ 170
United States v. Levesque, 546 F.3d 78 (1st Cir. 2008) ........................................................... 896
United States v. Levy, 25 F.3d 146 (2d Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 74, 1392, 1543
United States v. Levy, 990 F.2d 971 (7th Cir. 1993) ............................................................... 1708
United States v. Lewis, 349 F.3d 1116 (9th Cir. 2003) ............................................................ 1708
United States v. Lewis, 476 F.3d 369 (5th Cir. 2007) .............................................................. 475
United States v. Lewis, 492 F.3d 1219 (11th Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 31, 36
United States v. Lewis, 53 F.3d 29 (4th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 428, 1114
United States v. Lewis, 554 F.3d 208 (1st Cir. 2009) .............................................................. 1324
United States v. Lewis, 633 F.3d 262 (4th Cir. 2011) .............................................................. 964, 971
United States v. Lewis, 672 F.3d 232 (3rd Cir. 2012) ............................................................... 1525, 1642
United States v. Lewis, 673 F.3d 758 (8th Cir. 2012) ........................................................... 1292
United States v. Lewis, 864 F.3d 937 (8th Cir. 2017) ............................................................ 1581, 1631
United States v. Lewis, 902 F.2d 1176 (5th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 430
United States v. Leyden, 842 F.2d 1026 (8th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 1222
United States v. Liburd, 607 F.3d 339 (3rd Cir. 2010) .......................................................... 535, 924
United States v. Lichtenberger, 786 F.3d 478 (6th Cir. 2015) .............................................. 1589
United States v. Liera, 585 F.3d 1237 (9th Cir. 2009) ............................................................ 388
United States v. Liew, 856 F.3d 585 (9th Cir. 2017) ............................................................. 533, 1271
United States v. Ligon, 440 F.3d 1182 (9th Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 1734
United States v. Lillie, 989 F.2d 1054 (9th Cir. 1993) ............................................................ 187
United States v. Lilly, 983 F.2d 300 (1st Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 1027
United States v. Limatoc, 807 F.2d 792 (9th Cir. 1987) ........................................................ 1369
United States v. Lin Lyn Trading Co., 149 F.3d 1112 (10th Cir. 1998) ................................. 1547
United States v. Linares, 367 F.3d 941 (D.C. Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 700, 702
United States v. Lincoln, 403 F.3d 703 (9th Cir. 2005) ........................................................ 1736
United States v. Lindstrom, 698 F.2d 1154 (11th Cir. 1983) .................................................. 225, 485
United States v. Linn, 513 F.2d 925 (10th Cir. 1975) ............................................................... 806
United States v. Lis, 120 F.3d 28 (4th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 662
United States v. Little, 60 F.3d 708 (10th Cir. 1995) .............................................................. 1376, 1670
United States v. Little, 829 F.3d 1177 (10th Cir. 2016) .......................................................... 1118

1867

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case</th>
<th>Opinion Date</th>
<th>Citations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Littlejohn</td>
<td>2007</td>
<td>1197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Littleton</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>1233, 1277, 1285</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Litvak</td>
<td>2015</td>
<td>630, 788, 815, 1208, 1231, 1680</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Litvak</td>
<td>2018</td>
<td>631</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Litvak</td>
<td>2012</td>
<td>1686, 1726</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Liu</td>
<td>2013</td>
<td>477, 478, 1143, 1150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Livingston</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>726</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Llanez-Garcia</td>
<td>2013</td>
<td>1724</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lloyd</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>1709</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lloyd</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>1021</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lloyd</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>1342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lloyd</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lloyd</td>
<td>1993</td>
<td>539, 1058</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Locklear</td>
<td>1996</td>
<td>1016, 1134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Loder</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>24, 1213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lomax</td>
<td>2016</td>
<td>419, 439</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lombardi</td>
<td>1998</td>
<td>23, 597</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lombard Valdovinos</td>
<td>2005</td>
<td>1006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Long</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>1043</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Long</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>1358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Longbehn</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>353, 1397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Longoria</td>
<td>1997</td>
<td>961</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez (Ramirez)</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>973</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2000</td>
<td>835</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>653</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>564</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2004</td>
<td>1276</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>1994</td>
<td>588</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>393</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>42, 445</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>1647, 1657, 1668</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>1006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2007</td>
<td>1006</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>1331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>1995</td>
<td>1049</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2009</td>
<td>1407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>1991</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2016</td>
<td>295, 355, 496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>2017</td>
<td>1521</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez</td>
<td>1988</td>
<td>1357</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez-Arias</td>
<td>2003</td>
<td>1395</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez-Cruz</td>
<td>2013</td>
<td>1418, 1434</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez-Diaz</td>
<td>2015</td>
<td>985</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez-Medina</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>799</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Lopez-Perera</td>
<td>2006</td>
<td>860</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1868
United States v. Lopez-Ramirez, 68 F.3d 438 (11th Cir. 1995) ...................................................... 435, 591
United States v. Lopez-Valenzuela, 511 F.3d 487 (5th Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 1707
United States v. Lopez-Vanegas, 493 F.3d 1305 (11th Cir. 2007) ....................................................... 423, 810
United States v. Loughery, 908 F.2d 1014 (D.C.Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 121
United States v. Loughner, 672 F.3d 731 (9th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 324
United States v. Loughry, 660 F.3d 965 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 670
United States v. Louis, 861 F.3d 1330 (11th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 419
United States v. Love, 329 F.3d 981 (8th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 488
United States v. Lovelace, 123 F.3d 650 (7th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 654
United States v. Lovelace, 565 F.3d 1080 (8th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 50, 1293
United States v. Loveland, --- F.3d --- (9th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 419
United States v. Loveland, 825 F.3d 555 (9th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 439
United States v. Lovern, 590 F.3d 1095 (10th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 573
United States v. Lovett, 964 F.2d 1029 (10th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 1258
United States v. Lowe, 791 F.3d 424 (3rd Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1640, 1664
United States v. Lowe, 795 F.3d 519 (6th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1321
United States v. Lowery, 135 F.3d 957 (5th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1276
United States v. Lowery, 60 F.3d 1199 (6th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 961
United States v. Loya-Rodriguez, 672 F.3d 849 (10th Cir. 2012) ...................................................... 194
United States v. Loyla-Dominguez, 125 F.3d 1315 (9th Cir. 1997) ...................................................... 328
United States v. Luc Levasseur, 826 F.2d 158 (1st Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 261
United States v. Lucas, 67 F.3d 956 (D.C.Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 592
United States v. Lucas, 963 F.2d 243 (9th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 375
United States v. Luciano, 158 F.3d 655 (2d Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 72
United States v. Lucien, 61 F.3d 366 (5th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1162
United States v. Lucio, 428 F.3d 519 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 860
United States v. Luck, 611 F.3d 183 (4th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 141, 1177
United States v. Lueben, 816 F.2d 1032 (5th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 793, 1234
United States v. Luffred, 911 F.2d 1011 (5th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1081, 1089
United States v. Lugg, 892 F.2d 101 (D.C.Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 830, 1313
United States v. Lugo, 978 F.2d 631 (10th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 1412, 1544, 1562
United States v. Luisi, 482 F.3d 43 (1st Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 613
United States v. Lull, 824 F.3d 109 (4th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1487
United States v. Lundin, 817 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1460, 1470, 1548, 1611, 1675
United States v. Lunsford, 725 F.3d 859 (8th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 1695
United States v. Luong, 470 F.3d 898 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1508, 1599
United States v. Lustig, 830 F.3d 1075 (9th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 954, 1417
United States v. Lynch, 162 F.3d 732 (2d Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 556
United States v. Lynch, 934 F.2d 1226 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 1481
United States v. Lynn, 636 F.3d 1127 (9th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 549, 562, 1322
United States v. Lynn, 856 F.2d 430 (1st Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 489
United States v. MacDonald & Watson Waste Oil Co., 933 F.2d 35 (1st Cir. 1991) .................................. 1153
United States v. Macewan, 445 F.3d 237 (3rd Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1050, 1325
United States v. Machi, 811 F.2d 991 (7th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1278
United States v. Macias, 387 F.3d 509 (6th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 273

1869

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Macias, 658 F.3d 509 (5th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1444, 1525
United States v. Macias, 740 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 2014) .................................................. 1004
United States v. Macias, 786 F.3d 1060 (7th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 1118
United States v. Mack, 362 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 524
United States v. Mack, 729 F.3d 594 (6th Cir. 2013) .................................................. 697
United States v. Mackey, 915 F.2d 69 (2d Cir. 1990) .................................................. 519
United States v. Mackin, 793 F.3d 703 (7th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 533
United States v. Madden, 733 F.3d 1314 (11th Cir. 2013) ........................................... 1031
United States v. Maddox, 156 F.3d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1998) ......................................... 290
United States v. Maddox, 614 F.3d 1046 (9th Cir. 2010) ............................................ 1541
United States v. Madigan, 592 F.3d 621 (4th Cir. 2010) .............................................. 49
United States v. Madoc, 149 F.3d 596 (7th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 352
United States v. Madrid, 152 F.3d 1034 (8th Cir. 1998) .............................................. 1552, 1554, 1588
United States v. Maestas, 2 F.3d 1485 (10th Cir. 1993) .............................................. 1610
United States v. Maez, 872 F.2d 1444 (10th Cir. 1989) .............................................. 1385, 1450
United States v. Magluta, 418 F.3d 1166 (11th Cir. 2005) ........................................... 747
United States v. Mahaffy, 693 F.3d 113 (2d Cir. 2012) .............................................. 231, 891, 896, 899
United States v. Mahar, 801 F.2d 1477 (6th Cir. 1986) .............................................. 588
United States v. Mahasin, 442 F.3d 687 (8th Cir. 2006) .............................................. 672
United States v. Mahbub, 818 F.3d 213 (6th Cir. 2016) .............................................. 1180
United States v. Maher, 454 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2006) .................................................. 415, 652
United States v. Mahin, 668 F.3d 119 (4th Cir. 2012) .................................................. 852
United States v. Mahkimetas, 991 F.2d 379 (7th Cir. 1993) ....................................... 748
United States v. Makkar, 810 F.3d 1139 (10th Cir. 2015) ........................................... 569, 630, 1125
United States v. Male Juvenile, 148 F.3d 468 (5th Cir. 1998) ..................................... 1203
United States v. Maliszewski, 161 F.3d 992 (D.C. Cir. 1998) ..................................... 319, 747
United States v. Mallory, 765 F.3d 373 (3rd Cir. 2014) .............................................. 1471
United States v. Malone, 484 F.3d 916 (7th Cir. 2007) .............................................. 1252
United States v. Maloney, 755 F.3d 1044 (9th Cir. 2014) (en banc) ......................... 288
United States v. Malpiedi, 62 F.3d 465 (2d Cir. 1995) ................................................ 73
United States v. Maltos, 985 F.2d 743 (5th Cir. 1992) .............................................. 429
United States v. Manapat, 928 F.2d 1097 (11th Cir. 1991) ........................................ 1245
United States v. Mancari, 875 F.2d 103 (7th Cir. 1989) ............................................. 432
United States v. Mancinas-Flores, 588 F.3d 677 (9th Cir. 2009) .............................. 965
United States v. Mancini, 8 F.3d 104 (1st Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1485
United States v. Mancuso, 718 F.3d 780 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................ 576, 1021
United States v. Mandelbaum, 803 F.2d 42 (1st Cir. 1986) ...................................... 313
United States v. Manges, 110 F.3d 1162 (5th Cir. 1997) ............................................ 1719
United States v. Mann, 389 F.3d 869 (9th Cir. 2004) .............................................. 873
United States v. Mann, 493 F.3d 484 (5th Cir. 2007) .............................................. 989, 1050
United States v. Mann, 592 F.3d 779 (7th Cir. 2010) .............................................. 1428
United States v. Mann, 884 F.2d 532 (10th Cir. 1989) .............................................. 1216
United States v. Mannava, 565 F.3d 412 (7th Cir. 2009) ............................................ 309, 1175
United States v. Manner, 887 F.2d 317 (D.C. Cir. 1989) ........................................... 679, 693

1870

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsslaw.com
United States v. Mannie, 509 F.3d 851 (7th Cir. 2007) ........................................................................................................ 1690
United States v. Manning, 23 F.3d 570 (1st Cir. 1994) .................................................................................................................. 302
United States v. Manning, 526 F.3d 611 (10th Cir. 2008) ........................................................................................................ 819
United States v. Manning, 79 F.3d 212 (1st Cir. 1996) .................................................................................................................. 1108
United States v. Mansoori, 304 F.3d 635 (7th Cir. 2002) ........................................................................................................ 1087
United States v. Manzella, 791 F.2d 1263 (7th Cir. 1986) ........................................................................................................ 432, 588
United States v. Manzo, 636 F.3d 56 (3rd Cir. 2011) .................................................................................................................. 988
United States v. Manzo, 675 F.3d 1204 (9th Cir. 2012) ........................................................................................................ 1292
United States v. Manzo-Jurado, 457 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 2006) ........................................................................................................ 1646
United States v. Mapelli, 971 F.2d 284 (9th Cir. 1992) .................................................................................................................. 1122
United States v. Maple, 348 F.3d 260 (D. C. Cir. 2003) .................................................................................................................. 1410, 1560, 1677
United States v. Marble, 940 F.2d 1543 (D.C.Cir. 1991) ........................................................................................................ 1045
United States v. Marcavage, 609 F.3d 264 (3rd Cir. 2010) ........................................................................................................ 879
United States v. Marcello, 876 F.2d 1147 (5th Cir. 1989) ........................................................................................................ 1359
United States v. March, 999 F.2d 456 (10th Cir. 1993) .................................................................................................................. 376
United States v. Marchini, 797 F.2d 759 (9th Cir. 1986) .................................................................................................................. 1338
United States v. Marguet-Pillado, 560 F.3d 1078 (9th Cir. 2009) ........................................................................................................ 756, 760
United States v. Mark, 795 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 2015) .................................................................................................................. 831
United States v. Markovic, 911 F.2d 613 (11th Cir. 1990) ........................................................................................................ 1245
United States v. Marquardt, 149 F.3d 36 (1st Cir. 1998) ........................................................................................................ 466, 549
United States v. Marsh, 144 F.3d 1229 (9th Cir. 1998) .................................................................................................................. 653, 1727, 1745
United States v. Marshall, 132 F.3d 63 (D.C. Cir. 1997) .................................................................................................................. 538
United States v. Marshall, 173 F.3d 1312 (11th Cir. 1999) ........................................................................................................ 683
United States v. Marshall, 669 F.3d 288 (D. C. Cir. 2012) ........................................................................................................ 1705
United States v. Marshall, 872 F.3d 213 (4th Cir. 2017) ........................................................................................................ 884, 890
United States v. Marshall, 986 F.2d 1171 (8th Cir. 1993) ........................................................................................................ 1562
United States v. Martiarena, 955 F.2d 363 (5th Cir. 1992) ........................................................................................................ 25
United States v. Martin, 4 F.3d 757 (9th Cir. 1993) ........................................................................................................ 433, 451
United States v. Martin, 426 F.3d 68 (2d Cir. 2005) ........................................................................................................ 1431, 1490
United States v. Martin, 544 F.3d 456 (2d Cir. 2008) ........................................................................................................ 595
United States v. Martinez, 122 F.3d 1161 (9th Cir. 1997) ........................................................................................................ 617
United States v. Martinez, 14 F.3d 543 (11th Cir. 1994) ........................................................................................................ 1083
United States v. Martinez, 277 F.3d 517 (4th Cir. 2002) ........................................................................................................ 952
United States v. Martinez, 462 F.3d 903 (8th Cir. 2006) ........................................................................................................ 350
United States v. Martinez, 486 F.3d 855 (5th Cir. 2007) ........................................................................................................ 1645
United States v. Martinez, 54 F.3d 1040 (2d Cir. 1995) ........................................................................................................ 584
United States v. Martinez, 588 F.3d 301 (6th Cir. 2009) ........................................................................................................ 762, 798
United States v. Martinez, 643 F.3d 1292 (10th Cir. 2011) ........................................................................................................ 1473, 1496
United States v. Martinez, 800 F.3d 1293 (11th Cir. 2015) ........................................................................................................ 1230, 1737
United States v. Martinez, 83 F.3d 371 (11th Cir. 1996) ........................................................................................................ 456
United States v. Martinez, 850 F.3d 1097 (9th Cir. 2017) ........................................................................................................ 515, 1097
United States v. Martinez, 972 F.2d 1100 (9th Cir. 1992) ........................................................................................................ 375
United States v. Martinez-Molina, 64 F.3d 719 (1st Cir. 1995) ........................................................................................................ 979
United States v. Martinez-Rios, 595 F.3d 581 (5th Cir. 2010) ........................................................................................................ 414

1871

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. McCormack, 371 F.3d 22 (1st Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 990
United States v. McCoy, 410 F.3d 124 (3rd Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 146
United States v. McCraney, 674 F.3d 614 (6th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1405, 1540
United States v. McCraw, 920 F.2d 224 (4th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1447, 1478
United States v. McCray, 849 F.2d 304 (8th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1308
United States v. McCreary-Redd, 475 F.3d 718 (6th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 957
United States v. McCullough, 348 F.3d 620 (7th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 865, 1160
United States v. McDermott, 64 F.3d 1448 (10th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 525
United States v. McDonald, 453 F.3d 958 (7th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1409
United States v. McDougal, 990 F.2d 224 (4th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1256
United States v. McDowell, 498 F.3d 308 (5th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 21, 1325
United States v. McElhinney, 275 F.3d 928 (10th Cir. 2001) ................................................................. 1107
United States v. McElmurry, 776 F.3d 1061 (9th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 667
United States v. McFall, 558 F.3d 951 (9th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 765, 989
United States v. McFerran, 163 F.3d 952 (6th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1186
United States v. McFerran, 163 F.3d 952 (6th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1189
United States v. McGarity, 669 F.3d 1218 (11th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1014, 1274
United States v. McGee, 408 F.3d 966 (7th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 498, 722
United States v. McGee, 529 F.3d 691 (6th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 415, 651
United States v. McGhee, 854 F.2d 905 (6th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1016
United States v. McGill, 618 F.3d 1273 (11th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 845
United States v. McGill, 754 F.3d 452 (7th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 611
United States v. McGough, 412 F.3d 1232 (11th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1421
United States v. McGowan, 274 F.3d 1251 (9th Cir. 2001) ................................................................. 802
United States v. McGrew, 122 F.3d 847 (9th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 1577
United States v. McHan, 345 F.3d 262 (4th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 893
United States v. McIntire, 516 F.3d 576 (7th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1381
United States v. McIntosh, 124 F.3d 1330 (10th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 17, 43, 218, 1026, 1114, 1254
United States v. McIntosh, 580 F.3d 1222 (11th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 563, 965
United States v. McIntosh, 857 F.2d 466 (8th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1385
United States v. McIntyre, 836 F.2d 467 (10th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 435
United States v. McIntyre, 997 F.2d 687 (10th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 758
United States v. McKee, 389 F.3d 697 (7th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 498
United States v. McKee, 506 F.3d 225 (3rd Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 1032, 1727
United States v. McKeighan, 685 F.3d 956 (10th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 65, 175
United States v. McKinley, 58 F.3d 1475 (10th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 525
United States v. McKinney, 120 F.3d 132 (8th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 31
United States v. McKinney, 758 F.2d 1036 (5th Cir. 1985) ................................................................. 924
United States v. McKnight, 671 F.3d 664 (7th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1156
United States v. McKoy, 428 F.3d 38 (1st Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1635
United States v. McKye, 734 F.3d 1104 (10th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 1126, 1681
United States v. McLain, 823 F.2d 1457 (11th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 79, 321, 1694
United States v. McLaughlin, 126 F.3d 130 (3rd Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 828, 943

1873

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. McLaughlin, 386 F.3d 547 (3rd Cir. 2004) ............................................. 1130
United States v. McLaurin, 57 F.3d 823 (9th Cir. 1995) ............................................. 545
United States v. McLean, 802 F.3d 1228 (11th Cir. 2015) ............................................. 264
United States v. McLeLLan, 792 F.3d 200 (1st Cir. 2015) ............................................. 1573
United States v. McLevain, 310 F.3d 434 (6th Cir. 2002) ............................................. 1583
United States v. McMullin, 576 F.3d 810 (8th Cir. 2009) ............................................. 1436
United States v. McMurray, 704 F.3d 502 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................. 1488
United States v. McNeil, 362 F.3d 570 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................. 821
United States v. McNeil, 911 F.2d 768 (D.C.Cir. 1990) ............................................. 1714
United States v. McPhearson, 469 F.3d 518 (6th Cir. 2006) ............................................. 1508, 1570
United States v. McQueen, 108 F.3d 64 (4th Cir. 1997) ............................................. 1303
United States v. McRae, 702 F.3d 806 (5th Cir. 2012) ............................................. 1690
United States v. McRae, 795 F.3d 471 (5th Cir. 2015) ............................................. 1271
United States v. McSwain, 29 F.3d 558 (10th Cir. 1994) ............................................. 1529, 1536, 1658, 1660
United States v. McTiernan, 546 F.3d 1160 (9th Cir. 2008) ............................................. 972
United States v. Meador, 138 F.3d 986 (5th Cir. 1998) ............................................. 1718
United States v. Medearis, 380 F.3d 1049 (8th Cir. 2004) ............................................. 537
United States v. Medina, 485 F.3d 1291 (11th Cir. 2007) ............................................. 985
United States v. Medina-Copete, 757 F.3d 1092 (10th Cir. 2014) ............................................. 796
United States v. Medina-Martinez, 396 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2005) ............................................. 1110
United States v. Medina-Silverio, 30 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1994) ............................................. 960
United States v. Medlin, 842 F.2d 1194 (10th Cir. 1988) ............................................. 1469, 1580
United States v. Medlock, 792 F.3d 700 (6th Cir. 2015) ............................................. 999
United States v. Meises, 645 F.3d 5 (1st Cir. 2011) ............................................. 411, 625, 733
United States v. Meister, 744 F.3d 1236 (11th Cir. 2013) ............................................. 207
United States v. Mejia, 356 F.3d 470 (2d Cir. 2004) ............................................. 517
United States v. Mejia, 545 F.3d 179 (2d Cir. 2008) ............................................. 414, 734, 798
United States v. Mejia, 69 F.3d 309 (9th Cir. 1995) ............................................. 474, 1554
United States v. Mejia-Lozano, 829 F.2d 268 (1st Cir. 1987) ............................................. 302
United States v. Melendez, 57 F.3d 238 (2d Cir. 1995) ............................................. 302
United States v. Melendez-Castro, 671 F.3d 950 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................. 1004
United States v. Melendez-Garcia, 28 F.3d 1046 (10th Cir. 1994) ............................................. 1661
United States v. Melendez-Rivas, 566 F.3d 41 (1st Cir. 2009) ............................................. 1069
United States v. Melrose East Subdivision, 357 F.3d 493 (5th Cir. 2004) ............................................. 887, 908
United States v. Melton, 344 F.3d 1021 (9th Cir. 2003) ............................................. 847
United States v. Melvin, 730 F.3d 29 (1st Cir. 2013) ............................................. 832
United States v. Mena, 863 F.2d 1522 (11th Cir. 1989) ............................................. 1627
United States v. Menchaca-Castruita, 587 F.3d 283 (5th Cir. 2009) ............................................. 1473
United States v. Mendez, 102 F.3d 126 (5th Cir. 1996) ............................................. 1100
United States v. Mendez, 117 F.3d 480 (11th Cir. 1997) ............................................. 1161
United States v. Mendez, 528 F.3d 811 (11th Cir. 2008) ............................................. 444
United States v. Mendonsa, 98 F.2d 366 (9th Cir. 1939) ............................................. 1566
United States v. Mendoza, 157 F.3d 730 (9th Cir. 1998) ............................................. 1199

1874
United States v. Miller, 738 F.3d 361 (D.C. Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 732, 1067, 1074, 1097
United States v. Miller, 767 F.3d 585 (6th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 984
United States v. Miller, 821 F.2d 546 (11th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1538, 1628
United States v. Miller, 874 F.2d 1255 (9th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 1318
United States v. Mills, 138 F.3d 928 (11th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 489, 703
United States v. Mills, 140 F.3d 630 (6th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 268
United States v. Mills, 29 F.3d 545 (10th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 412, 1033
United States v. Mills, 412 F.3d 325 (2d Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 370
United States v. Milovanovic, 678 F.3d 713 (9th Cir. 2012) (en banc) ....................................... 1225
United States v. Milstein, 401 F.3d 53 (2d Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1033
United States v. Milwitt, 475 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2007) ............................................................... 218
United States v. Mins, 92 F.3d 461 (7th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 431
United States v. Ming He, 94 F.3d 782 (2d Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 183
United States v. Minore, 292 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 2002) ............................................................... 958
United States v. Minsky, 963 F.2d 870 (6th Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 247
United States v. Mir, 525 F.3d 351 (4th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 370
United States v. Miranda, 835 F.2d 830 (11th Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 1714
United States v. Miranda-Enriquez, 941 F.2d 1081 (10th Cir. 1991) ........................................... 1416
United States v. Miranda-Lopez, 532 F.3d 1034 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................. 1000
United States v. Mitchell, 1 F.3d 235 (4th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 320
United States v. Mitchell, 113 F.3d 1528 (10th Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 730
United States v. Mitchell, 136 F.3d 1192 (8th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 1300
United States v. Mitchell, 145 F.3d 572 (3rd Cir. 1998) ........................................................... 752, 753, 763
United States v. Mitchell, 365 F.3d 215 (3rd Cir. 2004) ............................................................ 738, 801, 842
United States v. Mitchell, 476 F.3d 539 (8th Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 218
United States v. Mitchell, 518 F.3d 230 (4th Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 1001
United States v. Mitchell, 565 F.3d 1347 (11th Cir. 2009) ......................................................... 1429, 1587
United States v. Mitchell, 996 F.2d 419 (D.C.Cir. 1993) ............................................................ 804
United States v. Mitcheltree, 940 F.2d 1329 (10th Cir. 1991) .................................................... 377
United States v. Mittel-Carey, 493 F.3d 36 (1st Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 350
United States v. Mix, 791 F.3d 603 (5th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1074
United States v. Mize, 814 F.3d 401 (6th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 448, 1031
United States v. Mkhian, 5 F.3d 1306 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 618
United States v. Mohamed, 759 F.3d 798 (7th Cir. 2014) .......................................................... 286
United States v. Mohammad, 863 F.3d 885 (D.C. Cir. 2017) ..................................................... 122
United States v. Mohawk, 20 F.3d 1480 (9th Cir. 1994) ............................................................ 198
United States v. Molina-Gomez, 781 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2015) ...................................................... 347
United States v. Molina-Guevara, 96 F.3d 698 (3rd Cir. 1996) ................................................... 291, 303, 538
United States v. Molinaro, 11 F.3d 853 (9th Cir. 1993) ............................................................... 1028
United States v. Molina-Solorio, 577 F.3d 300 (5th Cir. 2009) .................................................... 1700
United States v. Mollica, 849 F.2d 723 (2d Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 1035
United States v. Moncier, 571 F.3d 593 (6th Cir. 2009) ............................................................. 462
United States v. Mondragon, 52 F.3d 291 (10th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 1756
United States v. Monghur, 588 F.3d 975 (9th Cir. 2009) ............................................................ 1453, 1483

1876
United States v. Monie, 858 F.3d 1029 (6th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 948
United States v. Monroe, 943 F.2d 1007 (9th Cir. 1991) ............................................................. 1258
United States v. Monsanto, 491 U.S. 600 (1989) ........................................................................ 884
United States v. Monsanto, 924 F.2d 1186 (2d Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 887, 888, 894, 908
United States v. Monsisvais, 907 F.2d 987 (10th Cir. 1990) ....................................................... 1416, 1653
United States v. Monsivais, 848 F.3d 353 (5th Cir. 2017) ......................................................... 1632, 1639, 1663
United States v. Montana, 958 F.2d 516 (2d Cir. 1992) .............................................................. 359, 382
United States v. Montanez, 105 F.3d 36 (1st Cir. 1997) ............................................................ 614
United States v. Montano, 398 F.3d 1276 (11th Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 873
United States v. Monteiro, 447 F.3d 39 (1st Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 1647
United States v. Monteleone, 77 F.3d 1086 (8th Cir. 1996) ...................................................... 281, 500
United States v. Montelongo, 420 F.3d 1169 (10th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 486, 706
United States v. Montford, 27 F.3d 137 (5th Cir. 1994) ............................................................... 920, 1739
United States v. Montgomery, 100 F.3d 1404 (8th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 644
United States v. Montgomery, 150 F.3d 983 (9th Cir. 1998) ..................................................... 996
United States v. Montgomery, 384 F.3d 1050 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................... 1337
United States v. Montgomery, 747 F.3d 303 (5th Cir. 2014) .................................................... 1143
United States v. Montilla, 928 F.2d 583 (2d Cir. 1991) ............................................................. 1669
United States v. Montilla-Rivera, 115 F.3d 1060 (1st Cir. 1997) ................................................. 1265
United States v. Montoya, 827 F.2d 143 (7th Cir. 1987) ............................................................. 657
United States v. Montoya, 945 F.2d 1068 (9th Cir. 1991) ............................................................ 992
United States v. Montoya-Gaxiola, 796 F.3d 1118 (9th Cir. 2015) ............................................. 862, 1125, 1150
United States v. Monzon, 429 F.3d 1268 (9th Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 958
United States v. Moody, 903 F.2d 321 (5th Cir. 1990) ............................................................... 776
United States v. Mooney, 497 F.3d 397 (4th Cir. 2007) .............................................................. 114, 855
United States v. Moore, 104 F.3d 377 (D.C. Cir. 1997) .............................................................. 1334
United States v. Moore, 159 F.3d 1154 (9th Cir. 1998) .............................................................. 71
United States v. Moore, 375 F.3d 259 (3rd Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 312, 702
United States v. Moore, 423 U.S. 122 (1975) .............................................................................. 574
United States v. Moore, 504 F.3d 1345 (11th Cir. 2007) ........................................................... 41, 1243, 1734
United States v. Moore, 651 F.3d 30 (D.C. Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 624
United States v. Moore, 651 F.3d 30 (D.C. Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 411
United States v. Moore, 709 F.3d 287 (4th Cir. 2013) ............................................................... 697, 1264
United States v. Moore, 91 F.3d 96 (10th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1566
United States v. Moore, 916 F.2d 1131 (6th Cir. 1990) ............................................................. 1306
United States v. Moore, 949 F.2d 68 (2d Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 257
United States v. Mora, 821 F.2d 860 (1st Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1755
United States v. Morales Heredia, 768 F.3d 1220 (9th Cir. 2014) ............................................. 1291
United States v. Morales, 108 F.3d 1031 (9th Cir. 1997) .......................................................... 644, 794
United States v. Morales, 801 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1695
United States v. Morales, 847 F.2d 671 (11th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 1627
United States v. Morales-Madera, 352 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2003) .................................................. 1741
United States v. Morales-Quinones, 812 F.2d 604 (10th Cir. 1987) ............................................ 493, 723
United States v. Morales-Rosales, 838 F.2d 1359 (5th Cir. 1988) ............................................ 1016
United States v. Morales-Zamora, 974 F.2d 149 (10th Cir. 1992) ............................................ 1610

1877
United States v. Moran, 493 F.3d 1002 (9th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 17, 661, 672
United States v. Moran, 998 F.2d 1368 (6th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1712
United States v. Moran-Toala, 726 F.3d 334 (2d Cir. 2013) ................................................. 1140
United States v. Moreland, 622 F.3d 1147 (9th Cir. 2007) ................................................. 497
United States v. Moreland, 622 F.3d 1147 (9th Cir. 2010) ................................................. 1249
United States v. Moreland, 665 F.3d 137 (5th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1322
United States v. Morena, 547 F.3d 191 (3rd Cir. 2008) .................................................. 699
United States v. Morena, 809 F.3d 766 (3rd Cir. 2016) .................................................. 740, 964
United States v. Morena, 891 F.2d 247 (9th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 396
United States v. Morena, 94 F.3d 1453 (10th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 742
United States v. Moreno-Chaparro, 180 F.3d 629 (5th Cir. 1998) ...................................... 1414, 1511
United States v. Moreno-Hinojosa, 804 F.2d 845 (5th Cir. 1986) ...................................... 587
United States v. Morfin, 151 F.3d 1149 (9th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 458
United States v. Morgan Vargas, 376 F.3d 112 (2d Cir. 2004) ......................................... 1613
United States v. Morgan, 113 F.3d 85 (7th Cir. 1997) .................................................. 315
United States v. Morgan, 393 F.3d 192 (D.C. Cir. 2005) .................................................. 1734, 1745
United States v. Morgan, 786 F.3d 227 (2d Cir. 2015) .................................................. 667, 1774
United States v. Morillo, 158 F.3d 18 (1st Cir. 1998) .................................................. 426
United States v. Morin, 627 F.3d 985 (5th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 797
United States v. Morris, 20 F.3d 1111 (11th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 17, 1138, 1139, 1244, 1729
United States v. Morris, 470 F.3d 596 (6th Cir. 2006) .................................................. 115, 972
United States v. Morris, 498 F.3d 634 (7th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 259
United States v. Morris, 79 F.3d 409 (5th Cir. 1996) .................................................. 544, 677
United States v. Morris, 836 F.2d 1371 (D.C. Cir. 1988) .................................................. 438
United States v. Morris, 988 F.2d 1335 (4th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1338
United States v. Morrison, 415 F.3d 1180 (10th Cir. 2005) ............................................. 327
United States v. Morrison, 535 F.2d 223 (3rd Cir. 1976) .................................................. 1771
United States v. Mortimer, 161 F.3d 240 (3rd Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1071
United States v. Moscahlaidis, 868 F.2d 1357 (3rd Cir. 1989) ........................................... 1303
United States v. Moscony, 927 F.2d 742 (3rd Cir. 1991) .................................................. 75
United States v. Moses, 137 F.3d 894 (6th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 405
United States v. Moskovits, 86 F.3d 1303 (3rd Cir. 1996) ................................................. 196
United States v. Moslavac, 779 F.3d 661 (7th Cir. 2015) ................................................. 1342
United States v. Mosley, 454 F.3d 249 (3rd Cir. 2006) ................................................. 1408, 1484, 1497, 1624, 1647
United States v. Mosley, 505 F.3d 804 (8th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 1293
United States v. Most, 876 F.2d 191 (D.C. Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1365, 1486
United States v. Mota, 982 F.2d 1384 (9th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1543
United States v. Mottweiler, 82 F.3d 769 (7th Cir. 1996) ................................................. 469
United States v. Mount, 161 F.3d 675 (11th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 875
United States v. Mousavi, 604 F.3d 1084 (9th Cir. 2010) ................................................. 1144
United States v. Moussaoui, 365 F.3d 292 (4th Cir. 2004) ................................................. 335, 638
United States v. Moussaoui, 382 F.3d 453 (4th Cir. 2004) ................................................. 335, 638, 1759
United States v. Mowatt, 513 F.3d 395 (4th Cir 2008) .................................................. 1474
United States v. Mueller, 74 F.3d 1152 (11th Cir. 1996) ................................................. 215

1878

DONALD F. SAMUEL - GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA - 404-262-2225 - dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Neal, 27 F.3d 1035 (5th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 1692
United States v. Neal, 36 F.3d 1190 (1st Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 1057
United States v. Neal, 679 F.3d 737 (8th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 324
United States v. Neapolitan, 791 F.2d 489 (7th Cir. 1986) ............................................... 1359
United States v. Needham, 718 F.3d 1190 (9th Cir. 2013) ................................................. 1425, 1596
United States v. Neely, 345 F.3d 366 (5th Cir. 2003) ............................................................. 1485, 1617
United States v. Neely, 564 F.3d 346 (4th Cir. 2009) .......................................................... 1436
United States v. Neff, 681 F.3d 1134 (10th Cir. 2012) .......................................................... 1525
United States v. Negron-Sostre, 790 F.3d 295 (1st Cir. 2015) ........................................... 1346
United States v. Neilson, 415 F.3d 1195 (10th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 1565
United States v. Nelson, 27 F.3d 199 (6th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 1134
United States v. Nelson, 277 F.3d 164 (2d Cir. 2002) .......................................................... 1188, 1198
United States v. Nelson, 36 F.3d 758 (8th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 1468
United States v. Nelson, 725 F.3d 615 (6th Cir. 2013) .......................................................... 650
United States v. Nelson, 732 F.3d 504 (5th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 160, 711
United States v. Nelson, 837 F.2d 1519 (11th Cir. 1988) ..................................................... 1313
United States v. Nelson, 852 F.2d 706 (3rd Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 490, 1277
United States v. Nelson, 868 F.3d 885 (10th Cir. 2017) ....................................................... 1611
United States v. Nerber, 222 F.3d 597 (9th Cir. 2000) ......................................................... 1483, 1754
United States v. Ness, 565 F.3d 73 (2d Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 1250
United States v. Nevarez-Castro, 120 F.3d 190 (9th Cir. 1997) ........................................... 328
United States v. Newbert, 504 F.3d 180 (1st Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 711, 972
United States v. Newcomb, 6 F.3d 1129 (6th Cir. 1993) ...................................................... 1115
United States v. Newell, 315 F.3d 510 (5th Cir. 2002) ......................................................... 71
United States v. Newell, 658 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2011) .............................................................. 1021, 1102, 1175
United States v. Newhofff, 627 F.3d 1163 (9th Cir. 2010) ..................................................... 1097
United States v. Newman, 773 F.3d 438 (2d Cir. 2014) ...................................................... 1681
United States v. Newman, 805 F.3d 1143 (D.C. Cir. 2015) .................................................. 111
United States v. Newman, 849 F.2d 156 (5th Cir. 1988) .................................................... 616, 793
United States v. Newman, 943 F.2d 1155 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................... 1333
United States v. Newsom, 452 F.3d 593 (6th Cir. 2006) ...................................................... 672, 684
United States v. Newton, 369 F.3d 659 (2d Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 351
United States v. Newton, 44 F.3d 913 (11th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 435, 1259
United States v. Nguyen, 465 F.3d 1128 (9th Cir. 2006) ....................................................... 711
United States v. Nguyen, 73 F.3d 887 (9th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 1009, 1134, 1154
United States v. Nicely, 922 F.2d 850 (D.C.Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 1688
United States v. Nicholson, 144 F.3d 632 (10th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1364, 1677
United States v. Nicholson, 475 F.3d 241 (4th Cir. 2007) .................................................... 67
United States v. Nicholson, 611 F.3d 191 (4th Cir. 2010) .................................................... 67
United States v. Nicholson, 721 F.3d 1236 (10th Cir. 2013) ............................................... 1386, 1504, 1524
United States v. Nickl, 427 F.3d 1286 (10th Cir. 2005) ....................................................... 716, 1070, 1130
United States v. Nickle, 816 F.3d 1230 (9th Cir. 2016) ....................................................... 482, 955, 963
United States v. Nielsen, 9 F.3d 1487 (10th Cir. 1993) ....................................................... 1412
United States v. Nieves-Castanos, 480 F.3d 597 (1st Cir. 2007) ........................................... 863
United States v. Nkansah, 699 F.3d 743 (2d Cir. 2012) ....................................................... 212

1880

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Ocasio-Ruiz, 779 F.3d 43 (1st Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 768
United States v. Ochoa, 861 F.3d 1010 (9th Cir. 2017) ................................................................. 1002
United States v. Ochoa-Gonzalez, 598 F.3d 1033 (8th Cir. 2010) ............................................. 1000
United States v. Ochoa-Vasquez, 428 F.3d 1015 (11th Cir. 2005) ....................................... 1348
United States v. Odedo, 154 F.3d 937 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 959
United States v. Odeh, 815 F.3d 968 (6th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 788
United States v. Odeneal, 517 F.3d 406 (6th Cir. 2008) .............................................................. 1186
United States v. Ofchinick, 877 F.2d 251 (3rd Cir. 1989) ........................................................... 1360
United States v. Ofray-Campos, 534 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2008) .................................................... 1097
United States v. Ogando, 547 F.3d 102 (2d Cir. 2008) .............................................................. 422
United States v. Ogbeahi, 18 F.3d 807 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1058
United States v. Ogbug, 982 F.2d 1000 (6th Cir. 1993) .............................................................. 1478
United States v. Ogles, 440 F.3d 1095 (9th Cir. 2006) .............................................................. 554
United States v. Ohayon, 483 F.3d 1281 (11th Cir. 2007) ........................................................... 543
United States v. Ojebode, 957 F.2d 1218 (5th Cir. 1992) ........................................................... 1121, 1147
United States v. Ojeda Rios, 495 U.S. 257 (1990) ................................................................. 1752
United States v. Okatan, 728 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 2013) .............................................................. 379, 825
United States v. Olesen, 920 F.2d 538 (8th Cir. 1990) .............................................................. 1307
United States v. Olivares-Pacheco, 633 F.3d 399 (5th Cir. 2011) ........................................ 1526
United States v. Olivares-Rangel, 458 F.3d 1104 (10th Cir. 2006) .......................................... 336, 1484, 1497, 1623
United States v. Oliver, 630 F.3d 397 (5th Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 1590
United States v. Ollie, 442 F.3d 1135 (8th Cir. 2006) .............................................................. 340, 350
United States v. Ollivierre, 378 F.3d 412 (4th Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 312
United States v. Olmeida, 461 F.3d 271 (2d Cir. 2006) ............................................................... 564
United States v. Olsen, 737 F.3d 625 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................................... 224
United States v. Olsowry, 836 F.2d 439 (9th Cir. 1987) ............................................................ 1029
United States v. Oluwanisola, 605 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2010) ....................................................... 711, 833
United States v. Olvera, 30 F.3d 1195 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 998
United States v. Omar, 104 F.3d 519 (1st Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 766
United States v. Omer, 395 F.3d 1087 (9th Cir. 2005) .............................................................. 214, 1015
United States v. Omoruyi, 7 F.3d 880 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1193
United States v. One 1973 Rolls Royce, 43 F.3d 794 (3rd Cir. 1994) ........................................ 888
United States v. One Parcel of Real Estate at 136 Plantation Drive, Tavernier, Fla., 911 F.2d 1525 (11th Cir. 1990) ........................................................................................................... 1312
United States v. One Piece of Property at 5800 SW 74th Ave, Miami, Fla., 363 F.3d 1099 (11th Cir. 2004) ....................................................................................................................... 902
United States v. Ongaga, 820 F.3d 152 (5th Cir. 2016) .............................................................. 1715
United States v. Onick, 889 F.2d 1425 (5th Cir. 1989) ............................................................... 587
United States v. Onumonu, 967 F.2d 782 (2d Cir. 1992) ........................................................... 642, 793
United States v. Onyesoh, 674 F.3d 1157 (9th Cir. 2012) .......................................................... 1000
United States v. Opedahl, 930 F.2d 1530 (11th Cir. 1991) ..................................................... 1116
United States v. Orellana, 405 F.3d 360 (5th Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 860, 1007
United States v. Oriedo, 498 F.3d 593 (7th Cir. 2007) ............................................................... 734
United States v. Orona-Ibarra, 831 F.3d 867 (7th Cir. 2016) ....................................................... 1002, 1743

1882

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Oros, 578 F.3d 703 (7th Cir. 2009) .................................................. 625
United States v. Orozco, 858 F.3d 1204 (9th Cir. 2017) ........................................ 1367, 1389, 1521, 1559
United States v. ORS, Inc., 997 F.2d 628 (9th Cir. 1993) .......................................... 1016
United States v. Ortega Reyna, 148 F.3d 540 (5th Cir. 1998) ..................................... 583
United States v. Ortega, 854 F.3d 818 (5th Cir. 2017) ............................................. 1487
United States v. Ortega-Ascanio, 376 F.3d 879 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................... 973
United States v. Ortega-Mena, 949 F.2d 156 (5th Cir. 1991) .................................... 1711
United States v. Ortiz, 474 F.3d 976 (7th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 700
United States v. Ortiz, 687 F.3d 660 (5th Cir. 2012) .................................................. 1704
United States v. Ortiz, 943 F.3d 447, 456 (S.D.N.Y. 2013) ........................................ 391
United States v. Ortiz-Garcia, 665 F.3d 279 (1st Cir. 2011) ....................................... 48, 949
United States v. Ortiz-Hernandez, 427 F.3d 567 (9th Cir. 2005) ......................... 1498
United States v. Ortiz-Lopez, 385 F.3d 1202 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................... 1008
United States v. Ortiz-Loya, 777 F.2d 973 (5th Cir. 1985) .......................................... 865
United States v. Ortiz-Vega, 860 F.3d 20 (1st Cir. 2017) ........................................... 83
United States v. Osazuwa, 564 F.3d 1169 (9th Cir. 2009) ........................................... 497, 724
United States v. Osborne, 402 F.3d 626 (6th Cir. 2005) ........................................... 69
United States v. Osborne, 886 F.3d 604 (6th Cir. 2018) ........................................... 1733
United States v. Oseni, 996 F.2d 186 (7th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 558
United States v. Oshatz, 912 F.2d 534 (2d Cir. 1990) ................................................. 281
United States v. Osoria, 949 F.2d 38 (2d Cir. 1991) .................................................. 1626
United States v. Otero, 563 F.3d 1127 (10th Cir. 2009) .............................................. 1429
United States v. Otis, 872 F.3d 678 (5th Cir. 2017) .................................................... 795, 1118
United States v. Otis, 127 F.3d 829 (9th Cir. 1997) ..................................................... 475, 604
United States v. Ottaviano, 738 F.3d 586 (3rd Cir. 2013) ........................................... 1069
United States v. Otersburg, 76 F.3d 137 (7th Cir. 1996) ............................................ 1086
United States v. Ouimette, 798 F.2d 47 (2d Cir. 1986) ............................................... 1266
United States v. Ovalle, 136 F.3d 1092 (6th Cir. 1998) .............................................. 1091
United States v. Owens, 424 F.3d 649 (7th Cir. 2005) .............................................. 701
United States v. Owens, 484 U.S. 554 (1988) ............................................................ 400
United States v. Owens, 672 F.3d 966 (11th Cir. 2012) ............................................ 845
United States v. Owens, 697 F.3d 657 (7th Cir. 2012) .............................................. 265
United States v. Owens, 854 F.2d 432 (11th Cir. 1988) ............................................ 1045
United States v. Ozelik, 527 F.3d 88 (3rd Cir. 2008) ................................................. 1005
United States v. Pablo Varela-Rivera, 279 F.3d 1174 (9th Cir. 2002) ....................... 802
United States v. Pace, 922 F.2d 451 (8th Cir. 1990) .................................................. 589
United States v. Pacheco 434 F.3d 106 (1st Cir. 2006) .............................................. 1033
United States v. Pacheco-Lopez, 531 F.3d 420 (6th Cir. 2008) ................................. 340, 358
United States v. Packer, 15 F.3d 654 (7th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 1650
United States v. Padilla, 387 F.3d 1087 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................ 358
United States v. Padilla, 520 F.2d 526 (1st Cir. 1975) .............................................. 1483, 1754
United States v. Padilla-Colon, 578 F.3d 23 (1st Cir. 2009) ....................................... 49
United States v. Pagan-Romero, 894 F.3d 441 (1st Cir. 2018) ................................. 1073
United States v. Paguio, 114 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 1997) ............................................... 771

1883
United States v. Palacios, 844 F.3d 527 (5th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 963
United States v. Paladino, 769 F.3d 197 (3rd Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 964
United States v. Palanco, 145 F.3d 536 (2d Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1356
United States v. Palazzolo, 71 F.3d 1233 (6th Cir. 1995) .............................................................. 456, 1133
United States v. Palladino, 347 F.3d 29 (2d Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1299
United States v. Palma, 473 F.3d 899 (8th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 310
United States v. Palmer, 3 F.3d 300 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 726
United States v. Palmer, 456 F.3d 484 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 50, 872
United States v. Palmer, 956 F.2d 189 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 60
United States v. Palomba, 31 F.3d 1456 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 136, 1712
United States v. Palomino-Coronado, 805 F.3d 127 (4th Cir. 2015) ........................................... 1321
United States v. Palumbo, 897 F.2d 245 (7th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 836
United States v. Paniagua-Garcia, 813 F.3d 1013 (7th Cir. 2016) .................................................. 1522, 1640
United States v. Paniagua-Ramos, 135 F.3d 193 (1st Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1107
United States v. Pantelidis, 335 F.3d 226 (3rd Cir. 2003) .............................................................. 893, 1606
United States v. Paolello, 951 F.2d 537 (3rd Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 605
United States v. Pappadopoulos, 64 F.3d 522 (9th Cir. 1995) ...................................................... 1055
United States v. Parada-Talamantes, 32 F.3d 168 (5th Cir. 1994) ............................................... 677
United States v. Paradis, 351 F.3d 21 (1st Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1613
United States v. Paret-Ruiz, 567 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 422
United States v. Paris, 827 F.2d 395 (9th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 829
United States v. Parker, 373 F.3d 770 (6th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1510, 1567
United States v. Parker, 439 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 180, 190
United States v. Parker, 508 F.3d 434 (7th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 854, 1025
United States v. Parker, 73 F.3d 48 (5th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1353
United States v. Parker, 790 F.3d 550 (4th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 240
United States v. Parker, 839 F.2d 1473 (11th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 1217
United States v. Parkes, 497 F.3d 220 (2d Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 989, 1050
United States v. Parkes, 668 F.3d 295 (6th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 213, 307, 706
United States v. Parr, 545 F.3d 491 (7th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 671
United States v. Parr, 843 F.2d 1228 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1411, 1544
United States v. Parra-Ibanez, 951 F.2d 21 (1st Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 979
United States v. Parrett, 530 F.3d 422 (6th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 906
United States v. Parriett, 974 F.2d 523 (4th Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 785
United States v. Parse, 789 F.3d 83 (2d Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1074, 1195
United States v. Parsons, 141 F.3d 386 (1st Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 662
United States v. Partida-Parra, 859 F.2d 629 (9th Cir. 1988) ...................................................... 1309
United States v. Pasha, 797 F.3d 1122 (D.C. Cir. 2015) ............................................................ 223, 230
United States v. Pasquale, 25 F.3d 948 (10th Cir. 1994) ............................................................ 1713
United States v. Pasquantino, 336 F.3d 321 (4th Cir. 2003) ....................................................... 1212
United States v. Piatułka, 804 F.3d 684 (4th Cir. 2015) ............................................................... 1404, 1522, 1540
United States v. Patterson, 23 F.3d 1239 (7th Cir. 1994) ............................................................ 520
United States v. Patterson, 340 F.3d 368 (6th Cir. 2003) ............................................................ 1648
United States v. Patterson, 381 F.3d 859 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................................ 555, 973

1884

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
| United States v. Patton, 451 F.3d 615 (10th Cir. 2006) | 1050 |
| United States v. Patzer, 277 F.3d 1080 (9th Cir. 2002) | 337, 1447, 1532, 1542 |
| United States v. Paul, 110 F.3d 869 (2d Cir. 1997) | 604 |
| United States v. Paul, 142 F.3d 836 (5th Cir. 1998) | 575 |
| United States v. Paul, 561 F.3d 970 (9th Cir. 2009) | 1062 |
| United States v. Pauler, 857 F.3d 1073 (10th Cir. 2017) | 850 |
| United States v. Pavelko, 992 F.2d 32 (3rd Cir. 1993) | 184 |
| United States v. Paxson, 861 F.2d 730 (D.C. Cir. 1988) | 204 |
| United States v. Payne, 63 F.3d 1200 (2d Cir. 1995) | 254 |
| United States v. Payne, 923 F.2d 595 (8th Cir. 1991) | 274 |
| United States v. Payne, 978 F.2d 1177 (10th Cir. 1992) | 1719 |
| United States v. Payton, 573 F.3d 859 (9th Cir. 2009) | 1429, 1466 |
| United States v. Peak, 856 F.2d 825 (7th Cir. 1988) | 754 |
| United States v. Peak, 992 F.2d 39 (4th Cir. 1993) | 92 |
| United States v. Pearce, 912 F.2d 159 (6th Cir. 1990) | 431 |
| United States v. Pearlstein, 576 F.2d 531 (3rd Cir. 1978) | 1211 |
| United States v. Peay, 972 F.2d 71 (4th Cir. 1992) | 1353 |
| United States v. Peel, 595 F.3d 763 (7th Cir. 2010) | 563 |
| United States v. Peel, 837 F.2d 975 (11th Cir. 1988) | 1038 |
| United States v. Peglera, 33 F.3d 412 (4th Cir. 1994) | 1303 |
| United States v. Pelletier, 898 F.2d 297 (2d Cir. 1990) | 835 |
| United States v. Pelullo, 105 F.3d 117 (3rd Cir. 1997) | 228 |
| United States v. Pelullo, 14 F.3d 881 (3rd Cir. 1994) | 544, 1358, 1360 |
| United States v. Pelullo, 964 F.2d 193 (3rd Cir. 1992) | 656, 757 |
| United States v. Pena, 720 F.3d 561 (5th Cir. 2013) | 1315 |
| United States v. Pena, 897 F.2d 1075 (11th Cir. 1990) | 383, 1333 |
| United States v. Pena, 961 F.2d 333 (2d Cir. 1992) | 1485 |
| United States v. Pena, 983 F.2d 71 (6th Cir. 1993) | 587 |
| United States v. Penagos, 823 F.2d 346 (9th Cir. 1987) | 434 |
| United States v. Penaloza-Duarte, 473 F.3d 575 (5th Cir. 2006) | 22, 41, 580 |
| United States v. Pena-Montes, 589 F.3d 1048 (10th Cir. 2009) | 1407, 1507, 1527 |
| United States v. Pena-Saiz, 161 F.3d 1175 (8th Cir. 1998) | 1371 |
| United States v. Pendas-Martinez, 845 F.2d 938 (11th Cir. 1988) | 742 |
| United States v. Pendegraph, 791 F.2d 1462 (11th Cir. 1986) | 276 |
| United States v. Pendergraft, 297 F.3d 1198 (11th Cir. 2002) | 990, 1211 |
| United States v. Pennycooke, 65 F.3d 9 (3rd Cir. 1995) | 527 |
| United States v. Peoples, 698 F.3d 185 (4th Cir. 2012) | 461 |
| United States v. Peralez, 526 F.3d 1115 (8th Cir. 2008) | 1527 |
| United States v. Perdomo, 929 F.2d 967 (3rd Cir. 1991) | 246 |
| United States v. Perdue, 8 F.3d 1455 (10th Cir. 1993) | 351, 353, 396 |
| United States v. Perea-Rey, 680 F.3d 1179 (9th Cir. 2012) | 1461 |
| United States v. Pereira, 848 F.3d 17 (1st Cir. 2017) | 496 |
| United States v. Pereyra-Gabino, 563 F.3d 322 (8th Cir. 2009) | 1005, 1128 |
| United States v. Perez, 116 F.3d 840 (9th Cir. 1997) | 31, 1172 |
| United States v. Perez, 129 F.3d 1340 (9th Cir. 1997) | 876, 1170, 1748 |

1885
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Title</th>
<th>Citation</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perez</td>
<td>473 F.3d 1147 (11th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>1339</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perez</td>
<td>989 F.2d 1574 (10th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td>750</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perez-Garcia</td>
<td>904 F.2d 1534 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td>276</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perez-Lopez</td>
<td>348 F.3d 839 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>345</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perez-Melendez</td>
<td>599 F.3d 31 (1st Cir. 2010)</td>
<td>21, 579</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perlesta</td>
<td>842 F.2d 343 (D.C. Cir. 1988)</td>
<td>294</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perkins</td>
<td>F.3d --- (6th Cir. 2018)</td>
<td>1379</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perkins</td>
<td>348 F.3d 965 (11th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td>1531</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perkins</td>
<td>470 F.3d 150 (4th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>735</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perkins</td>
<td>850 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 2017)</td>
<td>1487</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perlaza</td>
<td>439 F.3d 1149 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perrotta</td>
<td>313 F.3d 33 (2d Cir. 2002)</td>
<td>991, 1052</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perry</td>
<td>857 F.2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1988)</td>
<td>939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Persico</td>
<td>832 F.2d 705 (2d Cir. 1987)</td>
<td>1358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Perez</td>
<td>871 F.2d 310 (3rd Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>615</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Pete</td>
<td>819 F.3d 1121 (9th Cir. 2016)</td>
<td>917</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peter Kiewit, Sons' Co.</td>
<td>655 F.Supp. 73 (D.Colo. 1986)</td>
<td>1759</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peters</td>
<td>15 F.3d 540 (6th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td>430, 587</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peters</td>
<td>153 F.3d 445 (7th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>1046, 1727</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peters</td>
<td>277 F.3d 963 (7th Cir. 2002)</td>
<td>1351</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peters</td>
<td>349 F.3d 842 (5th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td>518, 1079</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peterson</td>
<td>140 F.3d 819 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peterson</td>
<td>244 F.3d 385 (5th Cir. 2001)</td>
<td>1253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Petru</td>
<td>781 F.3d 438 (8th Cir. 2015)</td>
<td>277, 1272</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Pettigrew</td>
<td>77 F.3d 1500 (5th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td>1234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Peyton</td>
<td>745 F.3d 546 (D.C. Cir. 2014)</td>
<td>1452</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phaknikone</td>
<td>605 F.3d 1099 (11th Cir. 2010)</td>
<td>699</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Pharis</td>
<td>298 F.3d 228 (3rd Cir. 2002)</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Philibert</td>
<td>947 F.2d 1467 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>704</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phillips</td>
<td>219 F.3d 404 (5th Cir. 2000)</td>
<td>268</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phillips</td>
<td>583 F.3d 1261 (10th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>1274</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phillips</td>
<td>688 F.3d 802 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td>212, 1143</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phillips</td>
<td>704 F.3d 754 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td>1218</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phillips</td>
<td>731 F.3d 649 (7th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td>211, 634, 817</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phillips</td>
<td>812 F.2d 1355 (11th Cir. 1987)</td>
<td>1398</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Phipps</td>
<td>319 F.3d 177 (5th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td>875, 1026</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Piazza</td>
<td>647 F.3d 559 (5th Cir. 2011)</td>
<td>1264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Piccinonna</td>
<td>885 F.2d 1529 (11th Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>791, 1319</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Pickard</td>
<td>733 F.3d 1297 (10th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td>1347</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Pickering</td>
<td>794 F.3d 802 (7th Cir. 2015)</td>
<td>467</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Pickett</td>
<td>353 F.3d 62 (D. C. Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>821, 1015</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Pierre</td>
<td>120 F.3d 1153 (11th Cir. 1997)</td>
<td>981</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1886

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Pierre, 932 F.2d 377 (5th Cir. 1991) .................................................. 1678
United States v. Pietrantonio, 637 F.3d 865 (8th Cir. 2011) ........................................ 1021, 1696
United States v. Pieter-Giraldi, 864 F.2d 222 (1st Cir. 1988) ........................................ 1220
United States v. Pigrum, 922 F.2d 249 (5th Cir. 1991) .................................................. 586
United States v. Pillado, 656 F.3d 754 (7th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 578, 612
United States v. Pillado, 656 F.3d 754. (7th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1159
United States v. Pimental, 755 F.3d 1095 (9th Cir. 2014) ................................................ 387
United States v. Pina, 844 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 463
United States v. Pina, 974 F.2d 1241 (10th Cir. 1992) .................................................... 1037
United States v. Pinckney, 85 F.3d 4 (2d Cir. 1996) ....................................................... 1053
United States v. Pineda-Doval, 614 F.3d 1019 (9th Cir. 2010) ....................................... 636, 1261
United States v. Pino-Perez, 870 F.2d 1230 (7th Cir. 1989) ........................................... 25
United States v. Pinson, 860 F.3d 152 (4th Cir. 2017) .................................................... 264, 1355
United States v. Pitner, 307 F.3d 1178 (9th Cir. 2002) .................................................... 1708
United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983) ................................................................. 1671
United States v. Place, 462 U.S. 696 (1983) ................................................................. 1372, 1376, 1587, 1653
United States v. Platero, 72 F.3d 806 (10th Cir. 1995) .................................................... 492, 713
United States v. Plavca, 411 F.3d 655 (6th Cir. 2005) ..................................................... 530, 1275
United States v. Plummer, 941 F.2d 799 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................ 836
United States v. Podde, 105 F.3d 813 (2d Cir. 1997) ...................................................... 1719
United States v. Podell, 869 F.2d 328 (7th Cir. 1989) .................................................... 566, 1028
United States v. Poellnitz, 372 F.3d 562 (3rd Cir. 2004) .................................................. 1342
United States v. Poindexter, 492 F.3d 263 (4th Cir. 2007) ............................................... 87
United States v. Poindexter, 942 F.2d 354 (6th Cir. 1991) .............................................. 298, 643
United States v. Poindexter, 951 F.2d 369 (D.C. Cir. 1991) ........................................... 837
United States v. Polanco, 145 F.3d 536 (2d Cir. 1998) .................................................. 1357
United States v. Polasek, 162 F.3d 878 (5th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 319
United States v. Polichemi, 219 F.3d 698 (7th Cir. 1998) ............................................... 1198
United States v. Polk, 118 F.3d 286 (5th Cir. 1997) ....................................................... 865, 876
United States v. Polk, 56 F.3d 613 (5th Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 459, 586
United States v. Pollack, 91 F.3d 331 (2d Cir. 1996) ..................................................... 1302
United States v. Pollani, 146 F.3d 269 (5th Cir. 1998) .................................................... 182, 196
United States v. Pollock, 926 F.2d 1044 (11th Cir. 1991) ............................................. 1739
United States v. Polouizzi, 564 F.3d 142 (2d Cir. 2009) .................................................. 1024, 1169, 1324
United States v. Pomeroy, 822 F.2d 718 (8th Cir. 1987) .............................................. 1702
United States v. Ponds, 454 F.3d 313 (D.C. Cir. 2006) ................................................... 826, 834, 935
United States v. Ponec, 163 F.3d 486 (8th Cir. 1998) ..................................................... 214
United States v. Poole, 794 F.2d 462 (9th Cir. 1986) ..................................................... 383
United States v. Porter, 821 F.2d 968 (4th Cir. 1987) ..................................................... 1764
United States v. Porter, 994 F.2d 470 (8th Cir. 1993) ..................................................... 1287
United States v. Portillo-Aguirre, 311 F.3d 647 (5th Cir. 2002) ...................................... 1414, 1658
United States v. Posado, 57 F.3d 428 (5th Cir. 1995) .................................................... 1318
United States v. Posado-Rios, 158 F.3d 832 (5th Cir. 1998) ......................................... 1357
United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48 (1964) ................................................................. 1046
United States v. Powell, 628 F.3d 1254 (11th Cir. 2010) ............................................... 34

1887
United States v. Powell, 652 F.3d 702 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 689
United States v. Powell, 666 F.3d 180 (4th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1406, 1633
United States v. Powell, 732 F.3d 361 (5th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 271
United States v. Powell, 767 F.3d 1026 (10th Cir. 2014) .............................................................. 916
United States v. Powell, 894 F.2d 895 (7th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1028
United States v. Powers, 500 F.3d 500 (6th Cir 2007) ................................................................. 403, 652
United States v. Pratt, 815 F.3d 93 (2d Cir. 2016) ........................................................................ 19, 868
United States v. Pratt, 915 F.3d 246 (4th Cir. 2019) ................................................................. 1586
United States v. Prendergast, 979 F.2d 1289 (8th Cir. 1992) ..................................................... 1343
United States v. Prescott, 42 F.3d 1165 (8th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1022
United States v. Pressley, 100 F.3d 57 (7th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 519
United States v. Pressley, 359 F.3d 347 (4th Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 847
United States v. Preston, 751 F.3d 1008 (9th Cir. 2014) (en banc) ............................................ 391
United States v. Price, 134 F.3d 340 (6th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 769
United States v. Price, 566 F.3d 900 (9th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 225
United States v. Prideaux-Wentz, 543 F.3d 954 (7th Cir. 2008) ................................................. 1619
United States v. Pridgen, 518 F.3d 87 (1st Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 728
United States v. Pritchett, 908 F.2d 816 (11th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 1729
United States v. Proctor, 489 F.3d 1348 (D.C. Cir. 2007) ........................................................... 1560
United States v. Prokuper, 632 F.3d 460 (8th Cir. 2011) ............................................................. 1526
United States v. Pruett, 523 F.3d 863 (8th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 871
United States v. Pryce, 938 F.2d 1343 (D.C.Cir. 1991) ............................................................... 495
United States v. Puche, 350 F.3d 1137 (11th Cir. 2003) ............................................................... 914
United States v. Pugh, 405 F.3d 390 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 416, 652
United States v. Puglisi, 723 F.2d 779 (11th Cir. 1984) ............................................................... 1372, 1587
United States v. Puig-Infante, 19 F.3d 929 (5th Cir. 1994) ...................................................... 1256
United States v. Pulgar, 789 F.3d 807 (7th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 439
United States v. Pulido, 879 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir. 1989) ............................................................... 1741
United States v. Pulley, 922 F.2d 1283 (6th Cir. 1991) ............................................................... 1685
United States v. Pulungan, 569 F.3d 326 (7th Cir. 2009) ............................................................ 1243
United States v. Punn, 737 F.3d 1 (2d Cir. 2013) ..................................................................... 946
United States v. Pupo, 841 F.2d 1235 (4th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1016
United States v. Purcell, 236 F.3d 1274 (11th Cir. 2001) ............................................................ 1531
United States v. Purcell, 526 F.3d 953 (6th Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 1453, 1474
United States v. Purnett, 910 F.2d 51 (2d Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 329
United States v. Puryear, 940 F.2d 602 (10th Cir. 1991) ............................................................. 591
United States v. Qin, 688 F.3d 257 (6th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 697
United States v. Quach, 302 F.3d 1096 (9th Cir. 2002) .............................................................. 1299
United States v. Quaempts, 411 F.3d 1046 (9th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 1384
United States v. Qualls, 172 F.3d 1136 (9th Cir. 1999) ............................................................. 602, 620
United States v. Quattrone, 402 F.3d 304 (2d Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 1348
United States v. Quattrone, 441 F.3d 153 (2d Cir. 2006) ......................................................... 673, 1062, 1275
United States v. Quiala, 19 F.3d 569 (11th Cir. 1994) ............................................................... 560
United States v. Quigley, 53 F.3d 909 (8th Cir. 1995) ............................................................... 1054
United States v. Quigley, 890 F.2d 1019 (8th Cir. 1989) ............................................................. 803

1888

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Quinn, 728 F.3d 243 (3rd Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 839
United States v. Quinney, 583 F.3d 891 (6th Cir. 2009) ................................................................ 1549
United States v. Quinones, 97 F.3d 473 (11th Cir. 1996) .............................................................. 962
United States v. Quintanar, 150 F.3d 902 (8th Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 583
United States v. Quintero, 38 F.3d 1317 (3rd Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1755
United States v. Rabhan, 628 F.3d 200 (5th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 449, 562
United States v. Raborn, 872 F.2d 589 (5th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 362
United States v. Radka, 904 F.2d 357 (6th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1479
United States v. Radomski, 473 F.3d 728 (7th Cir 2007) ............................................................... 423
United States v. Ragan, 24 F.3d 657 (5th Cir. 1994) ...................................................................... 1214
United States v. Ragin, 820 F.3d 609 (4th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 138
United States v. Rahm, 993 F.2d 1405 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 645, 794
United States v. Rahman, 805 F.3d 822 (7th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 816, 1367, 1434
United States v. Rakes, 136 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 1998) ....................................................................... 165, 1337
United States v. Rambo, 365 F.3d 906 (10th Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 381
United States v. Ramirez-Rangel, 103 F.3d 1501 (9th Cir. 1996) ............................................... 617
United States v. Ramirez, 297 F.3d 185 (2d Cir. 2002) ............................................................... 1203
United States v. Ramirez, 420 F.3d 134 (2d Cir. 2005) ............................................................... 1744
United States v. Ramirez, 609 F.3d 495 (2d Cir. 2010) ............................................................... 721
United States v. Ramirez, 676 F.3d 755 (8th Cir. 2012) ............................................................... 1472
United States v. Ramirez, 788 F.3d 732 (7th Cir. 2015) ............................................................... 1704
United States v. Ramirez, 880 F.2d 236 (9th Cir. 1989) ............................................................... 434
United States v. Ramirez, 884 F.2d 1524 (1st Cir. 1989) ............................................................. 556
United States v. Ramirez, 973 F.2d 102 (2d Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 319
United States v. Ramirez, 973 F.2d 36 (1st Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 1709
United States v. Ramirez-Castillo, 748 F.3d 205 (4th Cir. 2014) .............................................. 1747
United States v. Ramirez-Encarnacion, 291 F.3d 1219 (10th Cir. 2002) .................................. 1756
United States v. Ramirez-Estrada, 749 F.3d 1129 (9th Cir. 2014) .............................................. 355
United States v. Ramirez-Fuentes, 12-1494 (7th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 797
United States v. Ramirez-Fuentes, 703 F.3d 1038 (7th Cir. 2013) ............................................. 669
United States v. Ramirez-Rivera, 800 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2015) ..................................................... 1494, 1503, 1556, 1594
United States v. Ramirez-Robles, 386 F.3d 1234 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................. 691
United States v. Ramirez-Sandoval, 872 F.2d 1392 (9th Cir. 1989) ........................................... 1499
United States v. Ramirez-Velasquez, 322 F.3d 868 (5th Cir. 2003) ........................................... 802
United States v. Ramos, 12 F.3d 1019 (11th Cir. 1994) ............................................................... 1365
United States v. Ramos, 45 F.3d 1519 (11th Cir. 1995) ............................................................... 528
United States v. Ramos, 537 F.3d 439 (5th Cir. 2008) ............................................................... 1275
United States v. Ramos, 852 F.3d 747 (8th Cir. 2017) ............................................................... 850
United States v. Ramos, 923 F.2d 1346 (9th Cir. 1991) ............................................................... 1572
United States v. Ramos-Caraballo, 375 F.3d 797 (8th Cir. 2004) ............................................. 666, 728
United States v. Ramos-Gonzalez, 664 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2011) .................................................... 411
United States v. Ramos-Oseguera, 120 F.3d 1028 (9th Cir. 1997) ............................................. 1338, 1411, 1562
United States v. Ramos-Rascon, 8 F.3d 704 (9th Cir. 1993) ..................................................... 433, 589

1889
United States v. Ramsey, 992 F.2d 301 (11th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 360, 383
United States v. Randolph, 794 F.3d 602 (6th Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 420, 453, 1140, 1747
United States v. Raney, 633 F.3d 385 (5th Cir. 2011) .......................................................... 300, 1526
United States v. Rangel-Portillo, 586 F.3d 376 (5th Cir. 2009) .............................................. 1413
United States v. Rangolan, 464 F.3d 321 (2d Cir. 2006) ........................................................... 468
United States v. Rantz, 862 F.2d 808 (10th Cir. 1988) ............................................................... 188
United States v. Rapone, 131 F.3d 188 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ........................................................... 469
United States v. Ratcliff, 488 F.3d 639 (5th Cir. 2007) .............................................................. 1210
United States v. Ravel, 930 F.2d 721 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 1028
United States v. Rawlings, 341 F.3d 657 (7th Cir. 2003) .......................................................... 458, 858
United States v. Rawlings, 73 F.3d 1145 (D.C.Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 1135
United States v. Ray, 578 F.3d 184 (2d Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 1700
United States v. Ray, 803 F.3d 244 (6th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 338
United States v. Raya-Vaca, 771 F.3d 1195 (9th Cir. 2014) ...................................................... 1003
United States v. Rayburn House Office Building, Room 2113, 497 F.3d 654 (D.C. Cir. 2007) 1698
United States v. Raymonda, 780 F.3d 105 (2d Cir. 2015) ............................................................ 1424, 1595
United States v. Razmilovic, 419 F.3d 134 (2d Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 892
United States v. Razmilovic, 507 F.3d 130 (2nd Cir. 2007) ....................................................... 553
United States v. Rea-Beltran, 457 F.3d 695 (7th Cir. 2006) ...................................................... 966
United States v. Real Prop. Located at 17 Coon Creek Road, 787 F.3d 968 (9th Cir. 2015) .... 899
United States v. Real Property Located at 3234 Washington Ave. North, Minneapolis, 480 F.3d 841 (8th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 913
United States v. Reasor, 418 F.3d 466 (5th Cir. 2005) .............................................................. 958, 1051
United States v. Reaves, 512 F.3d 123 (4th Cir. 2008) .............................................................. 1645
United States v. Redcorn, 528 F.3d 727 (10th Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 1219
United States v. Reece, 60 F.3d 660 (9th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 618
United States v. Reece, 86 F.3d 994 (10th Cir. 1996) ............................................................... 590
United States v. Reed, 147 F.3d 1178 (9th Cir. 1998) .............................................................. 1103
United States v. Reed, 15 F.3d 928 (9th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1592
United States v. Reed, 349 F.3d 457 (7th Cir. 2003) ............................................................... 337
United States v. Reed, 719 F.3d 369 (5th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 113
United States v. Reed, 77 F.3d 139 (6th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1256
United States v. Reed, 924 F.2d 1014 (11th Cir. 1991) ............................................................ 786, 1361
United States v. Reed, 980 F.2d 1568 (11th Cir. 1993) ............................................................ 567
United States v. Reeves, 524 F.3d 1161 (10th Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 1384, 1395
United States v. Regan, 103 F.3d 1072 (2nd Cir. 1997) ............................................................ 1285
United States v. Regan, 937 F.2d 823 (2d Cir. 1991) ............................................................... 1146, 1728
United States v. Regent Office Supply Co., 421 F.2d 1174 (2d Cir. 1970) ......................... 1208
United States v. Rehlander, 666 F.3d 45 (1st Cir. 2012) ........................................................... 852
United States v. Reid, 751 F.3d 763 (6th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 1196
United States v. Reilly, 76 F.3d 1271 (2d Cir. 1996) ............................................................... 1512
United States v. Reinhart, 357 F.3d 521 (5th Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 90
United States v. Reiter, 897 F.2d 639 (2d Cir. 1990) .............................................................. 519
United States v. Reitmeyer, 356 F.3d 1313 (10th Cir. 2004) ................................................... 1717
United States v. Rendon-Duarte, 490 F.3d 1142 (9th Cir. 2007) ............................................ 700

1890
United States v. Renfroe, 825 F.2d 763 (3rd Cir. 1987) .................................................. 329
United States v. Rentz, 777 F.3d 1105 (10th Cir. 2015) ............................................................. 869
United States v. Resendiz-Ponce, 127 S.Ct. 782 (Jan. 9, 2007) ........................................... 1013
United States v. Residence (Appeal of Lewallen), 805 F.2d 256 (7th Cir. 1986) ................. 1491
United States v. Resko, 3 F.3d 684 (3rd Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1080
United States v. Reveron Martinez, 836 F.2d 684 (1st Cir. 1988) ..................................... 1285
United States v. Rewis, 969 F.2d 985 (11th Cir. 1992) .......................................................... 1311
United States v. Reyes, 18 F.3d 65 (2d Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 655
United States v. Reyes, 313 F.3d 1152 (9th Cir. 2002) ......................................................... 974
United States v. Reyes, 49 F.3d 63 (2d Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1266
United States v. Reyes, 542 F.3d 588 (7th Cir. 2008) ............................................................. 699
United States v. Reyes, 577 F.3d 1069 (9th Cir. 2009) ......................................................... 288, 309, 924
United States v. Reyes-Santiago, 804 F.3d 453 (1st Cir. 2015) ........................................... 1290
United States v. Reynold's, 367 F.3d 294 (5th Cir. 2004) .................................................... 389, 874
United States v. Reynolds, 710 F.3d 498 (3rd Cir. 2013) ...................................................... 1695
United States v. Reynolds, 919 F.2d 435 (7th Cir. 1991) ....................................................... 1729
United States v. Rhodes, 32 F.3d 867 (4th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 519
United States v. Rhodes, 886 F.2d 375 (D.C. Cir. 1989) ...................................................... 705
United States v. Rhone, 864 F.2d 832 (D.C. Cir. 1989) ................................................. 1148
United States v. Ribas-Dominicci, 50 F.3d 76 (1st Cir. 1995) ............................................. 960, 975
United States v. Ricardo, D., 912 F.2d 337 (9th Cir. 1990) ............................................... 353, 1397, 1660
United States v. Ricciardelli, 998 F.2d 8 (1st Cir. 1993) ....................................................... 1571, 1600
United States v. Rice, 478 F.3d 704 (6th Cir. 2007) ............................................................ 1489, 1508, 1754
United States v. Richard, 504 F.3d 1109 (9th Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 1097
United States v. Richard, 994 F.2d 244 (5th Cir. 1993) ....................................................... 1478
United States v. Richards, 659 F.3d 527 (6th Cir. 2011) .................................................... 1426
United States v. Richards, 719 F.3d 746 (7th Cir. 2013) ...................................................... 307, 688
United States v. Richardson, 161 F.3d 728 (D.C. Cir. 1998) .............................................. 39, 1687
United States v. Richardson, 161 F.3d 728 (D.C. Cir. 1998) .............................................. 318, 931
United States v. Richardson, 166 F.3d 1360 (11th Cir. 1999) ............................................. 847
United States v. Richardson, 385 F.3d 625 (6th Cir. 2004) ................................................. 1438, 1530, 1658, 1668
United States v. Richardson, 421 F.3d 17 (1st Cir. 2005) .................................................. 42, 454
United States v. Richardson, 439 F.3d 421 (8th Cir. 2006) (en banc) .................................. 856
United States v. Richardson, 658 F.3d 333 (3rd Cir. 2011) ................................................. 1248
United States v. Richardson, 949 F.2d 851 (6th Cir. 1991) ................................................. 1396, 1397, 1448, 1660
United States v. Richter, 796 F.3d 1173 (10th Cir. 2015) .................................................... 795
United States v. Richter, 826 F.2d 206 (2d Cir. 1987) ......................................................... 499
United States v. Ricks, 573 F.3d 198 (4th Cir. 2009) .............................................................. 853
United States v. Ricks, 802 F.2d 731 (4th Cir. 1986) ............................................................ 1199
United States v. Riddle, 103 F.3d 423 (5th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 28, 677, 737, 793
United States v. Riffe, 28 F.3d 565 (6th Cir. 1994) ............................................................... 605
United States v. Rigas, 490 F.3d 208 (2d Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 213
United States v. Rigas, 605 F.3d 194 (3rd Cir. 2010) ............................................................. 443, 563
United States v. Riggi, 541 F.3d 94 (2d Cir. 2004) ............................................................... 403

1891
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Riggi</td>
<td>951 F.3d 1368 (3rd Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Riggins, L.</td>
<td>15 F.3d 992 (10th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Riley</td>
<td>621 F.3d 312 (3rd Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Riley</td>
<td>78 F.3d 367 (8th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rinaldi, L.</td>
<td>351 F.3d 285 (7th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rinaldi, L.</td>
<td>808 F.2d 1579 (D.C. Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ring</td>
<td>706 F.3d 460 (D.C. Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ringling</td>
<td>988 F.2d 504 (4th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rios</td>
<td>449 F.3d 1009 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ripinsky</td>
<td>109 F.3d 1436 (9th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Risha</td>
<td>445 F.3d 298 (3rd Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ritchie</td>
<td>342 F.3d 903 (9th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rith</td>
<td>164 F.3d 1323 (10th Cir. 1999)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ritsema</td>
<td>89 F.3d 392 (7th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ritter</td>
<td>416 F.3d 256 (3rd Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivas</td>
<td>157 F.3d 364 (5th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivas</td>
<td>377 F.3d 195 (2d Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. River Pedin</td>
<td>861 F.2d 1522 (11th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera</td>
<td>357 F.3d 290 (3rd Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera</td>
<td>384 F.3d 49 (3rd Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera</td>
<td>546 F.3d 245 (2d Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera</td>
<td>61 F.3d 131 (2d Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera</td>
<td>682 F.3d 1223 (9th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera</td>
<td>872 F.2d 507 (1st Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera</td>
<td>944 F.2d 1563 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera-Corona</td>
<td>618 F.3d 976 (9th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera-Guerrero</td>
<td>426 F.3d 1130 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. River-Maldonado</td>
<td>560 F.3d 16 (1st Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera-Rodriguez</td>
<td>761 F.3d 105 (1st Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivera-Santiago</td>
<td>107 F.3d 960 (1st Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rivers</td>
<td>595 F.3d 558 (4th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roach</td>
<td>582 F.3d 1192 (10th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roark</td>
<td>36 F.3d 14 (6th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roark</td>
<td>924 F.2d 1426 (8th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Robbins</td>
<td>21 F.3d 297 (8th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Robles-Ortega</td>
<td>348 F.3d 679 (7th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roberson, L.</td>
<td>6 F.3d 1088 (5th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roberson, L.</td>
<td>90 F.3d 75 (3rd Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Robert L.</td>
<td>874 F.2d 701 (9th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roberts</td>
<td>119 F.3d 1006 (1st Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roberts</td>
<td>624 F.3d 241 (5th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roberts</td>
<td>852 F.2d 671 (2d Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roberts</td>
<td>887 F.2d 534 (6th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Robertson, L.</td>
<td>110 F.3d 1113 (5th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Robertson, L.</td>
<td>45 F.3d 1423 (10th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1892

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Rodriguez-Vega, 797 F.3d 781 (9th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 112
United States v. Roe, 445 F.3d 202 (2d Cir. 2006) .................................................................................. 1295
United States v. Roenigk, 810 F.2d 809 (8th Cir. 1987) ........................................................................... 678
United States v. Rogers, 18 F.3d 265 (4th Cir. 1994) ............................................................................. 1147
United States v. Rogers, 387 F.3d 925 (7th Cir. 2004) .......................................................................... 996
United States v. Rogers, 542 F.3d 197 (7th Cir. 2008) ........................................................................... 725
United States v. Rogers, 659 F.3d 74 (1st Cir. 2011) ............................................................................. 348
United States v. Rogers, 906 F.2d 189 (5th Cir. 1990) ........................................................................... 394
United States v. Rogers, 94 F.3d 1519 (11th Cir. 1996) ...................................................................... 1135
United States v. Rogers, 960 F.2d 1501 (10th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 546
United States v. Rojas Alvarez, 451 F.3d 320 (5th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 580, 595
United States v. Rojas, 718 F.3d 1317 (11th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 1715
United States v. Rollings, 445 F.3d 202 (10th Cir. 2014) .................................................................. 47
United States v. Romano, 137 F.3d 677 (1st Cir. 1998) ......................................................................... 1751
United States v. Romano, 849 F.2d 812 (3d Cir. 1988) ...................................................................... 184, 197
United States v. Romeo, 114 F.3d 141 (9th Cir. 1997) ......................................................................... 545
United States v. Romero, 136 F.3d 1268 (10th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 33
United States v. Romero, 360 F.3d 1248 (10th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1018
United States v. Romero-Bustamente, 337 F.3d 1104 (9th Cir. 2003) ........................................... 1414
United States v. Romero-Reyna, 867 F.2d 834 (5th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 1190
United States v. Ronder, 639 F.2d 931 (2d Cir. 1981) ........................................................................ 518
United States v. Rooney, 37 F.3d 847 (2d Cir. 1994) ........................................................................... 39, 269
United States v. Rork, 981 F.2d 314 (8th Cir. 1992) ............................................................................ 432
United States v. Rosa, 507 F.3d 142 (2nd Cir. 2007) ........................................................................... 846
United States v. Rosa, 626 F.3d 56 (2d Cir. 2010) ............................................................................... 1576
United States v. Rosales-Rodriguez, 289 F.3d 1106 (9th Cir. 2002) ..................................................... 518
United States v. Rosa-Ortiz, 348 F.3d 33 (1st Cir. 2003) ..................................................................... 623
United States v. Rosas-Fuentes, 970 F.2d 1379 (5th Cir. 1992) ............................................................. 429, 586
United States v. Rosemond, 841 F.3d 95 (2d Cir. 2016) ...................................................................... 831
United States v. Rosenberg, 888 F.2d 1406 (D.C.Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 567
United States v. Rosenthal, 454 F.3d 943 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................ 1077
United States v. Rosnow, 977 F.2d 399 (8th Cir. 1992) ...................................................................... 451
United States v. Ross, 32 F.3d 1411 (9th Cir. 1994) ............................................................................ 1376, 1592
United States v. Ross, 412 F.3d 771 (7th Cir. 2005) ........................................................................... 1033
United States v. Ross, 58 F.3d 154 (5th Cir. 1995) ........................................................................... 429
United States v. Ross, 77 F.3d 1525 (7th Cir. 1996) ........................................................................... 32, 1234
United States v. Ross, 848 F.3d 1129 (D. C. Cir. 2017) ...................................................................... 1695
United States v. Ross, No. 09-1852 (6th Cir. 2012) ........................................................................... 175, 324
United States v. Rossillo, 853 F.2d 1062 (2d Cir. 1988) .................................................................... 979
United States v. Rossomando, 144 F.3d 197 (2d Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1139, 1212
United States v. Roth, 77 F.3d 1525 (7th Cir. 1996) ........................................................................... 887, 894, 908
United States v. Rouillard, 701 F.3d 861 (8th Cir. 2012) ..................................................................... 1150
United States v. Rouse, 148 F.3d 1040 (8th Cir. 1998) ..................................................................... 1432, 1591
United States v. Rowe, 106 F.3d 1226 (5th Cir. 1997) ..................................................................... 1200

1894
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Title</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rowe</td>
<td>144 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rowe</td>
<td>96 F.3d 1294 (9th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rowland</td>
<td>145 F.3d 1194 (10th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roxworthy</td>
<td>457 F.3d 590 (6th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roy</td>
<td>843 F.2d 305 (8th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Roy</td>
<td>855 F.3d 1133 (11th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rubio-Villareal</td>
<td>967 F.2d 294 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rucker</td>
<td>915 F.2d 1511 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rudberg</td>
<td>122 F.3d 1199 (9th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rufai</td>
<td>732 F.3d 1175 (10th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ruiz</td>
<td>59 F.3d 1151 (11th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ruiz-Gaxiola</td>
<td>623 F.3d 684 (9th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Runyan</td>
<td>275 F.3d 449 (5th Cir. 2001)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rush</td>
<td>808 F.3d 1007 (4th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rush-Richardson</td>
<td>574 F.3d 906 (8th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Russell</td>
<td>134 F.3d 171 (3rd Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Russell</td>
<td>221 F.3d 615 (4th Cir. 2000)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Russian</td>
<td>848 F.3d 1239 (10th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Russo</td>
<td>801 F.2d 624 (2d Cir. 1986)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rutgard</td>
<td>116 F.3d 1270 (9th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rutgerson</td>
<td>822 F.3d 1223 (11th Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rutherford</td>
<td>371 F.3d 634 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rutkowski</td>
<td>877 F.2d 139 (1st Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rutledge</td>
<td>648 F.3d 555 (7th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rutledge</td>
<td>900 F.2d 1127 (7th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ryals</td>
<td>512 F.3d 416 (7th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rybicki</td>
<td>287 F.3d 257 (2d Cir. 2002)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Rybicki</td>
<td>354 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Saadey</td>
<td>393 F.3d 669 (6th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Saafir</td>
<td>754 F.3d 262 (4th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sabetta</td>
<td>373 F.3d 75 (1st Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sabhanani</td>
<td>493 F.3d 63 (2d Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Saccoccia</td>
<td>354 F.3d 9 (1st Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Saccoccia</td>
<td>433 F.3d 19 (1st Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sacerio</td>
<td>952 F.2d 860 (5th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sadler</td>
<td>750 F.3d 585 (6th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sadler</td>
<td>750 F.3d 585-- F.3d – (6th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Saechao</td>
<td>418 F.3d 1073 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Saenz</td>
<td>134 F.3d 697 (5th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Saenz</td>
<td>179 F.3d 686 (9th Cir. 1999)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Safavian</td>
<td>528 F.3d 957 (D.C. Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Safirstein</td>
<td>827 F.2d 1380 (9th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Salado</td>
<td>339 F.3d 285 (5th Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
United States v. Salahuddin, 509 F.3d 858 (7th Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 1673
United States v. Salamanca, 990 F.2d 629 (D.C. Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 45
United States v. Salamone, 800 F.2d 1216 (3rd Cir. 1986) .......................................................... 1199
United States v. Salas, 889 F.3d 681 (10th Cir. 2018) .......................................................... 867
United States v. Salazar, 751 F.3d 326 (5th Cir. 2014) .......................................................... 1100
United States v. Salem, 578 F.3d 682 (7th Cir. 2009) .......................................................... 225
United States v. Salemo, 61 F.3d 214 (3rd Cir. 1995) .......................................................... 197
United States v. Salerno, 902 F.2d 1429 (9th Cir. 1990) .......................................................... 1729
United States v. Salerno, 937 F.2d 797 (2d Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 766
United States v. Salgado, 519 F.3d 411 (7th Cir. 2008) .......................................................... 444, 1362
United States v. Salinas, 373 F.3d 161 (1st Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 1745
United States v. Salinas-Cano, 959 F.2d 861 (10th Cir. 1992) .......................................................... 1458
United States v. Salisbury, 158 F.3d 1204 (11th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 1380
United States v. Sallins, 993 F.2d 344 (3rd Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 656
United States v. Salmon, 378 F.3d 1266 (11th Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 1018
United States v. Salmon, 944 F.2d 1106 (3rd Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 24, 428, 585, 1561
United States v. Salti, 579 F.3d 656 (6th Cir. 2009) .......................................................... 898
United States v. Saltzman, 984 F.2d 1087 (10th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 1714
United States v. Salzato, 158 F.3d 1107 (10th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 1534, 1535
United States v. Samaniego, 345 F.3d 1280 (11th Cir. 2003) .......................................................... 754
United States v. Samet, 466 F.3d 251 (2d Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 982
United States v. Sammaripa, 55 F.3d 433 (9th Cir. 1995) .......................................................... 559, 1193
United States v. Sampson, 385 F.3d 183 (2d Cir. 2004) .......................................................... 684, 691, 1687
United States v. Samuels, 801 F.2d 1052 (8th Cir. 1986) .......................................................... 1044
United States v. Sanabria, 645 F.3d 505 (1st Cir. 2011) .......................................................... 483
United States v. Sanchez, 176 F.3d 1214 (9th Cir. 1999) .......................................................... 301, 498
United States v. Sanchez, 615 F.3d 836 (7th Cir. 2010) .......................................................... 1274
United States v. Sanchez, 639 F.3d 1201 (9th Cir. 2011) .......................................................... 852
United States v. Sanchez, 659 F.3d 1252 (9th Cir. 2011) .......................................................... 308
United States v. Sanchez-Colberg, 856 F.3d 180 (1st Cir. 2017) .......................................................... 47
United States v. Sanchez-Gomez, 798 F.3d 1204, 859 F.3d 649 (9th Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 513
United States v. Sanchez-Lima, 161 F.3d 545 (9th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 1763
United States v. Sanchez-Mata, 925 F.2d 1166 (9th Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 21, 422, 434, 580
United States v. Sanchez-Robles, 927 F.2d 1070 (9th Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 1122
United States v. Sanchez-Vargas, 878 F.2d 1163 (9th Cir. 1989) .......................................................... 1029
United States v. Sanders, 157 F.3d 302 (5th Cir. 1998) .......................................................... 876
United States v. Sanders, 424 F.3d 768 (8th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 1438
United States v. Sanders, 485 F.3d 654 (D.C. Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 1707
United States v. Sanders, 668 F.3d 1298 (11th Cir. 2012) .......................................................... 689
United States v. Sanders, 796 F.3d 1241 (10th Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 1559
United States v. Sanders, 843 F.3d 1050 (5th Cir. 2016) .......................................................... 522
United States v. Sanders, 928 F.2d 940 (10th Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 1258
United States v. Sandles, 23 F.3d 1121 (7th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 197
United States v. Sandles, 469 F.3d 508 (6th Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 54, 213

1896
United States v. Sandoval, 20 F.3d 134 (5th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 616
United States v. Sandoval, 29 F.3d 537 (10th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 1449, 1537, 1661
United States v. Sandoval-Lopez, 122 F.3d 797 (9th Cir. 1997) ............................................... 1300
United States v. Sandoval-Lopez, 409 F.3d 1193 (9th Cir. 2005) ....................................... 89
United States v. Sandoval-Mendoza, 472 F.3d 645 (9th Cir. 2006) ............................... 180, 613, 791, 1685
United States v. Sangineto-Miranda, 859 F.2d 1501 (6th Cir. 1988) .................................... 1626
United States v. Santa-Manzano, 842 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1988) ............................................. 1035
United States v. Santana-Camacho, 833 F.2d 371 (1st Cir. 1987) ........................................... 291
United States v. Santiago, 46 F.3d 885 (9th Cir. 1995) ...................................................... 539
United States v. Santiago-Burgos, 750 F.3d 19 (1st Cir. 2014) .................................. 47
United States v. Santini, 656 F.3d 1075 (9th Cir. 2011) .................................................... 689, 797
United States v. Santistevan, 701 F.3d 1289 (10th Cir. 2012) .......................................... 368
United States v. Santos, 20 F.3d 280 (7th Cir. 1994) ........................................................... 748
United States v. Santos, 449 F.3d 93 (2d Cir. 2006) .......................................................... 54, 272, 415, 445, 990
United States v. Santos-Soto, 799 F.3d 49 (1st Cir. 2015) ............................................. 420
United States v. Sanyar, 774 F.3d 812 (4th Cir. 2014) .................................................... 1314
United States v. Sardelli, 813 F.2d 654 (5th Cir. 1987) ..................................................... 296
United States v. Sargent, 504 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 2007) ...................................................... 1734
United States v. Sassero, 695 F.3d 25 (1st Cir. 2012) ....................................................... 1143, 1158
United States v. Savoires, 430 F.3d 376 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................... 871, 873, 1021
United States v. Sawyer, 799 F.2d 1494 (11th Cir. 1986) .................................................. 1281
United States v. Saybolt, 577 F.3d 195 (3rd Cir. 2009) ..................................................... 818
United States v. Sazenski, 833 F.2d 741 (8th Cir. 1987) .............................................. 1692
United States v. Scales, 903 F.2d 765 (10th Cir. 1990) ..................................................... 1514
United States v. Scanzello, 832 F.2d 18 (3rd Cir. 1987) ..................................................... 1016, 1735
United States v. Scartz, 838 F.2d 876 (6th Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 748
United States v. Schaefer, 501 F.3d 1197 (10th Cir. 2007) ................................................... 1050, 1325
United States v. Schales, 546 F.3d 965 (9th Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 549, 1236, 1324
United States v. Schene, 543 F.3d 627 (10th Cir. 2008) ..................................................... 1324
United States v. Schiavo, 29 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 1994) ........................................................... 1636
United States v. Schif, 602 F.3d 152 (3rd Cir. 2010) .............................................................. 1682
United States v. Schlei, 122 F.3d 944 (11th Cir. 1997) .................................................... 1022, 1771
United States v. Schmalzried, 152 F.3d 354 (5th Cir. 1998) ............................................. 876
United States v. Schmick, 904 F.2d 936 (5th Cir. 1990) ..................................................... 274
United States v. Schmidgall, 25 F.3d 1523 (11th Cir. 1994) .................................................. 837
United States v. Schmitz, 634 F.3d 1247 (11th Cir. 2011) ................................................... 496, 1014
United States v. Schmuckler, 792 F.3d 158 (D.C. Cir. 2015) ........................................... 479
United States v. Schnitzer, 145 F.3d 721 (5th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 214, 626
United States v. Schnitzer, 567 F.2d 536 (2d Cir. 1977) ..................................................... 806
United States v. Schoneberg, 396 F.3d 1036 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................. 488
United States v. Schramm, 75 F.3d 156 (3rd Cir. 1996) ..................................................... 456
United States v. Schroeder, 129 F.3d 439 (8th Cir. 1997) .................................................... 1574

1897

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Schuler, 813 F.2d 978 (9th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 292, 297
United States v. Schulman, 817 F.2d 1355 (9th Cir. 1987) .............................................................. 1287
United States v. Schwab, 886 F.2d 509 (2d Cir. 1989) .................................................................. 499
United States v. Schwartz, 541 F.3d 1331 (11th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 272
United States v. Schwimmer, 892 F.2d 237 (2d Cir. 1989) ............................................................... 167
United States v. Scialabba, 282 F.3d 475 (7th Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 1252, 1253
United States v. Scisney, 885 F.2d 325 (6th Cir. 1989) .................................................................. 726
United States v. Scisum, 32 F.3d 1479 (10th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1083
United States v. Scofield, 433 F.3d 580 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................ 581
United States v. Scoop, 846 F.2d 135 (2d Cir. 1988) .................................................................. 803
United States v. Scoop, 856 F.2d 5 (2d Cir. 1988) .................................................................. 803
United States v. Scott, 394 F.3d 111 (2d Cir. 2005) .................................................................. 1007
United States v. Scott, 450 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2006) .................................................................. 1604
United States v. Scott, 469 F.3d 1335 (10th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1295
United States v. Scott, 677 F.3d 72 (2d Cir. 2012) ................................................................ 683, 688
United States v. Scott, 693 F.3d 715 (6th Cir. 2012) .................................................................. 368
United States v. Scott, 854 F.2d 697 (5th Cir. 1988) .................................................................. 1200
United States v. Scott, 884 F.2d 1163 (9th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 976
United States v. Scott, 993 F.2d 1520 (11th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1017
United States v. Scrima, 819 F.2d 996 (11th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 658
United States v. Scroggins, 379 F.3d 233 (5th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 257, 1265, 1771
United States v. Scrukey, 821 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1752
United States v. Seljan, 547 F.3d 993 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1413
United States v. Sellers, 645 F.3d 830 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 175, 472
United States v. Sellers, 906 F.3d 848 (9th Cir. 2018) ................................................................. 533, 932
United States v. Self, 596 F.3d 245 (5th Cir. 2010) ................................................................ 950, 965, 971
United States v. Seljan, 547 F.3d 993 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1413
United States v. Sellers, 645 F.3d 830 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 175, 472
United States v. Sellers, 906 F.3d 848 (9th Cir. 2018) ................................................................. 533, 932
United States v. Seltzer, 595 F.3d 1170 (10th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1699
United States v. Sepulveda-Contreras, 466 F.3d 166 (1st Cir. 2006) ............................................ 517
United States v. Sepulveda-Hernandez, 752 F.3d 22 (1st Cir. 2014) ............................................. 595
United States v. Serafin, 562 F.3d 1105 (10th Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 870
United States v. Serawop, 410 F.3d 656 (10th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 554, 1130
United States v. Serino, 163 F.3d 91 (1st Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1189
United States v. Serna, 799 F.2d 842 (2d Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 712
United States v. Serpoosh, 919 F.2d 835 (2d Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1691
United States v. Serrano, 870 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1989) ......................................................... 747
United States v. Service Deli, Inc., 151 F.3d 938 (9th Cir. 1998) .............................................. 235
United States v. Severdija, 790 F.2d 1556 (11th Cir. 1986) ...................................................... 235
United States v. Severino, 800 F.2d 42 (2d Cir. 1986) ............................................................. 1199
United States v. Severns, 559 F.3d 274 (5th Cir. 2009) ........................................................... 56, 549
United States v. Shacklett, 921 F.2d 580 (5th Cir. 1991) ............................................................ 960
United States v. Shafer, 987 F.2d 1054 (4th Cir. 1993) ............................................................. 557
United States v. Shaibu, 920 F.2d 1423 (9th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 1440
United States v. Shaker, 279 F.3d 494 (7th Cir. 2002) .............................................................. 975
United States v. Shakur, 691 F.3d 979 (8th Cir. 2012) ............................................................ 891
United States v. Shannon, 766 F.3d 346 (3rd Cir. 2014) ......................................................... 1329
United States v. Shareef, 100 F.3d 1491 (10th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 1627
United States v. Sharp, 689 F.3d 616 (6th Cir. 2012) ............................................................... 1464, 1676
United States v. Sharp, 920 F.2d 1167 (4th Cir. 1990) ............................................................. 828
United States v. Shavers, 693 F.3d 363 (3rd Cir. 2012) ............................................................ 1273
United States v. Shaw, 464 F.3d 615 (6th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 337, 1599
United States v. Shaw, 707 F.3d 666 (6th Cir. 2013) ............................................................... 1383, 1505, 1573
United States v. Shaw, 829 F.2d 714 (9th Cir. 1987) ............................................................... 1280, 1766
United States v. Shay, 57 F.3d 126 (1st Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 641, 719, 793
United States v. Shedrick, 493 F.3d 292 (3rd Cir. 2007) ........................................................... 87
United States v. Sheffield, 832 F.3d 296 (D. C. Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 686
United States v. Sheffield, 992 F.2d 1164 (11th Cir. 1993) ......................................................... 493, 647, 730
United States v. Shell, 974 F.2d 1035 (9th Cir. 1992) .............................................................. 1702
United States v. Shellef, 507 F.3d 82 (2nd Cir. 2007) ............................................................... 1686, 1690
United States v. Shenberg, 89 F.3d 1461 (11th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 546
United States v. Shepard, 739 F.3d 286 (6th Cir. 2014) ........................................................... 1197
United States v. Shephard, 21 F.3d 933 (9th Cir. 1994) ........................................................... 1543
United States v. Sheppard, 149 F.3d 458 (6th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 876
United States v. Sherlock, 962 F.2d 1349 (9th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 1693
United States v. Sherrill, 27 F.3d 344 (8th Cir. 1994) .............................................................. 1468, 1651
United States v. Shetter, 665 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2011) ...................................................... 336, 1400, 1496
United States v. Shim, 584 F.3d 394 (2d Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 1151
United States v. Shoff, 151 F.3d 889 (8th Cir. 1998) ............................................................... 1254
United States v. Shoffner, 826 F.2d 619 (7th Cir. 1987) ........................................................... 749
United States v. Shorter, 54 F.3d 1248 (7th Cir. 1995) ........................................................... 76
United States v. Shortman, 91 F.3d 80 (9th Cir. 1996) ............................................................ 1148
United States v. Shorty, 741 F.3d 961 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................................ 1104
United States v. Shotts, 145 F.3d 1289 (11th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 1213, 1285
United States v. Shoup, 476 F.3d 38 (1st Cir. 2007) ............................................................... 310
United States v. Showalter, 858 F.2d 149 (3rd Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 1561
United States v. Shrum, 908 F.3d 1219 (10th Cir. 2018) ......................................................... 1399, 1586
United States v. Shugart, 117 F.3d 838 (5th Cir. 1997) ........................................................... 1577
United States v. Shumway, 911 F.2d 1528 (11th Cir. 1990) ....................................................... 1327
United States v. Shyllon, 10 F.3d 1 (D.C.Cir. 1993) .............................................................. 494, 648

1899
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sicignano</td>
<td>78 F.3d 69 (2d Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Siciliano</td>
<td>578 F.3d 61 (1st Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Siegel</td>
<td>102 F.3d 477 (11th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Siegel</td>
<td>153 F.3d 1256 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Siegelman</td>
<td>640 F.3d 1159 (11th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Siers</td>
<td>873 F.2d 747 (4th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silkman</td>
<td>156 F.3d 833 (8th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silkwood</td>
<td>893 F.2d 245 (10th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silva</td>
<td>380 F.3d 1018 (7th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silver</td>
<td>864 F.3d 102 (2d Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silverman</td>
<td>861 F.2d 571 (9th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silveus</td>
<td>542 F.3d 993 (3rd Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silvious</td>
<td>512 F.3d 364 (7th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Silwo</td>
<td>620 F.3d 630 (6th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simels</td>
<td>654 F.3d 161 (2d Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simmons</td>
<td>661 F.3d 151 (2d Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simmons</td>
<td>737 F.3d 319 (4th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simmons</td>
<td>797 F.3d 409 (6th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simpson</td>
<td>442 F.3d 737 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simpson</td>
<td>479 F.3d 492 (7th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simpson</td>
<td>813 F.2d 1462 (9th Cir. 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simpson</td>
<td>845 F.3d 1039 (10th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simpson</td>
<td>864 F.3d 830 (7th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simpson</td>
<td>805 F.3d 740 (7th Cir. 1993)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sims</td>
<td>776 F.3d 583 (8th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sims</td>
<td>845 F.2d 1564 (11th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simtob</td>
<td>485 F.3d 1058 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Simtob</td>
<td>901 F.2d 799 (9th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sindel</td>
<td>53 F.3d 874 (8th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sine</td>
<td>493 F.3d 1021 (9th Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sinigaglio</td>
<td>942 F.2d 581 (9th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sipe</td>
<td>388 F.3d 471 (5th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sistrunk</td>
<td>622 F.3d 1328 (11th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sitton</td>
<td>968 F.2d 947 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sivilla</td>
<td>714 F.3d 1168 (9th Cir. 2013)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Skarda</td>
<td>845 F.2d 1508 (8th Cir. 1988)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Skarig</td>
<td>971 F.2d 317 (9th Cir. 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Skelos</td>
<td>--- F.3d --- (2d Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Skillern</td>
<td>947 F.2d 1268 (5th Cir. 1991)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Skinner</td>
<td>690 F.3d 772 (6th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Skipper</td>
<td>74 F.3d 608 (5th Cir. 1996)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sklerna</td>
<td>692 F.3d 725 (7th Cir. 2012)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Slaight</td>
<td>620 F.3d 816 (7th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Slatten</td>
<td>865 F.3d 767 (D.C. Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sligh</td>
<td>142 F.3d 761 (4th Cir. 1998)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1900
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Name</th>
<th>Citation</th>
<th>Circuit</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sloan</td>
<td>36 F.3d 386</td>
<td>4th Cir. 1994</td>
<td>557, 1280</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Slocumb</td>
<td>804 F.3d 677</td>
<td>4th Cir. 2015</td>
<td>1640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Slough</td>
<td>641 F.3d 544</td>
<td>D. C. Cir. 2011</td>
<td>833</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smack</td>
<td>347 F.3d 533</td>
<td>3rd Cir. 2003</td>
<td>148</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smalls</td>
<td>605 F.3d 765</td>
<td>10th Cir. 2010</td>
<td>413</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>156 F.3d 1046</td>
<td>10th Cir. 1998</td>
<td>991</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>26 F.3d 739</td>
<td>7th Cir. 1994</td>
<td>1081</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>3 F.3d 1088</td>
<td>7th Cir. 1993</td>
<td>353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>31 F.3d 469</td>
<td>7th Cir. 1994</td>
<td>1081</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>34 F.3d 514</td>
<td>7th Cir. 1994</td>
<td>431</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>35 F.3d 344</td>
<td>8th Cir. 1994</td>
<td>1286</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>386 F.3d 753</td>
<td>6th Cir. 2004</td>
<td>1565</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>451 F.3d 209</td>
<td>4th Cir. 2006</td>
<td>486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>454 F.3d 707</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2006</td>
<td>486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>544 F.3d 781</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2008</td>
<td>846</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>55 F.3d 157</td>
<td>4th Cir. 1995</td>
<td>1018</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>573 F.3d 639</td>
<td>8th Cir. 2009</td>
<td>598</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>60 F.3d 595</td>
<td>9th Cir. 1995</td>
<td>961</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>640 F.3d 358</td>
<td>D.C. Cir. 2011</td>
<td>412</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>640 F.3d 580</td>
<td>4th Cir. 2011</td>
<td>113, 978</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>641 F.3d 1200</td>
<td>10th Cir. 2011</td>
<td>818, 1744</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>725 F.3d 340</td>
<td>3rd Cir. 2013</td>
<td>688, 696</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>77 F.3d 511</td>
<td>D.C. Cir. 1996</td>
<td>249, 261, 494</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>775 F.3d 879</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2015</td>
<td>1060</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>794 F.3d 681</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2015</td>
<td>1664</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>799 F.2d 704</td>
<td>11th Cir. 1986</td>
<td>1538</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>806 F.2d 971</td>
<td>10th Cir. 1986</td>
<td>317, 320</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>814 F.3d 268</td>
<td>5th Cir. 2015</td>
<td>300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>82 F.3d 1564</td>
<td>10th Cir. 1996</td>
<td>1135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>830 F.3d 803</td>
<td>8th Cir. 2016</td>
<td>522</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>831 F.2d 657</td>
<td>6th Cir. 1987</td>
<td>491</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>934 F.2d 270</td>
<td>11th Cir. 1991</td>
<td>1223</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>939 F.2d 9</td>
<td>2d Cir. 1991</td>
<td>1133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>94 F.3d 204</td>
<td>6th Cir. 1996</td>
<td>1702</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>962 F.2d 923</td>
<td>9th Cir. 1992</td>
<td>303, 1765</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>984 F.2d 1084</td>
<td>10th Cir. 1993</td>
<td>1058</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith</td>
<td>987 F.2d 888</td>
<td>2d Cir. 1993</td>
<td>917</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Smith-Balthier</td>
<td>424 F.3d 913</td>
<td>9th Cir. 2005</td>
<td>1007</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sneed</td>
<td>600 F.3d 1326</td>
<td>11th Cir. 2010</td>
<td>845</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Snyder</td>
<td>865 F.3d 490</td>
<td>7th Cir. 2017</td>
<td>1270</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sokolow</td>
<td>490 U.S. 1</td>
<td>1989</td>
<td>1370</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Sokolow</td>
<td>91 F.3d 396</td>
<td>3rd Cir. 1996</td>
<td>1214</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Soldevila-Lopez</td>
<td>17 F.3d 480</td>
<td>1st Cir. 1994</td>
<td>329</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Soler</td>
<td>275 F.3d 146</td>
<td>1st Cir. 2002</td>
<td>595</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
United States v. Solís, 841 F.2d 307 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1037
United States v. Solís, 915 F.3d 1172 (8th Cir. 2019) ................................................................. 1237
United States v. Solivan, 937 F.2d 1146 (6th Cir. 1991) ............................................................. 314
United States v. Soliz, 129 F.3d 499 (9th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 382
United States v. Songer, 842 F.2d 240 (10th Cir. 1988) ............................................................. 520
United States v. Sorich, 523 F.3d 702 (7th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1226
United States v. Sorondo, 845 F.2d 945 (11th Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 1766
United States v. Sosa, 387 F.3d 131 (2d Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 1008
United States v. Soto, 132 F.3d 56 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 150
United States v. Soto, 519 F.3d 927 (9th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1110
United States v. Soto, 953 F.2d 263 (6th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 359
United States v. Soto-Silva, 129 F.3d 340 (5th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 1121
United States v. Soto-Zuniga, 837 F.3d 992 (9th Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 533, 1609
United States v. Soussoudis, 807 F.2d 383 (4th Cir. 1986) ......................................................... 813
United States v. Southwell, 432 F.3d 1050 (9th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 1043, 1109, 1129, 1175
United States v. Sowards, 690 F.3d 583 (4th Cir. 2012) ......................................................... 1525
United States v. Spagnolo, 960 F.2d 990 (11th Cir. 1992) ........................................................ 235
United States v. Span, 75 F.3d 1383 (9th Cir. 1996) ............................................................. 155
United States v. Sparks, 806 F.3d 1323 (11th Cir. 2015) ......................................................... 1589
United States v. Spears, 729 F.3d 753 (7th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 1000
United States v. Spector, 55 F.3d 22 (1st Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 1718
United States v. Spence, 163 F.3d 1280 (11th Cir. 1998) ........................................................ 1088
United States v. Spencer, 905 F.2d 1260 (9th Cir. 1990) .......................................................... 1163
United States v. Spencer, 955 F.2d 814 (2d Cir. 1992) ............................................................. 372
United States v. Spilotro, 800 F.2d 959 (9th Cir. 1986) ............................................................ 1576, 1579, 1584
United States v. Spinner, 152 F.3d 950 (D.C. Cir. 1998) ........................................................... 866
United States v. Spinner, 475 F.3d 356 (D.C. Cir. 2007) ............................................................ 1408
United States v. Spinney, 65 F.3d 231 (1st Cir. 1995) ............................................................... 24
United States v. Spivey, 861 F.3d 1207 (11th Cir. 2017) ............................................................. 1433
United States v. Sprinkle, 106 F.3d 613 (4th Cir. 1997) ............................................................. 1649
United States v. Spruill, 118 F.3d 221 (4th Cir. 1997) ............................................................... 57
United States v. Spudic, 795 F.2d 1334 (7th Cir. 1986) ............................................................ 459, 1215
United States v. Spurlin, 664 F.3d 954 (5th Cir. 2011) ......................................................... 818
United States v. St. Hubert, 909 F.3d 335 (11th Cir. 2018) ......................................................... 36
United States v. Stabile, 633 F.3d 219 (3rd Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1427
United States v. Stacks, 821 F.3d 1038 (8th Cir. 2016) ............................................................. 815
United States v. Stacy, 769 F.3d 969 (7th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 686
United States v. Staffeldt, 451 F.3d 578 (9th Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 1754
United States v. Stafford, 136 F.3d 1109 (7th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 1734
United States v. Stanbridge, 813 F.3d 1032 (7th Cir. 2016) ................................................... 1502
United States v. Stanford, 823 F.3d 814 (5th Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 569, 1150, 1164, 1170
United States v. Stanko, 528 F.3d 581 (8th Cir. 2008) ............................................................ 278, 1091
United States v. Stanley, 24 F.3d 1314 (11th Cir. 1994) ........................................................... 436, 591
United States v. Stansfield, 101 F.3d 909 (3rd Cir. 1996) ........................................................ 1133
United States v. Staples, 435 F.3d 860 (8th Cir. 2006) ............................................................ 213

1902

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Starks, 157 F.3d 833 (11th Cir. 1998) .................................................. 986, 1146
United States v. Starks, 769 F.3d 83 (1st Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 1622
United States v. Starr, 816 F.2d 94 (2d Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1210, 1214
United States v. Stavroff, 149 F.3d 478 (6th Cir. 1998) ......................................................... 489, 1071
United States v. Stearns, 479 F.3d 175 (2d Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 49
United States v. Steen, 634 F.3d 822 (5th Cir. 2011) ............................................................... 1323
United States v. Stefan, 784 F.2d 1093 (11th Cir. 1986) ......................................................... 626
United States v. Steffen, 687 F.3d 1104 (8th Cir. 2012) ......................................................... 212
United States v. Stein, 37 F.3d 1407 (9th Cir. 1994) ............................................................... 1154, 1257
United States v. Stein, 541 F.3d 130 (2d Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 177, 393
United States v. Steinberg, 99 F.3d 1486 (9th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 247
United States v. Steiner, 815 F.3d 128 (3rd Cir. 2016) ............................................................ 695
United States v. Stephens, 118 F.3d 479 (6th Cir. 1997) ......................................................... 583, 1027, 1236
United States v. Stephens, 23 F.3d 553 (D.C.Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 592
United States v. Stephens, 365 F.3d 967 (11th Cir. 2004) ....................................................... 638, 707
United States v. Stephens, 421 F.3d 503 (7th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 1186
United States v. Stephens, 482 F.3d 669 (4th Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 389
United States v. Stephens, 489 F.3d 647 (5th Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 1707
United States v. Sterling, 724 F.3d 482 (4th Cir. 2013) ........................................................... 1336
United States v. Sterner, 23 F.3d 250 (9th Cir. 1994) ............................................................... 618
United States v. Steuben, 850 F.2d 859 (1st Cir. 1988) ........................................................... 427
United States v. Stevens, 38 F.3d 167 (5th Cir. 1994) ............................................................ 1167
United States v. Stevens, 533 F.3d 218 (3rd Cir. 2008) ........................................................... 880
United States v. Stevens, 935 F.2d 1380 (3rd Cir. 1991) ....................................................... 643
United States v. Stever, 603 F.3d 747 (9th Cir. 2010) ............................................................. 535, 636
United States v. Stewart, 145 F.3d 273 (5th Cir. 1998) ........................................................... 583
United States v. Stewart, 420 F.3d 1007 (9th Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 820, 1025
United States v. Stewart, 867 F.2d 581 (10th Cir. 1989) ......................................................... 1566
United States v. Stewart, 93 F.3d 189 (5th Cir. 1996) ............................................................ 490
United States v. Stigler, 413 F.3d 588 (7th Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 449, 1033
United States v. Still, 850 F.2d 607 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 63
United States v. Stimler, 864 F.3d 253 (3rd Cir. 2017) ........................................................... 1516
United States v. Stitt, 441 F.3d 297 (4th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 68
United States v. Stock, 728 F.3d 287 (3rd Cir. 2013) ............................................................. 1020, 1737
United States v. Stock, 948 F.2d 1299 (D.C.Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 495, 730
United States v. Stoddard, 111 F.3d 1450 (9th Cir. 1997) ....................................................... 545
United States v. Stokes, 733 F.3d 438 (2d Cir. 2013) ............................................................. 1383, 1549
United States v. Story, 439 F.3d 226 (5th Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 50
United States v. Stout, 509 F.3d 796 (6th Cir. 2007) ............................................................... 671, 700
United States v. Stowell, 947 F.2d 1251 (5th Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 450
United States v. Strager, 162 F.3d 921 (6th Cir. 1998) ............................................................ 1343
United States v. Strahan, 984 F.2d 155 (6th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 1543

1903
United States v. Sylve, 135 F.3d 680 (9th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 60
United States v. Sylvester, 143 F.3d 923 (5th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 1079, 1098
United States v. Sylvester, 848 F.2d 520 (5th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1486
United States v. Syme, 276 F.3d 131 (3rd Cir. 2002) ................................................................. 446, 1131
United States v. Symington, 195 F.3d 1080 (9th Cir. 1999) ................................................................. 1096
United States v. Symington, 781 F.3d 1308 (11th Cir. 2015) ......................................................... 969
United States v. Szynianak, 934 F.2d 434 (2d Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 373, 1332
United States v. Szynanski, 631 F.3d 794 (6th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 956, 1323
United States v. Tafollo-Cardenas, 897 F.2d 976 (9th Cir. 1990) .................................................... 657, 730
United States v. Tagalicud, 84 F.3d 1180 (9th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1134
United States v. Takera, 923 F.2d 665 (9th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 1679
United States v. Takhlov, 827 F.3d 1307, amended 838 F.3d 1168 (11th Cir. 2016) .................... 1207
United States v. Tallmadge, 829 F.2d 767 (9th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 619, 620
United States v. Tang Nguyen, 758 F.3d 1024 (8th Cir. 2014) ......................................................... 286, 1150
United States v. Tanguay, 787 F.3d 44 (1st Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 1488
United States v. Tanke, 743 F.3d 1296 (9th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 1218
United States v. Tann, 577 F.3d 533 (3rd Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 549, 853, 1236
United States v. Tanner, 628 F.3d 890 (7th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 670, 689
United States v. Tapia, 912 F.2d 1367 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1538, 1653
United States v. Tarallo, 380 F.3d 1174 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 458
United States v. Tarango, 396 F.3d 666 (5th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1265, 1691
United States v. Tarricone, 11 F.3d 24, amended by 21 F.3d 474 (2d Cir. 1993) ................. 926
United States v. Tarricone, 996 F.2d 1414 (2d Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 134
United States v. Tate, 524 F.3d 449 (4th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1489
United States v. Tatum, 943 F.2d 370 (4th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 75, 152
United States v. Tavares, 844 F.3d 46 (1st Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 264, 1218, 1355
United States v. Tavarez-Levario, 788 F.3d 433 (5th Cir. 2015) .................................................... 1715
United States v. Tavera, 719 F.3d 705 (6th Cir. 2013) ................................................................. 231
United States v. Taveras, 380 F.3d 532 (1st Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 753, 1342
United States v. Taxacher, 902 F.2d 867 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1515
United States v. Taylor, 113 F.3d 1136 (10th Cir. 1997) ................................................................. 199
United States v. Taylor, 139 F.3d 924 (D.C.Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 72
United States v. Taylor, 522 F.3d 731 (7th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 690
United States v. Taylor, 600 F.3d 678 (6th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 1453
United States v. Taylor, 636 F.3d 461 (10th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1559
United States v. Taylor, 636 F.3d 901 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1183
United States v. Taylor, 640 F.3d 255 (7th Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 284, 607
United States v. Taylor, 745 F.3d 15 (2d Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 270, 391
United States v. Taylor, 77 F.3d 368 (11th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 1310
United States v. Taylor, 816 F.3d 12 (2d Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 501
United States v. Taylor, 933 F.2d 307 (5th Cir. 1991) ................................................................. 185, 197
United States v. Taylor, 966 F.2d 830 (4th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 991
United States v. Teague, 908 F.2d 752 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 647
United States v. Teague, 953 F.2d 1525 (11th Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 156, 527, 647

1905
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Description</th>
<th>Case Number</th>
<th>Court</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Teffera, 985 F.2d 1082 (D.C.Cir. 1993)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>593</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tejada, 524 F.3d 809 (7th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1549</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tellier, 83 F.3d 578 (2d Cir. 1996)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>39, 747</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Temple, 447 F.3d 130 (2d Cir. 2006)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Templeman, 938 F.2d 122 (8th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1479</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tencer, 107 F.3d 1120 (5th Cir. 1997)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1214, 1255</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tenorio, 69 F.3d 1103 (11th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1333</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Termini, 992 F.2d 879 (8th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1257</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Terry, 909 F.3d 716 (4th Cir. 2018)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1399, 1493, 1621</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Terry, 911 F.2d 272 (9th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1688</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Terry, 915 F.3d 1141 (7th Cir. 2019)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1451</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Terselich, 885 F.2d 1094 (3rd Cir. 1989)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>428</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Terzado-Madruga, 897 F.2d 1099 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>378</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thai, 29 F.3d 785 (2d Cir. 1994)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1356</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thame, 846 F.2d 200 (3rd Cir. 1988)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>314, 1440</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Theage, 565 F.3d 911 (5th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>613, 1112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Theodore, 354 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2003)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thiongo, 344 F.3d 55 (1st Cir. 2003)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>498</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 114 F.3d 403 (3rd Cir. 1997)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>427, 455</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 134 F.3d 975 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>614, 685, 709</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 150 F.3d 743 (7th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>425</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 284 F.3d 746 (7th Cir. 2002)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>425, 426</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 32 F.3d 418 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>645, 1215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 321 F.3d 627 (7th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>702</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 372 F.3d 1173 (10th Cir. 2004)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1624</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 447 F.3d 1191 (9th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1624</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 453 F.3d 838 (7th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>403</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 627 F.3d 534 (4th Cir. 2010)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>869</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 690 F.3d 358 (5th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>61, 1743</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 726 F.3d 1086 (9th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>534, 1464</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 86 F.3d 647 (7th Cir. 1996)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1774</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 863 F.2d 622 (9th Cir. 1988)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1636, 1660</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 916 F.2d 647 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1279</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 955 F.2d 207 (4th Cir. 1992)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1553</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thomas, 987 F.2d 697 (11th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 25 F.3d 1558 (11th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>621, 646</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 287 F.3d 1244 (10th Cir. 2002)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1039</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 37 F.3d 450 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>299, 645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 403 F.3d 1037 (8th Cir. 2005)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 454 F.3d 459 (5th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>872</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 482 F.3d 781 (5th Cir. 2007)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>1741</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 484 F.3d 877 (7th Cir. 2007)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>266, 1227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 562 F.3d 387 (D.C. Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 690 F.3d 977 (8th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>552</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson, 772 F.3d 752 (3rd Cir. 2014)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>387</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Case Title</td>
<td>Citation</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----------------------------------------</td>
<td>-------------------------------------------------</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson</td>
<td>827 F.2d 1254 (9th Cir. 1987)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson</td>
<td>866 F.3d 1149 (10th Cir. 2017)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thompson-Riviere</td>
<td>561 F.3d 345 (4th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thorn</td>
<td>17 F.3d 325 (11th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thorne</td>
<td>153 F.3d 130 (4th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thornton</td>
<td>539 F.3d 741 (7th Cir. 2008)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thornton</td>
<td>554 F.3d 443 (4th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thum</td>
<td>749 F.3d 1143 (9th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Thunder</td>
<td>438 F.3d 866 (8th Cir. 2006)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tigano</td>
<td>F.3d 3d 741 (2d Cir. 2018)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tilghman</td>
<td>134 F.3d 414 (D.C.Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Timberlake</td>
<td>896 F.2d 592 (D.C.Cir. 1990)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Timmann</td>
<td>741 F.3d 1170 (11th Cir. 2013)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tinchel</td>
<td>907 F.2d 600 (6th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tingle</td>
<td>658 F.2d 1332 (9th Cir. 1981)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tirado-Tirado</td>
<td>563 F.3d 117 (5th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. To</td>
<td>144 F.3d 737 (2d Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tobin</td>
<td>480 F.3d 53 (1st Cir. 2007)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tobin</td>
<td>552 F.3d 29 (1st Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tobin</td>
<td>676 F.3d 1264 (11th Cir. 2012)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tobin</td>
<td>923 F.2d 1506 (11th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tobin-Hernandez</td>
<td>845 F.2d 277 (11th Cir. 1988)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Todd</td>
<td>108 F.3d 1329 (11th Cir. 1997)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Toledo</td>
<td>739 F.3d 562 (10th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Toler</td>
<td>144 F.3d 1423 (11th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tolliver</td>
<td>116 F.3d 120 (5th Cir. 1997)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tomblin</td>
<td>46 F.3d 1369 (5th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tome</td>
<td>61 F.3d 1446 (10th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tomlinson</td>
<td>764 F.3d 535 (6th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Toombs</td>
<td>574 F.3d 1262 (10th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Toothman</td>
<td>137 F.3d 1393 (9th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tootick</td>
<td>952 F.2d 1078 (9th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Toribio-Lugo</td>
<td>376 F.3d 33 (1st Cir. 2004)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Torkington</td>
<td>874 F.2d 1441 (11th Cir. 1989)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Torres</td>
<td>128 F.3d 38 (2d Cir. 1997)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Torres</td>
<td>569 F.3d 1277 (10th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Torres</td>
<td>604 F.3d 58 (2d Cir. 2010)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Torres</td>
<td>901 F.2d 205 (2d Cir. 1990)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Torres-Palma</td>
<td>290 F.3d 1244 (10th Cir. 2002)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Torres-Rodriguez</td>
<td>930 F.2d 1375 (9th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tory</td>
<td>52 F.3d 207 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Totaro</td>
<td>345 F.3d 989 (8th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Tovar-Rico</td>
<td>61 F.3d 1529 (11th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Toviave</td>
<td>761 F.3d 623 (6th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1907

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Udechukwu, 11 F.3d 1101 (1st Cir. 1993) ........................................... 235, 291, 313
United States v. Ullah, 976 F.2d 509 (9th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1086
United States v. Umagat, 998 F.2d 770 (9th Cir. 1993) .................................................. 433
United States v. Under Seal, 401 F.3d 247 (4th Cir. 2005) ............................................ 164
United States v. Underhill, 813 F.2d 105 (6th Cir. 1987) ................................................. 1756
United States v. Underwood, 122 F.3d 389 (7th Cir. 1997) .............................................. 1196
United States v. Underwood, 725 F.3d 1076 (9th Cir. 2013) ......................................... 1504, 1596
United States v. Undetermined Amount of U.S. Currency, 376 F.3d 260 (4th Cir. 2004) ... 907
United States v. Unimex, Inc., 991 F.2d 546 (9th Cir. 1993) ........................................... 186, 889
United States v. United States District Court For The Central District of California, 858 F.2d 534 (9th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 1240
United States v. Urbanik, 801 F.2d 692 (4th Cir. 1986) ................................................... 748
United States v. Urciuoli, 513 F.3d 290 (1st Cir. 2008) .................................................... 40, 1227
United States v. Urias-Marrufo, 744 F.3d 361 (5th Cir. 2014) ........................................ 970
United States v. Uribe, 709 F.3d 646 (7th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 1525
United States v. Uribe-Velasco, 930 F.2d 1029 (2d Cir. 1991) ......................................... 1649
United States v. Urrieta, 520 F.3d 569 (6th Cir. 2008) ....................................................... 1445, 1528, 1656
United States v. Utter, 97 F.3d 509 (11th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 703
United States v. Valadez-Gallegos, 162 F.3d 1256 (10th Cir. 1998) ................................. 582
United States v. Valadez-Valadez, 525 F.3d 987 (10th Cir. 2008) ................................... 1507, 1527
United States v. Valdez, 931 F.2d 1448 (11th Cir. 1991) ................................................. 1537
United States v. Valencia, 394 F.3d 352 (5th Cir. 2004) ................................................. 1152, 1239
United States v. Valencia, 826 F.2d 169 (2d Cir. 1987) ................................................ 744
United States v. Valentine, 539 F.3d 88 (2d Cir. 2008) .................................................... 1391
United States v. Valentine, 63 F.3d 459 (6th Cir. 1995) ................................................. 269
United States v. Valentine, 820 F.2d 565 (2d Cir. 1987) .................................................. 291
United States v. Valenzuela, 365 F.3d 892 (10th Cir. 2004) ............................................ 1530
United States v. Valenzuela-Espinoza, 697 F.3d 742 (9th Cir. 2012) ......................... 387
United States v. Valenzuela-Puentes, 479 F.3d 1220 (10th Cir. 2007) ............................ 326
United States v. Valerio, 48 F.3d 58 (1st Cir. 1995) ......................................................... 426
United States v. Valerio, 718 F.3d 1321 (11th Cir. 2013) ................................................. 1641
United States v. Valez, 354 F.3d 190 (2d Cir. 2004) ......................................................... 36
United States v. Valle, 807 F.3d 508 (2d Cir. 2015) ......................................................... 333, 442, 1204, 1721
United States v. Vallejo, 237 F.3d 1008, 246 F.3d 1150 (9th Cir. 2001) ......................... 802
United States v. Vallone, 698 F.3d 416 (7th Cir. 2012) ................................................... 1726
United States v. Valverde, 628 F.3d 1159 (9th Cir. 2010) ............................................... 1696
United States v. Van Alstyne, 584 F.3d 803 (9th Cir. 2009) ........................................... 1250
United States v. Van Buren, 804 F.2d 888 (6th Cir. 1986) ............................................. 961
United States v. Van Damme, 48 F.3d 461 (9th Cir. 1995) ............................................. 1579
United States v. Van Eyl, 468 F.3d 428 (7th Cir. 2006) ................................................. 310, 735
United States v. Van Horn, 976 F.2d 1180 (8th Cir. 1992) ........................................... 1307
United States v. Van Thournout, 100 F.3d 590 (8th Cir. 1996) .................................... 1307
United States v. Vandam, 493 F.3d 1194 (10th Cir. 2007) ............................................... 1294

1909

DONALD F. SAMUEL - GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA - 404-262-2225 - dfs@gsllaw.com
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case Title</th>
<th>Citation</th>
<th>Court</th>
<th>Year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vanderwerff</td>
<td>788 F.3d 1266</td>
<td>(10th Cir. 2015)</td>
<td>47, 964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Varca</td>
<td>896 F.2d 900</td>
<td>(5th Cir. 1990)</td>
<td>76</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vargas</td>
<td>471 F.3d 255</td>
<td>(1st Cir. 2006)</td>
<td>842</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vargas</td>
<td>920 F.2d 167</td>
<td>(2d Cir. 1990)</td>
<td>527, 642</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vargas</td>
<td>933 F.2d 701</td>
<td>(9th Cir. 1991)</td>
<td>492</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vargas-Cordon</td>
<td>733 F.3d 366</td>
<td>(2d Cir. 2013)</td>
<td>1003</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vargas-Ocampo</td>
<td>747 F.3d 299</td>
<td>(5th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td>583</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vasey</td>
<td>834 F.2d 782</td>
<td>(9th Cir. 1987)</td>
<td>1411, 1544</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vasquez de Reyes</td>
<td>149 F.3d 192</td>
<td>(3rd Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>1498, 1551</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vasquez-Argarin</td>
<td>821 F.3d 467</td>
<td>(3rd Cir. 2016)</td>
<td>1382, 1501</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vasquez-Chan</td>
<td>978 F.2d 546</td>
<td>(9th Cir. 1992)</td>
<td>590</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vasquez-Ruiz</td>
<td>502 F.3d 700</td>
<td>(7th Cir. 2007)</td>
<td>1077</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vaughn</td>
<td>370 F.3d 1049</td>
<td>(10th Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vaulin</td>
<td>132 F.3d 898</td>
<td>(3rd Cir. 1997)</td>
<td>1774</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vavages</td>
<td>151 F.3d 1185</td>
<td>(9th Cir. 1998)</td>
<td>685, 693, 827, 925, 1771, 1772</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vaval</td>
<td>404 F.3d 144</td>
<td>(2d Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>1297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vayner</td>
<td>769 F.3d 125</td>
<td>(2d Cir. 2014)</td>
<td>779</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vazquez</td>
<td>558 F.3d 1224</td>
<td>(11th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>49</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vazquez</td>
<td>724 F.3d 15</td>
<td>(1st Cir. 2013)</td>
<td>1435, 1504</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vazquez-Hernandez</td>
<td>849 F.3d 1219</td>
<td>(9th Cir. 2017)</td>
<td>1002, 1124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vazquez-Rivera</td>
<td>665 F.3d 351</td>
<td>(1st Cir. 2011)</td>
<td>733</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vega Molina</td>
<td>407 F.3d 511</td>
<td>(1st Cir. 2005)</td>
<td>273, 487</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vega</td>
<td>221 F.3d 789</td>
<td>(5th Cir. 2000)</td>
<td>1447, 1456, 1475, 1625</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vejar-Urias</td>
<td>165 F.3d 337</td>
<td>(5th Cir. 1999)</td>
<td>273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Velarde</td>
<td>485 F.3d 553</td>
<td>(10th Cir. 2007)</td>
<td>226, 1264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Velasquez</td>
<td>64 F.3d 844</td>
<td>(3rd Cir. 1995)</td>
<td>793</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Velasquez</td>
<td>890 F.2d 717</td>
<td>(5th Cir. 1989)</td>
<td>1711</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Velazquez</td>
<td>749 F.3d 161</td>
<td>(3rd Cir. 2014)</td>
<td>1699</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Velazquez</td>
<td>855 F.3d 1021</td>
<td>(9th Cir. 2017)</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Velez</td>
<td>354 F.3d 190</td>
<td>(2d Cir. 2004)</td>
<td>712</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Velez</td>
<td>586 F.3d 875</td>
<td>(11th Cir. 2009)</td>
<td>1249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Veltmann</td>
<td>6 F.3d 1483</td>
<td>(11th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td>275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Ventura-Cruel</td>
<td>356 F.3d 55</td>
<td>(1st Cir. 2003)</td>
<td>712, 974</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Venzor-Castillo</td>
<td>991 F.2d 634</td>
<td>(10th Cir. 1993)</td>
<td>1415</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vera</td>
<td>770 F.3d 1232</td>
<td>(9th Cir. 2014)</td>
<td>795</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Verderame</td>
<td>51 F.3d 249</td>
<td>(11th Cir. 1995)</td>
<td>473</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vergara</td>
<td>884 F.3d 1309</td>
<td>(11th Cir. 2018)</td>
<td>1413, 1417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Verrusio</td>
<td>803 F.2d 885</td>
<td>(7th Cir. 1986)</td>
<td>1306</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Versaint</td>
<td>849 F.2d 827</td>
<td>(3rd Cir. 1988)</td>
<td>757</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vesey</td>
<td>338 F.3d 913</td>
<td>(8th Cir. 2003)</td>
<td>792</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vicaria</td>
<td>12 F.3d 195</td>
<td>(11th Cir. 1994)</td>
<td>1116, 1267</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vichitvongsa</td>
<td>819 F.3d 260</td>
<td>(6th Cir. 2016)</td>
<td>868, 1024</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Victoria</td>
<td>837 F.2d 50</td>
<td>(2d Cir. 1988)</td>
<td>1072</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United States v. Vidal-Hungaria</td>
<td>794 F.2d 1503</td>
<td>(11th Cir. 1986)</td>
<td>592</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1910
United States v. Viera, 819 F.2d 498 (5th Cir. 1987) ......................................................... 1772
United States v. Villa-Gonzalez, 623 F.3d 526 (8th Cir. 2010) ........................................... 340, 348, 1497, 1665
United States v. Villalba-Alvarado, 345 F.3d 1007 (8th Cir. 2003) ...................................... 1550
United States v. Villalobos, 333 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2003) ..................................................... 958
United States v. Villanueva-Sotelo, 515 F.3d 1234 (D.C. Cir. 2008) ........................................ 1001
United States v. Villar, 586 F.3d 76 (1st Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 717, 1076
United States v. Villarreal, 963 F.2d 770 (5th Cir. 1992) .......................................................... 1486
United States v. Villasenor, 894 F.2d 1422 (5th Cir. 1990) ..................................................... 430
United States v. Villa-Vazquez, 536 F.3d 1189 (10th Cir. 2008) ........................................... 1293
United States v. Villegas, 911 F.2d 623 (11th Cir. 1990) ......................................................... 436
United States v. Viloski, -- F.3d -- (2d Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 896
United States v. Viola, 35 F.3d 37 (2d Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 1358
United States v. Virden, 488 F.3d 1317 (11th Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 1395, 1549, 1598, 1617, 1657
United States v. Virgil, 444 F.3d 447 (5th Cir. 2006) .............................................................. 31, 181, 195, 523
United States v. Vitale, 459 F.3d 190 (2d Cir. 2006) .............................................................. 1077
United States v. Vogt, 901 F.2d 100 (8th Cir. 1990) .............................................................. 1307
United States v. Voigt, 89 F.3d 1050 (3rd Cir. 1996) .............................................................. 74, 927, 1255
United States v. Von Behren, 822 F.3d 1139 (10th Cir. 2016) .............................................. 825
United States v. Vondette, 352 F.3d 772 (2d Cir. 2003) ......................................................... 893, 900
United States v. Vontstean, 872 F.2d 626 (5th Cir. 1989) ....................................................... 1220, 1221
United States v. Voustianiouk, 685 F.3d 206 (2d Cir. 2012) .................................................. 1505, 1573
United States v. Vowiell, 869 F.2d 1264 (9th Cir. 1989) .......................................................... 749
United States v. Vozzella, 124 F.3d 389 (2d Cir. 1997) ............................................................ 254
United States v. W.R. Grace, 526 F.3d 499 (9th Cir. 2008) ....................................................... 536
United States v. Wagner, 834 F.2d 1474 (9th Cir. 1987) .......................................................... 364
United States v. Waldner, 425 F.3d 514 (8th Cir. 2005) .......................................................... 1613
United States v. Wall, 860 F.2d 588 (3rd Cir. 1988) ............................................................... 776
United States v. Walker, 148 F.3d 518 (5th Cir. 1998) ............................................................. 274
United States v. Walker, 155 F.3d 180 (3rd Cir. 1998) ............................................................. 302
United States v. Walker, 474 F.3d 1249 (10th Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 1612
United States v. Walker, 555 F.3d 716 (8th Cir. 2009) .............................................................. 846
United States v. Walker, 673 F.3d 649 (7th Cir. 2012) .............................................................. 401, 410
United States v. Walker, 839 F.2d 1483 (11th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 188
United States v. Walker, 915 F.2d 480 (9th Cir. 1990) .............................................................. 187
United States v. Walker, 941 F.2d 1086, on rehearing from 933 F.2d 812 (10th Cir. 1991) 1450, 1537
United States v. Walker, 972 F.2d 679 (6th Cir. 1992) .............................................................. 587
United States v. Wallace, 447 F.3d 184 (2d Cir. 2006) ............................................................. 872, 1025
United States v. Wallach, 935 F.2d 445 (2d Cir. 1991) ............................................................. 927
United States v. Wallen, 874 F.3d 620 (9th Cir. 2017) ............................................................. 1138
United States v. Waller, 426 F.3d 838 (6th Cir. 2005) .............................................................. 1455, 1484, 1624
United States v. Waller, 654 F.3d 430 (3rd Cir. 2011) .............................................................. 1111, 1144, 1330
United States v. Walter, 870 F.3d 622 (7th Cir. 2017) .............................................................. 250
United States v. Walters, 351 F.3d 159 (5th Cir. 2003) ............................................................. 875, 1026

1911

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Walters, 359 F.3d 340 (4th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 857
United States v. Walters, 913 F.2d 388 (7th Cir. 1990) ............................................................ 17
United States v. Walters, 997 F.2d 1219 (7th Cir. 1993) ............................................................. 1214
United States v. Walters, 997 F.2d 67 (7th Cir. 1993) ............................................................... 1222
United States v. Walton, 10 F.3d 1024 (3rd Cir. 1993) ............................................................. 392, 394
United States v. Walton, 763 F.3d 655 (7th Cir. 2014) .............................................................. 1622
United States v. Wang, 964 F.2d 811 (8th Cir. 1992) .............................................................. 528
United States v. Wanless, 882 F.2d 1459 (9th Cir. 1989) ........................................................... 1562
United States v. Ward, 144 F.3d 1024 (7th Cir. 1998) .............................................................. 1371, 1587
United States v. Ward, 598 F.3d 1054 (8th Cir. 2010) ............................................................... 516
United States v. Ward, 747 F.3d 1184 (9th Cir. 2014) ............................................................... 1031
United States v. Warner, 498 F.3d 666 (7th Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 1356
United States v. Warner, 820 F.3d 678 (4th Cir. 2016) ............................................................. 1290
United States v. Warner, 843 F.2d 401 (9th Cir. 1988) .............................................................. 1480
United States v. Warren, 984 F.2d 325 (9th Cir. 1993) ............................................................. 1168
United States v. Warshak, 631 F.3d 266 (6th Cir. 2010) ........................................................... 308, 1248, 1428, 1482
United States v. Washington, 151 F.3d 1354 (11th Cir. 1998) ................................................ 1372, 1377, 1441
United States v. Washington, 387 F.3d 1060 (9th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 1446, 1658
United States v. Washington, 455 F.3d 824 (8th Cir. 2006) ...................................................... 1408, 1508, 1529
United States v. Washington, 490 F.3d 765 (9th Cir. 2007) .................................................... 1667
United States v. Washington, 573 F.3d 279 (6th Cir. 2009) ...................................................... 1474, 1483, 1623
United States v. Washington, 619 F.3d 1252 (10th Cir. 2010) ................................................. 141
United States v. Washington, 783 F.3d 1198 (10th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 578
United States v. Washington, 797 F.2d 1461 (9th Cir. 1986) .................................................... 1514, 1580
United States v. Washington, 819 F.2d 221 (9th Cir. 1987) ..................................................... 1201
United States v. Washington, 869 F.3d 193 (3rd Cir. 2017) ..................................................... 932
United States v. Washman, 66 F.3d 210 (9th Cir. 1995) ............................................................ 976
United States v. Waters, 627 F.3d 345 (9th Cir. 2010) ............................................................. 636, 661, 670, 1347
United States v. Watkins, 278 F.3d 961 (9th Cir. 2002) ............................................................. 598
United States v. Watkins, 339 F.3d 167 (3rd Cir. 2003) ............................................................ 1708
United States v. Watkins, 983 F.2d 1413 (7th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 520
United States v. Watler, 461 F.3d 1005 (8th Cir. 2006) ............................................................ 486
United States v. Watson, 386 F.3d 304 (1st Cir. 2004) .............................................................. 29
United States v. Watson, 703 F.3d 684 (4th Cir. 2013) ............................................................ 1586
United States v. Watson, 787 F.3d 101 (2d Cir. 2015) ............................................................ 1632
United States v. Watson, 793 F.3d 416 (4th Cir. 2015) ............................................................. 323
United States v. Watson, 900 F.3d 892 (7th Cir. 2018) ............................................................. 1639
United States v. Watts, 876 F.3d 152 (2d Cir. 2015) ............................................................... 885, 890
United States v. Wayerski, 624 F.3d 1342 (11th Cir. 2010) ...................................................... 563
United States v. Wayne, 903 F.2d 1188 (8th Cir. 1990) ............................................................. 247
United States v. Ways, 832 F.3d 887 (8th Cir. 2016) ............................................................... 850
United States v. Weathers, 493 F.3d 229 (D.C. Cir. 2007) ....................................................... 129
United States v. Weatherspoon, 410 F.3d 1142 (9th Cir. 2005) ............................................... 301, 312
United States v. Weaver, 808 F.3d 26 (D.C. Cir. 2015) .......................................................... 1565

1912

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Weaver, 99 F.3d 1372 (6th Cir. 1996) .......................................................... 1512, 1557, 1600
United States v. Webb, 816 F.2d 1263 (8th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1108
United States v. Weber, 915 F.2d 1282 (9th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1514, 1579, 1602
United States v. Weber, 923 F.2d 1338 (9th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1431, 1510, 1571, 1599
United States v. Wecht, 484 F.3d 194 (3rd Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 812
United States v. Wecht, 537 F.3d 222 (3rd Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1087
United States v. Wecht, 541 F.3d 493 (3rd Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1093
United States v. Weddell, 800 F.2d 1404 (5th Cir. 1986) .............................................................. 928
United States v. Weeks, 653 F.3d 1188 (10th Cir. 2011) .............................................................. 113, 443, 1144
United States v. Weems, 49 F.3d 528 (9th Cir. 1995) ................................................................. 545
United States v. Wei Lin, 738 F.3d 1082 (9th Cir. 2013) ............................................................... 1003
United States v. Weiland, 420 F.3d 1062 (9th Cir. 2005) ............................................................ 673, 857
United States v. Weimert, --- F.3d --- (7th Cir. 4/8/16) ............................................................... 1231
United States v. Weimert, 819 F.3d 351 (7th Cir. 4/8/16) ............................................................... 1208
United States v. Weingarten, 632 F.3d 60 (2d Cir. 2011) ............................................................ 810, 1697
United States v. Weintraub, 871 F.2d 1257 (5th Cir. 1989) ............................................................ 255
United States v. Weissberger, 951 F.2d 392 (D.C.Cir. 1991) ......................................................... 332
United States v. Weissman, 899 F.2d 1111 (11th Cir. 1990) ........................................................ 1034, 1038, 1359
United States v. Welch, 4 F.3d 761 (9th Cir. 1993) ................................................................. 1456, 1458
United States v. Welch, 810 F.2d 485 (5th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 1057
United States v. Welch, 811 F.3d 275 (8th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 1465
United States v. Wells, 519 U.S. 482 (1997) ............................................................................... 211, 1139, 1231
United States v. Werra, 638 F.3d 326 (1st Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 1383, 1482, 1496
United States v. Wesley, 417 F.3d 612 (6th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 673
United States v. West (Fawer), 21 F.3d 607 (5th Cir. 1994) .......................................................... 469
United States v. West, 142 F.3d 1408 (11th Cir. 1998) ................................................................. 747
United States v. West, 15 F.3d 119 (8th Cir. 1994) ................................................................. 432
United States v. West, 520 F.3d 604 (6th Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 1489, 1507, 1570, 1598
United States v. West, 813 F.3d 619 (7th Cir. 2016) ................................................................. 390, 630, 788
United States v. West, 828 F.2d 1468 (10th Cir. 1987) ................................................................. 474
United States v. Westbrook, 125 F.3d 996 (7th Cir. 1997) ........................................................... 358
United States v. Westcott, 83 F.3d 1354 (11th Cir. 1996) ............................................................ 646, 1044
United States v. Westerdaal, 945 F.2d 1083 (9th Cir. 1991) .......................................................... 836, 929
United States v. Westmoreland, 122 F.3d 431 (7th Cir. 1997) ...................................................... 876
United States v. Wexler, 522 F.3d 194 (2d Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 440
United States v. Wexler, 838 F.2d 88 (3rd Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 428, 456
United States v. Weyhrauch, 544 F.3d 969 (9th Cir. 2008) .......................................................... 29
United States v. Whalen, 844 F.2d 529 (8th Cir. 1988) ............................................................... 749
United States v. Whalen, 976 F.2d 1346 (10th Cir. 1992) ........................................................... 981
United States v. Wheeler, 776 F.3d 736 (10th Cir. 2015) ............................................................. 1737
United States v. Whitaker, --- F.3d --- (7th Cir. 2016) ............................................................... 1463, 1675
United States v. Whitaker, 820 F.3d 849 (7th Cir. 2016) ............................................................. 1460
United States v. White Eagle, 721 F.3d 1108 (9th Cir 2013) ......................................................... 398
United States v. White Eagle, 721 F.3d 1108 (9th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 817
United States v. Williams, 576 F.3d 385 (7th Cir. 2009) .................................................. 472
United States v. Williams, 585 F.3d 703 (2d Cir. 2009) .................................................. 699
United States v. Williams, 610 F.3d 271 (5th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 511
United States v. Williams, 615 F.3d 657 (6th Cir. 2010) ............................................... 1401, 1644, 1666
United States v. Williams, 632 F.3d 129 (4th Cir. 2011) ............................................... 413
United States v. Williams, 641 F.3d 758 (6th Cir. 2011) ............................................... 516
United States v. Williams, 731 F.3d 678 (7th Cir. 2013) ............................................... 1633
United States v. Williams, 808 F.3d 238 (4th Cir. 2015) ............................................. 1522
United States v. Williams, 809 F.2d 75 (1st Cir. 1986) ................................................ 447
United States v. Williams, 817 F.2d 1136 (5th Cir. 1987) .......................................... 1081
United States v. Williams, 819 F.3d 1026 (7th Cir. 2016) ......................................... 1105
United States v. Williams, 821 F.3d 656 (5th Cir. 2016) ............................................. 1290
United States v. Williams, 827 F.3d 1134 (D.C. Cir. 2016) ....................................... 731
United States v. Williams, 836 F.3d 1 (D.C. Cir. 2016) .............................................. 305, 629, 1142, 1261
United States v. Williams, 842 F.3d 1143 (9th Cir. 2016) ......................................... 356
United States v. Williams, 892 F.2d 296 (3rd Cir. 1989) ............................................ 490
United States v. Williams, 954 F.2d 668 (11th Cir. 1992) ........................................... 493
United States v. Williamson, 533 F.3d 269 (5th Cir. 2008) ....................................... 1185
United States v. Willner, 795 F.3d 1297 (11th Cir. 2015) ....................................... 443, 985, 1118
United States v. Willoughby, 27 F.3d 263 (7th Cir. 1994) ......................................... 44, 1036
United States v. Wilmore, 381 F.3d 868 (9th Cir. 2004) ............................................. 417, 488, 1769
United States v. Wilson, 116 F.3d 1066 (5th Cir. 1997) ............................................. 1692
United States v. Wilson, 133 F.3d 251 (4th Cir. 1997) .............................................. 622, 1052, 1152, 1239
United States v. Wilson, 135 F.3d 291 (4th Cir. 1998) ............................................ 312
United States v. Wilson, 149 F.3d 1298 (11th Cir. 1998) ........................................... 926, 929
United States v. Wilson, 159 F.3d 280 (7th Cir. 1998) .............................................. 1244
United States v. Wilson, 16 F.3d 1027 (9th Cir. 1994) .............................................. 1742
United States v. Wilson, 36 F.3d 1298 (5th Cir. 1994) ................................................ 1553
United States v. Wilson, 390 F.3d 1003 (7th Cir. 2004) .......................................... 925
United States v. Wilson, 506 F.3d 488 (6th Cir. 2007) .............................................. 1635
United States v. Wilson, 619 F.3d 787 (8th Cir. 2010) ................................................ 579
United States v. Wilson, 624 F.3d 640 (4th Cir. 2010) .............................................. 698
United States v. Wilson, 884 F.2d 1121 (8th Cir. 1989) .............................................. 1192
United States v. Wilson, 953 F.2d 116 (4th Cir. 1991) .............................................. 1373, 1649, 1669
United States v. Wilson, 983 F.2d 221 (11th Cir. 1993) ................................................ 281
United States v. Wimberly, 930 F.2d 16 (8th Cir. 1991) .............................................. 395
United States v. Winchester, 916 F.2d 601 (11th Cir. 1990) ........................................ 1030
United States v. Windom, 19 F.3d 1190 (7th Cir. 1994) ............................................. 588
United States v. Winfield, 997 F.2d 1076 (4th Cir. 1993) ............................................. 44
United States v. Wingo, 789 F.3d 1226 (11th Cir. 2015) ............................................ 323
United States v. Winningham, 140 F.3d 1328 (10th Cir. 1998) .................................. 1439, 1533
United States v. Winor, 846 F.2d 1569 (9th Cir. 1988) .............................................. 1679
United States v. Wisecarver, 598 F.3d 982 (8th Cir. 2010) ........................................ 1112, 1127
United States v. Wiseman, 25 F.3d 862 (9th Cir. 1994) ............................................. 433

1915

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
United States v. Withers, 618 F.3d 1008 (9th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 141
United States v. Withers, 638 F.3d 1055 (9th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 1347
United States v. Wolf, 839 F.2d 1387 (10th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 750
United States v. Wolf, 879 F.2d 1320 (6th Cir. 1989) .................................................. 374
United States v. Wolf, 127 F.3d 84 (D.C. Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1301
United States v. Wolfname, 835 F.3d 1214 (8th Cir. 2016) .................................................. 58, 1125
United States v. Wolfram, 610 F.3d 37 (2d Cir. 2010) .................................................. 49
United States v. Wood, 106 F.3d 942 (10th Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1536
United States v. Wood, 364 F.3d 704 (6th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 1211, 1745
United States v. Wood, 57 F.3d 733 (9th Cir. 1995) .................................................. 236
United States v. Wood, 834 F.2d 1382 (8th Cir. 1987) .................................................. 749
United States v. Wood, 981 F.2d 536 (D.C. Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1671
United States v. Woodard, 699 F.3d 1188 (10th Cir. 2012) .................................................. 720
United States v. Woods, 710 F.3d 195 (4th Cir. 2013) .................................................. 307
United States v. Woods, 812 F.2d 1483 (4th Cir. 1987) .................................................. 1166
United States v. Woolfolk, 399 F.3d 590 (4th Cir. 2005) .................................................. 1701, 1708
United States v. Word, 129 F.3d 1209 (11th Cir. 1997) .................................................. 293, 646
United States v. Wozniak, 126 F.3d 105 (2d Cir. 1997) .................................................. 1035
United States v. Wrensford, 866 F.3d 76 (3rd Cir. 2017) .................................................. 1395, 1493
United States v. Wright, 361 F.3d 288 (5th Cir. 2004) .................................................. 900, 1606
United States v. Wright, 485 F.3d 45 (1st Cir. 2007) .................................................. 1646
United States v. Wright, 625 F.3d 583 (9th Cir. 2010) .................................................. 288, 308, 706, 1323
United States v. Wright, 651 F.3d 764 (7th Cir. 2011) .................................................. 1248
United States v. Wright, 665 F.3d 560 (3rd Cir. 2012) .................................................. 38, 1225
United States v. Wright, 854 F.2d 1263 (11th Cir. 1988) .................................................. 471
United States v. Wunsch (Swan), 84 F.3d 1110 (9th Cir. 1996) .............................................. 470
United States v. Wurie, 728 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2013) .................................................. 1418
United States v. Wysinger, 683 F.3d 784 (7th Cir. 2012) .................................................. 344, 368
United States v. Xavier, 2 F.3d 1281 (3d Cir. 1993) .................................................. 856
United States v. Yah, 500 F.3d 698 (8th Cir. 2007) .................................................. 1294
United States v. Yakobowicz, 427 F.3d 144 (2d Cir. 2005) .................................................. 311
United States v. Yamashiro, 788 F.3d 1231 (9th Cir. 2015) .................................................. 174
United States v. Yang Chia Tien, 720 F.3d 464 (2d Cir. 2013) .................................................. 978
United States v. Yarborough, 400 F.3d 17 (D.C. Cir. 2005) .................................................. 1107 United States v. Yarborough, 527 F.3d 1092 (10th Cir. 2008) .................................................. 280, 680
United States v. Yates, 438 F.3d 1307 (11th Cir. 2006) (en banc) .............................................. 404
United States v. Yefsky, 994 F.2d 885 (1st Cir. 1993) .................................................. 1015
United States v. Yeje-Cabrera, 430 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2005) .................................................. 1754
United States v. Yengel, 711 F.3d 392 (4th Cir. 2013) .................................................. 1472
United States v. Yepiz, 844 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2016) .................................................. 174
United States v. Yepiz, 848 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2016) .................................................. 238
United States v. Yesil, 991 F.2d 1527 (11th Cir. 1992) .................................................. 1311
United States v. Yi, 460 F.3d 623 (5th Cir. 2006) .................................................. 478

1916

DONALD F. SAMUEL · GARLAND, SAMUEL & LOEB, P.C., ATLANTA, GEORGIA · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gslaw.com
United States v. Yida, 498 F.3d 945 (9th Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 764, 765
United States v. Yizar, 956 F.2d 230 (11th Cir. 1992) ......................................................... 136, 249, 1693
United States v. Yoakam, 116 F.3d 1346 (10th Cir. 1997) ................................................... 57
United States v. York, 852 F.2d 221 (7th Cir. 1988) .......................................................... 778
United States v. Young, 17 F.3d 1201 (9th Cir. 1994) ......................................................... 928, 1267
United States v. Young, 528 F.3d 1294 (11th Cir. 2008) ..................................................... 1706
United States v. Young, 573 F.3d 711 (9th Cir. 2009) ......................................................... 1483
United States v. Young, 835 F.3d 13 (1st Cir. 2016) ......................................................... 1382
United States v. Young, 86 F.3d 944 (9th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 644, 729, 836
United States v. Yousif, 308 F.3d 820 (8th Cir. 2002) ....................................................... 1532, 1609
United States v. Yusuf, 536 F.3d 178 (3rd Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 1251
United States v. Zabawa, 719 F.3d 555 (6th Cir. 2013) ..................................................... 58
United States v. Zabriskie, 415 F.3d 1139 (10th Cir. 2005) ................................................. 1106
United States v. Zalapa, 509 F.3d 1060 (9th Cir. 2007) ....................................................... 863, 1025
United States v. Zaragoza-Moreira, 780 F.3d 971 (9th Cir. 2015) ....................................... 530
United States v. Zavala, 541 F.3d 562 (5th Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 1436, 1484, 1634, 1656
United States v. Zavala-Mendez, 411 F.3d 1116 (9th Cir. 2005) ....................................... 1007
United States v. Zehrbach, 47 F.3d 1252 (3rd Cir. 1995) ................................................... 303
United States v. Zeigler, 994 F.2d 845 (D.C.Cir. 1993) ...................................................... 45
United States v. Zermeno, 66 F.3d 1058 (9th Cir. 1995) ................................................... 1566
United States v. Zhen Zhou Wu, 711 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2013) .............................................. 1126
United States v. Zhou, 428 F.3d 361 (2d Cir. 2005) ......................................................... 873, 990, 1130
United States v. Zickert, 955 F.2d 665 (11th Cir. 1992) ..................................................... 981
United States v. Zimmerman, 277 F.3d 426 (3rd Cir. 2002) .............................................. 1432, 1571, 1599, 1620
United States v. Zimmerman, 943 F.2d 1204 (10th Cir. 1991) ......................................... 804
United States v. Zimny, 857 F.3d 97 (1st Cir. 2017) ......................................................... 205, 1073
United States v. Zingaro, 858 F.2d 94 (2d Cir. 1988) ......................................................... 1035
United States v. Zolicoffer, 869 F.2d 771 (3rd Cir. 1989) .................................................. 1739
United States v. Zuniga, 6 F.3d 569 (9th Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 1115
United States v. Haslage, 853 F.3d 331 (7th Cir. 2017) .................................................... 1695
United States v. Rodriguez-Escalera, --- F.3d --- (7th Cir. 2018) ..................................... 1521
United States v. Shaw, 707 F.3d 666 (6th Cir. 2013) ......................................................... 1435
Utah v. Strieff, --- S. Ct. --- (2016) ..................................................................................... 1539
Valdes v. United States, 475 F.3d 1319 (D.C.Cir. 2007) .................................................... 267
Valentine v. Konteh, 395 F.3d 626 (6th Cir. 2005) ............................................................. 1014, 1026
Van Lynn v. Farmon, 347 F.3d 735 (9th Cir. 2003) ........................................................... 524
Van Tran v. Colson, 764 F.3d 594 (6th Cir. 2014) ............................................................. 505
Van v. Jones, 475 F.3d 292 (6th Cir. 2007) ...................................................................... 179
Vasquez v. Jones, 496 F.3d 564 (6th Cir. 2007) ................................................................. 403, 485, 775
Vasquez v. Wilson, 550 F.3d 270 (3rd Cir. 2008) ......................................................... 272
Vega v. Ryan, 757 F.3d 960 (9th Cir. 2014) .................................................................... 124
Venson v. Georgia, 74 F.3d 1140 (11th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 560

1917
Ventry v. United States, 539 F.3d 102 (2d Cir. 2008) ................................................................. 66
Vickers v. Ricketts, 798 F.2d 369 (9th Cir. 1986) .................................................................. 1163
Victor v. Nebraska, 511 U.S. 1 (1994) .................................................................................. 1165
Vidal v. Williams, 31 F.3d 67 (2d Cir. 1994) ...................................................................... 812
Vingelli v. United States, 992 F.2d 449 (2d Cir. 1993) .......................................................... 167
Virgil v. Dretke, 446 F.3d 598 (5th Cir. 2006) ...................................................................... 1197
Virgin Islands v. Forte, 865 F.2d 59 (3rd Cir. 1989) ............................................................... 1190
Virgin Islands v. John, 654 F.3d 412 (3rd Cir. 2011) .............................................................. 1426, 1505, 1597
Virgin Islands v. Mills, 956 F.2d 443 (3rd Cir. 1992) ............................................................... 643
Virgin Islands v. Pinney, 967 F.2d 912 (3rd Cir. 1992) ................................................................. 676
Von Hofe v. United States, 492 F.3d 175 (2d Cir. 2007) .......................................................... 897
Vujosevic v. Rafferty, 844 F.2d 1023 (3rd Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 382, 1161
Wade v. Calderon, 29 F.3d 1312 (9th Cir. 1994) .................................................................. 107
Walck v. Edmondson, 472 F.3d 1227 (10th Cir. 2007) ............................................................. 554
Waldemer v. United States, 106 F.3d 729 (7th Cir. 1996) ......................................................... 1234
Walker v. Girdich, 410 F.3d 120 (2d Cir. 2005) .................................................................... 1187
Walton v. B riley, 361 F.3d 431 (7th Cir. 2004) .................................................................. 1349
Walton v. Caspari, 916 F.2d 1352 (8th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 1191
Wansing v. Harrett, 341 F.3d 1207 (10th Cir. 2003) ................................................................. 1165
Ward v. Dretke, 420 F.3d 479 (5th Cir. 2005) ....................................................................... 145, 311
Ward v. Hall, 592 F.3d 1144 (11th Cir. 2010) ..................................................................... 1076
Ward v. Lockhart, 841 F.2d 844 (8th Cir. 1988) ................................................................... 1735
Ward v. United States, 995 F.2d 1317 (6th Cir. 1993) ............................................................... 153
Wardius v. Oregon, 412 U.S. 470 (1973) ............................................................................. 1724
Warshak v. United States, 490 F.3d 455 (6th Cir. 2007) ......................................................... 1430
Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210 (9th Cir. 2012) ............................................................. 324
Washington v. Lampert, 422 F.3d 864 (9th Cir. 2005) ........................................................... 51
Washington v. Sec’y Pa. Dep’t of Corr., 801 F.3d 160 (3rd Cir. 2015) ................................. 270
Washington v. Secretary of Pa. Dept. of Corrections, 726 F.3d 471 (3rd Cir. 2013) .......... 271
Washington v. Smith, 219 F.3d 620 (7th Cir. 2000) ................................................................. 150
Washington v. Texas, 388 U.S. 14 (1967) .............................................................................. 628
Watson v. United States, 493 F.3d 960 (8th Cir. 2007) ........................................................... 87
Watts v. Inidana, 338 U.S. 49 (1949) ..................................................................................... 345, 393
Waucaush v. United States, 380 F.3d 251 (6th Cir. 2004) ....................................................... 973, 1051, 1356
Weaver v. Bowersox, 438 F.3d 832 (8th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 311, 506
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Case</th>
<th>Citation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Weaver v. Brenner</td>
<td>40 F.3d 527 (2d Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Webb v. Lewis</td>
<td>44 F.3d 1387 (9th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Webb v. Texas</td>
<td>409 U.S. 95 (1972)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weeden v. Johnson</td>
<td>854 F.3d 1063 (9th Cir. 2017)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Welch v. United States</td>
<td>136 S. Ct. 1257 (2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Weston v. Kernan</td>
<td>50 F.3d 633 (9th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wharton v. Chappell</td>
<td>765 F.3d 953 (9th Cir 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whatley v. Zatecky</td>
<td>833 F.3d 762 (7th Cir. 2016)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wheeler v. Simpson</td>
<td>779 F.3d 366 (6th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White Fabricating Company v. United States</td>
<td>903 F.2d 404 (6th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White v. Coplan</td>
<td>399 F.3d 18 (1st Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White v. Mitchell</td>
<td>431 F.3d 517 (6th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White v. Stanley</td>
<td>745 F.3d 237 (7th Cir. 2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White v. Thaler</td>
<td>610 F.3d 890 (5th Cir. 2010)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>White v. Woodall</td>
<td>134 S. Ct. 1697 (2014)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Whitehouse v. United States District Court for District of Rhode Island</td>
<td>53 F.3d 1349 (1st Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wiggerfall v. Jones</td>
<td>918 F.2d 1544 (11th Cir. 1990)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wilkinson v. Gingrich</td>
<td>806 F.3d 511 (9th Cir. 2015)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Willette v. Fischer</td>
<td>508 F.3d 117 (2d Cir. 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Allen</td>
<td>542 F.3d 1326 (11th Cir. 2008)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Anderson</td>
<td>460 F.3d 789 (6th Cir. 2006)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Armontrout</td>
<td>877 F.2d 1376 (8th Cir. 1989)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Bartlett</td>
<td>44 F.3d 95 (2d Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Cavazos</td>
<td>646 F.3d 626 (9th Cir. 2011)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Jones</td>
<td>571 F.3d 1086 (10th Cir. 2009)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Lee</td>
<td>33 F.3d 1010 (8th Cir. 1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Price</td>
<td>343 F.3d 223 (3rd Cir. 2003)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Roe</td>
<td>421 F.3d 883 (9th Cir. 2005)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Washington</td>
<td>59 F.3d 673 (7th Cir. 1995)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williams v. Woodford</td>
<td>384 F.3d 567 (9th Cir. 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williamson v. United States</td>
<td>114 S.Ct. 2431 (1994)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Williamson v. Ward</td>
<td>110 F.3d 1508 (10th Cir. 1997)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Donald F. Samuel · Garland, Samuel & Loeb, P.C., Atlanta, Georgia · 404-262-2225 · dfs@gsllaw.com
Williams v. Runnels, 432 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 2006) ................................................................. 1186
Wilson v. Beard, 426 F.3d 653 (3rd Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1186
Wilson v. Beard, 589 F.3d 651 (3rd Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 243
Wilson v. Czerniak, 355 F.3d 1151 (9th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 565
Wilson v. Gaetz, 608 F.3d 347 (7th Cir. 2010) ................................................................. 127, 1042
Wilson v. Mazzuca, 570 F.3d 490 (2d Cir. 2009) ................................................................. 142
Wilson v. Murray, 806 F.2d 1232 (4th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 373
Wilson v. O’Leary, 895 F.2d 378 (7th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 395
Winston v. Pearson, 683 F.3d 489 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 97
Winters v. Board of County Commissioners of Osage, 4 F.3d 848 (10th Cir. 1993) .... 1369, 1584
Winzer v. Hall, 494 F.3d 1192 (9th Cir. 2007) ................................................................ 403
Wisehart v. Davis, 408 F.3d 321 (7th Cir. 2005) ................................................................. 1077
Wolfe v. Clarke, 691 F.3d 410 (4th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 38, 241
Wood v. Ercole, 644 F.3d 83 (2d Cir. 2011) ................................................................. 369
Woodall v. Simpson, 685 F.3d 574 (6th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 1110
Woodfox v. Cain, 772 F.3d 358 (5th Cir. 2014) ................................................................. 942
Woods v. Clusen, 794 F.2d 293 (7th Cir. 1986) ................................................................. 395
Woods v. Johnson, 75 F.3d 1017 (5th Cir. 1996) ................................................................. 364
Wooley v. Rednour, 702 F.3d 411 (7th Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 124
Workman v. Superintendent Albion SCI, 915 F.3d 928 (3rd Cir. 2019) .......... 137
Yates v. United States, 135 S. Ct. 1074 (2015) ................................................................. 1269, 1721
Yates v. United States, 354 U.S. 298 (1957) ................................................................. 42, 447, 1132
Yates v. United States, 355 U.S. 66 (1957) ................................................................. 467
Yeager v. United States, 129 S. Ct. 2360 (2009) ................................................................. 542
Yordan v. Dugger, 909 F.2d 474 (11th Cir. 1990) ................................................................. 120
Young v. Conway, 698 F.3d 69 (2d Cir. 2012) ................................................................. 994
Young v. Dretke, 356 F.3d 616 (5th Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 132
Young v. Guste, 849 F.2d 970 (5th Cir. 1988) ................................................................. 587
Young v. Lockhart, 892 F.2d 1348 (8th Cir. 1989) ................................................................. 185
Young v. United States ex rel Vuitton Et Fils, 106 S.Ct. 3270 (1987) ...................................... 461
Yun Hseng Liao v. Junious, 817 F.3d 678 (9th Cir. 2016) ........................................... 123
Zapata v. Vasquez, 788 F.3d 1106 (9th Cir. 2015) ................................................................. 139, 306
Zappulla v. New York, 391 F.3d 462 (2d Cir. 2004) ................................................................. 345